As an illustration precisely, now, of it, let me say this, which I think is entirely true: The reservation where the Ponca Indians are to-day reaches within twenty-five miles of the south line of Kansas; and down to the south line of Kansas, within twenty-five miles of that reservation, to-day white men are crowding for settlement and set-tling, and you have to-day the Army of the United States interposed between the Ponca reservation and the south line of Kansas to keep between the Ponca reservation and the south line of Kansas to keep white men from going and settling on these lands that the Senator from Massachusetts compares in one sense to Siberia. The Army of the United States is to-day, a portion of it, interposed between the reservation now occupied by Poncas and white men from the North who desire to settle on that identical land, and they are only kept from going there by that Army, malaria and all to the contrary notwithstanding.

It is right that these things should be known and understood by the American people, and that our Government should not be held up day after day and week after week by speeches in the Senate and day after day and week after week by speeches in the Senate and publications in the papers as desirous to thrust these men into a place where they must die. For one, I cannot understand the desire that seems to prevail among many of our own people to place our Government always in the wrong, that seems to rejoice over any opportunity to show that our Government has been derelict in all its duties, been to show that our Government has been derelict in all its duties, been false to all its treaties. Cruel, harsh, unjust wrongs have been done the Indians, and those wrongs commenced with the landing on Plymouth Rock, and have lasted from that day to this day. They have been done in Massachusetts as well as in Dakota, as well as in the Indian Territory. They are inevitable.

The main purpose of my rising this morning, however, was to say what I shall now repeat again, that the territory occupied by the Ponca Indians to-day in the Indian Territory is so inviting, taking it as it stands, with all its advantages and disadvantages, that the Army of the United States has to stand guard over it, and keep the fellow-citizens of the Senator from Massachusetts and my fellow-citizens from Iowa from going there and taking possession of it. If it were the Iowa from going there and taking possession of it. If it were the hot Siberia the Senator from Massachusetts indicates it to be, I hardly apprehend that condition of affairs would obtain.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, so far as the Senator from Iowa critimr. DAWES. Mr. President, so far as the Senator from lowa criticised any member of the Senate for a constant desire to hold up his own Government as in the wrong and always seeking an opportunity to point out wherever it has done a wrong and that it is constantly doing a wrong, as I do not see or understand its application I do not feel called upon to make any answer.

I agree with him that that same spirit which has impelled the Senators from Nebraska to cause the Santees and Omahas to be removed from the State in accordance all and the header and that it is never the same spirit which has the same spirit which has the same spirit which has a second that it is never the same spirit which has been all that it is never the same spirit which has a second that it is never the same spirit which has the same spirit which has been same spirit which has the same spirit w from that State is prevalent all along the border, and that it is necessary to keep those who desire the Indian lands from entering in upon them, almost by a standing army. The fact that they belong to some body else does not seem to be in the way very much; the fact that they belong to a poor, weak, and feeble people, not able to defend themselves either against the Government or against the aggressive spirit of our people, does not seem to attract any attention.

That for some purposes and for many purposes the land where these Poncas are is a desirable land, I am free to admit; and there these Poneas are is a desirable land, I am free to admit; and there are people all over the United States anxious to take it, and who do not stop to inquire to whom it belongs. I am not criticising that spirit; I have nothing to do with that just at this moment. I was calling the attention of the Senate to the proposition made here in this body and passed sub silentio to instruct one of its committees to prepare for taking one man's land and appropriating it to another. Let me just read the title by which the Ponca Indians held that reservation. vation:

ARTICLE 1. The Ponca tribe of Indians hereby cede and relinquish to the United States all that portion of their present reservation as described in the first article of the treaty of March 12, 1858—

And then it goes on to describe what that is.

ART. 2. In consideration of the cession or release of that portion of the reserva-tion above described by the Ponca tribe of Indians to the Government of the United States, the Government of the United States, by way of rewarding them for their constant fidelity to the Government and citizens thereof, and with a view of returning to the said tribe of Ponca Indians their old burying-grounds and corn-fields, hereby cede and relinquish to the tribe of Ponca Indians the following-described fractional townships, to wit.

And then it goes on to describe what is now their reservation. None of the doctrine of a Christian nation having a right to dispossess a savage people of a territory they devoted to savage uses comes in here; none of the rights of a Christian over the savage in the soil, or of the rights of discovery, come in here. If the words "cede and relinquish," words of grant, accompanied in a subsequent article by a covenant of warranty and defense of possession, do not make a good title to release the situation.

a covenant of warranty and defense of possession, do not make a good title to real estate, then it is because the agreement was unfortunately made by an Indian tribe with the United States. That is all.

Now, sir, the whole of this debate and all my over-excitement to which the Senator from Iowa has alluded in reference to it is this: Here is a goodly country, a Naboth's vineyard, which is coveted. After that grant, six or eight years after, by a blunder the Department says, the whole thing was ceded to a wild tribe that the United States had trouble to take care of; and here was a peaceable tribe of eight hundred strong only, none of whom ever fell at the hand of a United States soldier until the United States went into the process of remov-ing them to the Indian Territory with their consent. In the history of our treatment with the Indians, no one of them ever raised his hand in violence toward the authority of the United States; and the United States never was called upon to bring a police force among them to keep the peace until it undertook to take them to the Indian Territory with their consent.

They were taken from this ninety thousand acres of beautiful land upon the banks of the Missouri and among the highlands around it, with one hundred and sixty homes, houses built by themselves out of their money, in which they were dwelling, and they were marched, as I have told you, literally, not figuratively, at the point of the bayonet, out of those homes; and their earthly goods, the stoves with which they warmed their houses and the tables at which they ate their daily food, were all piled up promiscuously in one heap and left there to be destroyed by either time or the rapacity of the white people around them; and there they are to-day. The saw-mill they had and the dwellings have been taken across the river by white people into Nebraska, and made the homes of the white settlers, and you can only Nebraska, and made the homes of the white settlers, and you can only tell how many of them there were there when those people were marched off at the point of the bayonet by counting the foundations

They have been taken down into that delightful paradise which the Kansas and Nebraska and other people desire to possess so much that an armed force has to keep them off, and there they have died down to the number of four hundred and odd. Their old chief came here the other day, having buried since July last his wife and four of his children. He was brought here; and while he was away another chief was shot down by the soldiers.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the Senator wishes to amend the resolution by including an inquiry into the condition of the Poncas and whether they should be removed back to their old reservation, I will vote

Mr. DAWES. Why, Mr. President, the Senate has already instructed a committee to inquire into the propriety of giving the Poncas back their own property. A bill is pending on that subject in addition to the resolution instructing that committee so to inquire. The Senate has referred that bill to another committee. That bill requires the Government to put them back. And now my friend from Nebraska comes in here and proposes, before that committee has reported upon that bill, to have another committee say whether the Santee Indians shall not go up there and take possession of these goodly lands he speaks of speaks of.

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is room enough for them.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, there is in my friend's house room enough for him and me, but I take it he would not like the Senate of the United States to inquire into the propriety of setting me down in his parlor because there is room enough in his house for both of us.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Senator does not do the subject justice.

Mr. DAWES. I do not do the subject justice. No man can do it

Mr. PADDOCK. How would the Senator like to have five hundred or six hundred Indians scattered over four or five townships of his own county in Massachusetts, which they should occupy to the exclusion of all other citizens, doing no labor, doing no service of citizenship in any respect whatever, and being in all essential respects of no account to anybody on the face of the earth; on the contrary, rather an incumbrance to the land they should occupy, as are these Indians where they are?

Mr. DAWES. I would think the policy of the Government that would do that, that would plant four or five thousand Indians anywhere in the United States with no purpose in life but to consume rations which the Government furnished them, with no schools to educate their children, with no opportunity to learn, would be the height of folly and absurdity, whether the experiment should be tried in Massachusetts or anywhere else.

Mr. PADDOCK. Would the Senator say that it was an unreasonable request, under such circumstances, if there was another similar tribe a few miles away occupying a similar tract, that both should be put together upon such tract where there was room for both?

Mr. DAWES. That would depend on whom that tract belonged to.

Mr. PADDOCK. It it should be done with the consent of all consents and interested.

cerned and interested?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, in the language and in the policy of this Government "consent" means an absolute, dumb, silent yielding on the part of the Indian to a superior force.

Mr. PADDOCK. Let me say to the Senator that when a tribe of Indians in open council consider a matter and consent to it they consider it as intelligently, and they consent as intelligently, as the Senator does, or the members of the council of his own city or his own township do when they determine what is best to be done for the community they represent.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider this vote, because the Senate has already instructed another committee to inquire into the propriety of returning the Poncas to their own reservation, and has also instructed it to consider whether it will report back a bill authorizing and requiring the Secretary of the Interior to do that. I think the whole should go together. I think it should be one act, and not a division or antagonism or conflict of views between differ-

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before this question introduced by the Senator from Nebraska passes from public view I want to say a word or two with reference to the Poncas.

Mr. CONKLING. Would it be agreeable to the Senator to allow the resolution in question to be reported before he proceeds?

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad to hear it.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SAUNDERS.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the committee that has the matter in

Mr. ALLISON. It is a special committee originally raised for the purpose of examining the Cheyenne trouble. I shall vote with the Senator from Massachusetts to reconsider this resolution. I listened to the resolution when it was offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I could see no particular objection to the inquiry, although my own mind is fully made up as to what I should say in reference to that resolution. The Senator from Massachusetts, however, in detailing the wrongs of the Poncas undertakes to throw the responsibility in the first place upon an act of Congress which he says provided for the removal of these Poncas to the Indian Territory and was put upon an appropriation bill, thus intimating, as I understand him, that there was some wrong purpose in the very inception of this Ponca business.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will allow me to say this: the appropriation was right enough in its letter and in its spirit if it had been carried out in its spirit, because it depended solely upon their consent; that was its phraseology; and if it had been carried out in its sent; that was its phraseology; and if it had been carried out in its spirit there would not have been a word of complaint. If they intelligently and knowingly had consented to give up their homes and go to the Indian Territory nobody would have complained.

Mr. ALLISON. It was my fortune to be at that time chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs as well as a member of the Committee on Appropriations. The facts are these: In 1858 a treaty was made with the Ponca tribe of Indians by which a certain portion of the lands lying between the Niobrara and the Missouri Rivers was devoted to their use and benefit. In 1867 and 1868, or the early nor devoted to their use and benefit. In 1867 and 1868, or the early portion of 1868, an Indian war extended almost from the southern boundary of our country to the Canadian possessions on the north, and the Congress of the United States appointed a commission, directing it to make peace with all the Indian tribes, including the great tribes of the Sioux, the Kiowas and Comanches, the Cheyennes, and the Arapahoes, all of whom had made war upon the United States. The United States had expended more than $50,000,000 to suppress the Indian wars. United States had expended more than $50,000,000 to suppress these Indian wars. That commission consisted of the now Commanding-General of the Army of the United States, General Sherman, a then Senator of this body, Mr. Henderson of the State of Missouri, and several distinguished officers of the United States Army. They went from the northern to the southern boundary of our country; they met these great Indian tribes in council, and among other things they made a treaty with the great Sioux Nation, comprising many tribes, by which they set apart for the use of the Sioux Nation forever a tract of country larger in extent than five States like Iowa, which unfortunately included this little Ponca reservation of ninety thousand acres of land. That treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States. The Sioux always claimed the territory known as the Ponca reservation as a part of their own country, and that when we ceded it to the Poncas we ceded it in violation, as the Sioux always claimed, of their privileges and rights as the original occupants of that country.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I have heard that suggestion since the controversy arose, but it is not put upon that ground by the Indian Bureau. It is put upon the ground of a mistake. I want to say that more than after years are now friend will find a treaty between the United States. is put upon the ground of a mistake. I want to say that more than fifty years ago my friend will find a treaty between the United States and the Poncas in 1820 odd, wherein the United States—

Mr. TELLER. Eighteen hundred and seventeen.

Mr. DAWES. Eighteen hundred and seventeen, whereby this country was at that time set apart for these people.

Mr. ALLISON. This identical country in 1817?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, this same country.

Mr. ALLISON. These pipets the people are a seventeen.

Mr. ALLISON. These ninety thousand acres?

Mr. DAWES. The whole of this territory. This ninety thousand acres is what is left to the Poncas of all their large reservation. From time to time it has been cut down.

Now, I want to say a word more. The only trouble with the Sioux was that they must make war upon somebody, and they made war was that they must make war upon somebody, and they made war upon those that they could with impunity.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, I am not discussing that question. I only am stating that the Sioux Nation claimed this territory.

Mr. DAWES. They never claimed it until after the treaty of 1868, which by a blunder included it in their territory. They never claimed it before that I have been able to find.

Mr. ALLISON. For the purposes for which I am speaking it is a matter of no moment. But by what was done in 1868 this country was set apart to the Sioux. The Sioux tribe were in the habit of makwas set apart to the Sloux. The Sloux tribe were in the habit of making annual depredations upon the Poncas. The Poncas would plant a thousand acres of land in corn, and the Sloux in the night-time would come, sweep down upon their corn and destroy it, and burn their houses and destroy their property.

Mr. DAWES. And so to protect them you took their corn-fields away from them!

Mr. ALLISON If the Senetor from Manual and the state of the senetor from the senetor f

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to make my statement of the case, I think I shall give some reasons why this appropriation bill was passed, at least.

Mr. President, these difficulties occurred from year to year, and the Ponca tribe itself petitioned Congress and the Interior Department to be a senator of the Congress and the Interior Department. ment to have a portion of the Omaha reservation, in Nebraska, set apart for its occupation and use. They said "we are a feeble tribe of seven hundred people; we cannot live in peace with our natural enemies, the Sioux," because they have been enemies, not perhaps for eighty years, but for many years, "and therefore we ask to be removed from the Sioux reservation." I do not remember it in detail, but I remember that that petition was under consideration for some time by the Indian Committee of the Seante. We finally I believe represented Indian Committee of the Senate. We finally, I believe, proposed an agreement by which a part of the Omaha reservation should be set aside for these Poncas. Then the Interior Department informed us that a committee or commission from the Ponca tribe had gone into the Indian Territory, if I remember rightly; at least it was made to appear clearly to the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body and to the Committee on Appropriations that the Ponca Indians preferred to go to the Indian Territory, and upon that representation made by the Department, which we were bound to believe, the annual appro-priation bill for the support of the Indians was amended by insert-ing a provision that the Poncas might be permitted to go to the Indian Territory with their consent.

I am not familiar with the details that followed that appropriation; but I say here and now that the Ponca Indians desired to be removed at the time because they did not want to be in the immediate neighborhood of their hereditary enemies, the Sioux. Certainly that was our understanding here; and if it was a mistake to remove them to the Indian Territory, that mistake rests upon whoever was in charge of the Indian Bureau or the Interior Department at the time. It was, I make no doubt, an honest mistake; but we are now only adding to our complications by proposing to put the Santee Sioux upon this reservation. This reservation now is part of the Sioux reservation, and they are undertaking to make their own living by means of agriculture; and the agricultural lands upon the present limited Sioux reservation are not sufficient now for the number of the Sioux reservation are not sumelent now for the number of the Sioux already on the reservation. The Santee Sioux in my judgment have as good a right to remain in the State of Nebraska as any other citizen of the State of Nebraska has. They have farms there; they have cultivated land there for years; they want to stay there. They have homes and lands in severalty, and they have besought us year by year to provide allotments of their lands by which they can secure a fee-simple title. This we have not given them. Therefore, expressing only my own judgment I am expired any proposition that pressing only my own judgment, I am against any proposition that looks to taking a single individual of the Santee tribe from the State of Nebraska, unless they voluntarily choose to go. Hence I shall vote for the reconsideration proposed by the Senator from MassachuMr. PADDOCK. Nobody has ever proposed that the Santees should to from their lands to the Ponca or any other reservation unless they themselves first consent to go.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is altogether an option, so far as any proposition has ever been made.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think anything will come of this resolution, whether it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs or whether it be referred to the special committee of which the Senator from Massachusetts is a member and my colleague is chairman.

Mr. PADDOCK. The resolution itself involves nothing whatever except that the Committee on Indian Affairs shall institute an inquiry in respect of it. Therefore it seems to me that the strictures passed upon the resolution are absurd; and the position of the Senator from Iowa, who is a member of that committee, [Mr. Allison,] is equally absurd. It seems to me that this committee ought not to shirk the responsibility of inquiring into the subject, inasmuch as a great body of the citizens of my State in the vicinity of this reservation have been demanding it for a long time and a bill looking to this result has been before that committee for a long period and been neglected by the committee—utterly and absolutely neglected by it—although the Legislature of the State has twice memorialized Congress to take action in regard to the matter. The committee has never given it any attention whatever. I think it is nothing more than right and decent and proper that this resolution should pass and this committee should take action; at all events they should take action far enough to inquire and investigate and say whether it is right and proper that something should be done in regard to this matter.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to point out to my friend, the Senator from Nebraska, the objection to this resolution as it stands, independently of any of the considerations which appeal so deeply to the feeling or the sympathy or the humanity of members of the Senate.

Here is this feeble Ponca tribe of Indians. Now, it is said, and it is said on authority which the Senator cannot but respect, to wit, the authority of a committee of this body charged with inquiring into that subject, that under circumstances of great inhumanity and harshness these men have been taken, practically against their will, from the property which they owned. Whether that be true or not, the Senate has not yet decided. It is an inquiry that the Senate has they give the property of the p thought fit to make, and in the process of making it certain developments have been made which, as stated by my colleague, present matters of the gravest character.

Now, while it is a matter in doubt whether the members of this feeble Ponca tribe are not exiled by an act of cruel force from their home, and while a resolution is pending directing an inquiry as to whether the honor and character of our Government does not require us to put them back there, a resolution is offered suggesting an inquiry whether we shall not put somebody else into that land of theirs, with or without their consent, or with such consent as may be ex-

My point is that it is not fitting to institute this inquiry till the other is disposed of. The Poncas are in no condition, if the facts be as my colleague represents them, to be asked by this Government for consent. We are sitting as judges in one of the gravest matters affecting the interest of these wards of the nation, these human beings on the one side, and the honor of the United States Government on the other, which is charged with having unwittingly through some of its agencies perpetrated an act of cruelty and injustice on weak of its agencies perpetrated an act of cruelty and injustice on weak and defenseless persons who are in its power. Now, for us to ask these men, while we are considering the propriety of making amends for such a wrong, "Won't you consent; come, give us your consent to give your land away to somebody else," puts the Government in the most unbecoming attitude. I submit to my friend from Nebraska that the time for the introduction of his resolution comes after the other inquiry is disposed of definitely, and not now.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, this inquiry has already been here before this committee for two years. The Legislature of my State, on behalf of the citizens who are interested as well as the Indians in on behalf of the citizens who are interested as well as the Indians in that section, memorialized Congress twice; I think two memorials have been here. Therefore it is a question that ought to be inquired into out of regard to the sovereign character of the State in which they are, if for no other reason. There ought to be some inquiry made. None whatever has been made.

made. None whatever has been made.

The Senator says that it is for the United States to consider whether these lands ought to be given to some other tribe of Indians or some other people, or given away in some manner. That is not contemplated. Let it be remembered that these Indians do not own these lands; they are not their property in any sense; they were put there by an executive order after the State was admitted. Citizens who had gone and filed on these lands, men who had located homestead had gone and filed on these lands, men who had located homestead and pre-emption claims, were removed from these lands in order to put these Indians there. It is simply proposed now that these lands, about which there is great uncertainty as to the title, to say the least, shall be disposed of, shall be appraised regularly and sold for money or on time, as may be thought best—at all events, shall be sold in some manner, and that the proceeds shall be applied to the benefit of these Indians pro rata according to their interest.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend was telling us a little while ago about some bad committee of the Senate that had failed entirely to do what it ought. What committee is that, if I may venture to inquire?

Mr. PADDOCK. The Committee on Indian Affairs. Mr. CONKLING. That is the committee that has been guilty of all this default?

Mr. PADDOCK. That is the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. I think, if the Senator instead of devoting himself to the conduct of the Indians, would renew his assault on the committee, that might be useful.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not propose to make any particular assault on the committee or the Indians either.

Mr. CONKLING. They seem to have behaved very badly accord-

Mr. CONKING. They seem to have behaved very badly according to the Senator.

Mr. PADDOCK. The subject has been here for a long time. The resolution, as I understand it, is merely to request the committee to inquire into a subject which has been in their hands for a long period of time, to which they have given no attention heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is: Will the Senate reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] was referred to the Committee on Indian.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Before that question is put I wish to state—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.
Mr. SAUNDERS. If I am allowed a few minutes we can dispose of this matter.

Several SENATORS. Regular order.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over, but when it will be reached again is more than the Chair can tell.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask the consent of the Senate to reconsider this vote and let it go to the select committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. INGALLS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

Mr. COKE. I insist on the regular order.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to give notice that I shall to-morrow, immediately after the morning hour, call up for consideration the question of privilege on the resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections in reference to the seat of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Kellogg.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the Senate bill

No. 1509.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not understand when the Senator from Delaware stated that he would call up the question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To-morrow after the close of the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To-morrow after the close of the morning business.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will not make a call for the consideration of that question at so early a time. The authentic document containing the report of the evidence, which contains a great many printed pages—I presume a thousand or more—was only laid on our tables yesterday morning.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The evidence has been in possession of the Senate for now nearly three weeks.

Mr. HOAR. Senators have postnoned the examination of it until

Mr. HOAR. Senators have postponed the examination of it until the genuine volume came in.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is not a member of the Senate but knows what evidence has been stricken out. All the evidence bearing upon the case has been in possession of the Senate for more than two weeks: The committee have not been at all pressing in this matter. We have arrived at a time when I think it is due to the Senate, due to the country, and due to the parties connected with the contest that the question should be decided.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a statement for the consideration of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The original document was withdrawn from all the public places to which it had been sent and from the desks of Senators by the order of the Senate some time ago; and yesterday morning, for the first time, the genuine document was placed on our desks. It seems to me, as one member of the committee, who, therefore, has had better opportunity for the examination of this evidence than other members of the Senate not on the committee, that the time is unreasonably short which

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] in his seat, but I would like to make an inquiry; does this take precedence of the Geneva award bill?

Mr. CONKLING. It is a privileged question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, Does that give it precedence of the Geneva award bill without an order of the Senate?

Mr. CONKLING. Not without an order of the Senate.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I shall then antagonize this matter, and I know the Senator from Indiana wishes to take up the Geneva award bill as soon as the Ute Indian question is through. Mr. McDONALD. The Geneva award bill was laid aside informally for the purpose of considering the Ute Indian bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is Senate bill No. 1509. Before it is proceeded with the Chair will lay before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives for the purpose of reference.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5048) relating to justices of the peace in the Territories was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the considera-tion of the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement sub-mitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. KIRK-wood in section 1, line 7, after the word "apprehension," to strike out the following words:

Or until the Secretary of the Interior shall be convinced that every possible effort to effect such surrender has been made.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. Fresident—
Mr. ALLISON. I ask my colleague to yield to me that I may move an amendment to the text itself by striking out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and inserting "President of the United States."
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa on the right of the Chair [Mr. ALLISON] moves to amend the text of the bill in the part sought to be stricken out by the amendment of the other Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.] The question is on this amend-

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood] to strike out the

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to submit a very few remarks on this subject, and I will confine myself almost directly to the question raised by the amendment.

The Ute Indians were on a reservation in the State of Colorado containing some twelve million acres. During the last year a difficulty arose on their reservation between them and the Indian agent stationed at White River; he was attacked, and the condition of affairs became so threatening that he called upon the Government authorities here to send some troops to that agency. They started for that destination, and on their way were met by a portion of these Indians and a battle ensued; a number of our soldiers were killed; a number of the Indians were killed; our soldiers were obliged to intrench and defend themselves as well as they could for several days until reinforcements reached them. In the mean time other of these Indians attacked the agent and the employés at the agency; killed the agent, Mr. Meeker; killed a number of other employés there; carried away and outraged the white women of the agency, and acted throughout in a manner peculiar to wild Indians such as these are. The outrage was such as is not new in our country but is terrible to contemplate.

Immediately thereupon the authorities here demanded that the In-Immediately thereupon the authorities here demanded that the Indians should surrender those of their number who were guilty of the murder of the employés at the agency and of the outrages committed upon the women, and they persisted in that demand, rightfully so, righteously so. They persisted in that demand until a number of the Indians came here and entered into an agreement (which is contained in this bill) with the Secretary of the Interior. That agreement makes no provision for the surrender of any of these persons. It makes no provision for the surrender of any one guilty of the outrages, greater than murder, committed upon the white women. That agreement has been sent to Congress for ratification and approval.

The Committee on Indian Affairs, recognizing the absolute justice of making the demand and enforcing the demand for the surrender of these criminals, seeks to amend the agreement so as to prevent the

of these criminals, seeks to amend the agreement so as to prevent the of these criminals, seeks to amend the agreement so as to prevent the payment to the Indians of any of the annuities due them until they shall surrender these criminals or until the Secretary of the Interior, now by the amendment of my colleague substituted by the President of the United States, shall be convinced that every possible effort to effect such surrender has been made. The amendment I propose is to strike out that clause, and to pay them not one dollar of annuities until they shall surrender for punishment, if there is any mode of punishing them, the men who have been guilty of these wrongs. If my amendment prevails it will leave it upon the naked ground that until they shall surrender for punishment these murderers, these ravishers, we will not pay them a dollar; and I will vote for no bill that ishers, we will not pay them a dollar; and I will vote for no bill that does not contain that stipulation.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator from Iowa intend the Senate to understand that the agreement made between the Government and these Indians contains no stipulation for the surrender of the persons guilty of the wrongs he has spoken of ?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If the Senator will point it out to me, I shall be glad to hear it.

Said agreement is in words and figures as follows, namely:

The chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of the Utes, now present in Washington, hereby promise and agree to procure the surrender to the United States, for trial and punishment, if found guilty, of those members of their nation, not yet in the custody of the United States, who were implicated in the murder of United States Indian Agent N. C. Meeker and the employes at the White River agency on the 29th day of September, 1879; and in case they do not themselves succeed in apprehending the said parties, presumably guilty of the above-mentioned crime, that they will not in any manner obstruct, but faithfully aid, any officers of the United States, directed by the proper authorities, to apprehend such presumably guilty parties.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I was aware that the agreement contained that stipulation. Now, what is it? The agreement is that these men will, if they can, surrender these criminals; but if they cannot, what then? It is not an unconditional agreement to do it.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the Senator and myself differ greatly about the meaning of the English language. I understand that this is the preliminary fundamental fact upon which this agreement stands, that they do promise to procure the surrender of these parties.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If the Senator will strike out all after the word "1879" in line 47 it will be see but when you read the clarge "and

"1879," in line 47, it will be so; but when you read the clause, "and in case they do not themselves succeed in apprehending the said in case they do not themselves succeed in apprehending the said parties, presumably guilty of the above-mentioned crime, that they will not in any manner obstruct, but faithfully aid, any officers of the United States, directed by the proper authorities, to apprehend such presumably guilty parties," it makes a very wide difference in the meaning of that clause.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me that we ought not to ask of the Ute Indians anything more than we should ask of any community of persons anywhere that contained within its members persons guilty of infractions of law. In this matter here certain members of the Ute tribe have been guilty of orimes. The Ute Indians agree that they will surrender the persons who have committed these crimes, or in case they themselves are unable to procure the surrender that they will not only allow the United States Government to arrest them, but that they will themselves co-operate with those authorities in securwill not only allow the United States Government to arrest them, but that they will themselves co-operate with those authorities in securing the apprehension of the offenders; so that if the Ute Indians do not surrender the parties it is open for the Government of the United States, by the whole force of its civil and military power, to enforce the apprehension and capture and surrender of these parties. I do not see what more could be done.

Mr. KIRKWOOD I think I understand fully the meaning of this not see what more could be done.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think I understand fully the meaning of this language, and that is, these Indians say they will arrest and surrender these criminals; but if they do not do it, if they should not do it.

Mr. INGALLS. If they cannot do it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. "In case they do not themselves succeed in apprehending the said parties," then what? Two things they will do. They first magnanimously agree that they will not obstruct the Government of the United States in its efforts to arrest them. That is a very condescending, a very magnanimous thing for the Indians to do! They absolutely agree that if they do not themselves arrest these people, they will not obstruct or hinder—

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator think that they should obstruct their apprehension?

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator think that they should obstruct their apprehension?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No; but I would not bargain with them that they should not do it. What is this Government of the United States within its own limits? Has it got to bargain with anybody for the protection of its own people? What right has an Indian upon the Ute reservation, or elsewhere, to obstruct the Government of the United States in the prophension of many who have marked. States in the apprehension of men who have murdered the citizens and outraged the women?

Mr. INGALLS. What right has a grizzly bear to compel an Ameri-

Mr. INGALLS. What is can citizen to climb a tree?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. We are not talking about grizzly bears, but about human beings. Look at it, Mr. President—about human beings.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Towa whether there is any provision of law by which these Indians can be punished after they are arrested, and where are they to be punished?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, Mrs. Glass or somebody else said, in prescribing a mode of cooking a hare, that it was a good thing to catch the hare first. I am more concerned about catching these Indians for the present than about punishing them afterward. We will see about that when we have caught them. It is not white for us to quarrel over the question whether we can or cannot will see about that when we have caught them. It is not worth while for us to quarrel over the question whether we can or cannot punish them until we have them ready for punishment.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator that I have no doubt of our power to punish them; and if we have the power to punish them we certainly have equally the right and power to catch them.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well. Now, here, either the attack upon our soldiers and the attack upon the employes of the agency was done by these Ute tribes, as tribes, or it was done by individuals of the tribes without the tribal authority. One of the two is true; I do not know which is true. I understand the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] to say that representatives from all three of the Ute tribes were present both at the battle against Major Thornburgh and at the were present both at the battle against Major Thornburgh and at the massacre at White River agency. If that be true, the act is the act of the tribes. If, upon the other hand, it be merely an act of a portion of the people, without tribal authority, it varies, perhaps, the liability of the tribes as such, but it does not vary this: There are some four thousand Utes altogether. Now, we all know enough about them to understand that they know who were the men engaged in this thing. There can be no doubt whatever that the chiefs of the tribes know what men were engaged in the battle against Thornburgh, and what men were engaged in the battle against Thornburgh, and what men were engaged in the attack upon the agency and the outrages that followed. They know who they are. They could have surrendered them months ago if they would have surrendered them months ago; but they have not done it, and I do not know that they have even communicated to the Government of the United States the names of the parties by whom the outrages were committed.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator under what law or principle they are bound to surrender them if they do know?

principle they are bound to surrender them if they do know !

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I am not a very good lawyer, but we are here dealing with these Indian people in some peculiar rela-tions that they bear to the Government of the United States. We have made treaties with them heretofore, we are making treaties with them now, as organized bodies. Whether they are independent nations or not, I do not pretend to say; but they are organized bodies with which, as such, we treat, bargain, and contract.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. I should like to inquire on what principle the action now proposed proceeds. We have treated this tribe, I understand, as we do other Indian tribes; we have made treaties with them. They violate the treaty, and make war upon us. Do you propose to arrest and hang them for it, or make war back?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am not prepared to say. As I said to the Senter from Aleberge a chost time since I was a conversed at this ator from Alabama a short time since, I am more concerned at this time to secure the guilty parties.

Mr. CARPENTER. I submit that before the Senate passes a bill compelling these men to be surrendered, we should inquire whether we have got any right to make such a demand, or to punish them if they are surrendered.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to answer the Senator from Wisconsin, because he evidently does not understand this matter. It is not a proposition to punish the men who went into battle—I suppose we should have to punish four hundred or five hundred men if we did that—but it is to punish the men who were guilty of the murder of the agent and the employés and the subsequent mistreatment of the

Mr. INGALLS. They have all been invited to come in and be

Mr. TELLER They have, and the honorable Secretary has stood aghast that they did not come. Ouray stood up there and declared the five or six men who were delivered up were not the men. He says that the names given by the women are not the men who were guilty of the crime, and he, like all the rest, refuses to give the

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It may be—sounder lawyers than I must answer the question—that upon Indian reservations our agents, sent there clothed with the authority of the United States, can be murdered; it may be that their wives or daughters may be ravished by Indians; it may be that these things can occur, and that there is no mode known to the law by which they can be punished for doing such acts. If that be so, I am very sorry that it is so.

Mr. CONKLING. I want to know under what provision or what treaty it is you say these men are bound to surrender the guilty par-

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If in England a number of citizens of the United States were there resident, or in France, where many of them are re ident, if the authorities of France or the authorities of England should take those citizens of the United States and murder the men and outrage the women, I do not think we should have any difficulty in as-certaining that the Government of the United States had the right to demand of the French government or the English government that the men who had committed those crimes should be punished, and I have no doubt that there would not be found a voice in the American Senate that would not say that if it was not done we would war with France or with England.

Mr. HOAR. What could we do with them if they were given up? Mr. KIRKWOOD. If I am right, these wrongs were committed within the jurisdiction of the United States, and I suppose that the Government of the United States is competent to punish murder and rape within its own limits.

Mr. CONKLING. That may be; but I want to know how the Indians are bound to deliver them up?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Because we are endeavoring to treat with them, and I would not treat with them to the value of a nickel; I would and I would not treat with them for the value of a incket, I would not treat with them for the possession of a rod of land until they had done what they can do, and what they have virtually said they will not do—surrender these criminals. I would make it the very first condition of any motion for a treaty or agreement with them. I would make no agreement with them, I would make no movement to them, I would pay no dollar to them until they had done so; and if they would make no bargain upon that condition, then I would send the Army of the United States there and I would sweep them from the face of the earth.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Certainly.
Mr. CARPENTER. An instance once occurred exactly within the Mr. CARPENTER. An instance once occurred exactly within the illustration supposed by the Senator. Great Britain sent men across from Canada to attack a ship in the waters of the United States, and they murdered several people in Buffalo, within the jurisdiction of the State of New York, set the ship on fire and sent it over Niagara Falls blazing. The people of New York indicted one MacLeod for murder in that instance, and Mr. Secretary Webster and I believe all the best jurists of that day concurred that the State of New York could not and that the United States could not punish that as a murder, the foreign nation having avowed and made itself responsible for the act.

Now we have got to treat the Indians as one thing or the other. If we treat them as parties to treaties, then we have got to treat them with the same respect that we treat Great Britain. If we do not make treaties with them and regard them as subject to our laws, then I conceive we are to make laws and punish them for the violation of those laws. Our difficulty, it seems to me, is that we are trying to do both, which of course is inconsistent and impossible. We make treaties with them, we hold them responsible for violating those treaties. Now, what treaty binds them to deliver up these criminals?

Mone that I am aware of.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I must insist on my rights, for I dislike to consume the time of the Senate very much. I will hear my colleague, however.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wanted to call my colleague's attention to the fact that the treaty of 1868 expressly provides that in case wrongs are committed by these Indians they shall surrender the criminals to the United States to be tried according to the laws of the United

Mr. CONKLING. And it also provides a rule of damages in case

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. If they do not do it the penalty is fixed in the treaty itself.

Mr. WHYTE. V Will the Senator allow me to ask-

Mr. KHRKWOOD. Let us get through one thing at a time.
Mr. WHYTE. But just at this point, if the Senator will allow me, desire to ask his colleague what law of the United States provides for the punishment of these Indians after they are surrendered?

Mr. CONKLING. That is the trouble.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not like to have two or three issues at one Mr. KIRK WOOD. I do not like to have two or three issues at one time. Under the old common-law practice that was not considered a good way to try a case. I should like to answer the Senator from Wisconsin myself, as I have the floor. It is a long time since I read the history of the transaction to which he alludes, but my recollection of it varies somewhat from his. The men who were caught upon the American side who were engaged in the burning of the Caroline were indicted, and were tried by the State of New York. They were tried for murder.

Mr. CONKLING. MacLeod ?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Somebody; I do not remember the name. Mr. Webster was negotiating with the British government at that time, the British government having assumed the responsibility of what had been done—not having ordered what had been done, but having assumed the responsibility of it—Mr. Webster thought that it was a matter which should be treated between the government of Great Britain and the Government of the United States. Still New York held on to the man she had caught, and he was indicted and tried, and, on to the man she had caught, and he was indicted and tried, and, luckily for the peace of the two governments, he was pronounced not guilty by the jury. But if the State of New York had pronounced him guilty and sentenced him to be hung, what would have happened I do not know, and nobody knows, I apprehend.

Mr. HOAR. If I recollect that case correctly, the British government avowed the act as an act of public force, done under her authority and at that everyal heing neved in defense under the instrucity, and on that avowal being proved in defense, under the instruc-tion of the New York judge that was held a defense for the criminal,

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It is a long time since I read the case, but the fact remains that the State of New York indicted a man for murder, tried him for murder, and he was pronounced for some cause not guilty.

Mr. CARPENTER. On the ground that the English government having avowed the act he was not personally responsible.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not know but that that may be so. But here now in this case these people as tribes, I understand, have violated every existing treaty there is between them and the Government of the United States if it be true as the Separator from Colorado save lated every existing treaty there is between them and the Government of the United States, if it be true as the Senator from Colorado says that every Ute tribe was represented in the battle with Thornburgh and in the massacre at White River.

Mr. INGALLS. There is no claim of that.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Senator from Colorado says it is so.

Mr. TELLER. It is true that every single band was there represented, unless it was the Uintahs, and there were at least four Uintahs there by their own agent's statement. There is but one Ute tribe, and these are bands, and every band had its representative there, unless it was the Uintahs, and the agent reports that he thinks four Uintahs were there.

Mr. ALLISON. What agent?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Crichlow.

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose they were, what does that show?

Mr. TELLER. It shows that the whole tribe were engaged in the acts.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The authorities, so to speak, of these bands unquestionably know who these men were, and they come here and they propose to our Government, "Let us make a new treaty; let us make a new agreement; you owe us a certain amount of money for back annuities; we are willing to surrender our claim, whatever it may be, to a body of the lands that we hold under former treaties, and to take a less quantity; we want you to pay us $50,000 a year, a greater amount of annuities than you were paying before; you agreed to pay $25,000 a year; now we want you to pay $50,000 a year; in addition to that we want you to do various other things for us." Very well; I am willing to make a new agreement with them; I am willing to make a new contract with them; I am willing to make a new treaty with them, if you choose to call it a treaty; but before I will move a step in doing it I want these criminals surrendered. We certainly have the right to say whether we will make a new agreement or not. The first condition I submit before I will take a single step for making any new agreement with them must be a surrender of these persons to us that they may be punished by our laws, if our laws provide any punishment for them and any mode of applying punishment to them. If you do not do it, you are encouraging the committing of outrages of the kind again. Instead of guarding our people against outrages of the kind again. Instead of guarding our people against the repetition of such outrages, you are encouraging these men to commit them again whenever in their passion, or whatever you may please to call it, they see fit to attempt to commit them again.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I wish the privilege of asking the Senator from Iowa if he is well advised as to the facts in respect to the power of these Indians to deliver up these guilty men. Persons well informed in this matter have stated that they have left the tribe; some of them are known to have left the tribe, and have gene and joined other tribes of Indians, and are very likely to-day in the British Possessions. It would be very natural that they should do so if they knew they were to be arrested, and tried, and punished. They are not fond of being hung. Therefore I think the Senator is not well advised in saying it is in the power of these Indians to-day to deliver use all these means of demand.

advised in saying it is in the power of these Indians to-day to deliver up all these men on demand.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, for weeks and months after these outrages were committed they were promising to deliver them up. Efforts were made to have them delivered up, and they were promised to be delivered up, but they baffled and delayed and delayed and baffled and evaded and evaded until now the Senator says the men have fled and evaded and evaded until now the Senator says the men have left. I was urging upon the Senate the consideration of this, that when you allow outrages of this kind committed by Indians upon white men to go unpunished you are encouraging a repetition of them. Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let me go a little further on the point I am at. My colleague will recollect as well as myself an occurrence that took place in the State of Iowa some years ago, in 1857, I think. A band of Sioux Indians from Dakota, not resident in Iowa at all, having no location there no business there entered our State upon the western location there, no business there, entered our State upon the western border and passed diagonally through and out on the northern border, leaving behind them a trail of fire and blood. They murdered every man they met upon their passage through our State, and outraged every woman; they burned houses; they destroyed property, and passed off into Minnesota, and that was the last of them. Our State passed off into Minnesota, and that was the last of them. Our State people attempted as volunteers to go to the scene of danger. They went to the region where the trouble had occurred and endeavored to protect the people who were still there if they could afford them protection; but when they got there the Indians were gone. They had vanished like these murderers the Senator from Colorado tells us already have, and nothing was done. I think the United States did pay the State of Iowa some of the expense the State incurred in sendpay the State of Iowa some of the expense the State incurred in sending her volunteers there, but no man ever was punished for those deeds. From that day to this the injuries to those citizens of Iowa who were murdered and worse than murdered have gone unredressed; no punishment has been suffered by the guilty parties, and no attempt has ever been made to punish them so far as I know. These outrages were committed by a band of Sioux; and because that band of Sioux was not punished the Sioux tribe in Dakota ever since, until recently they have been thoroughly whipped, has been aggressive, overbearing, hostile. And so it will be here if you take no means to punish these men. If you do not require them to be surrendered for punishment at least, you are offering a premium to such men for all ishment at least, you are offering a premium to such men for all ishment at least, you are offering a premium to such men for all future time to repeat just such outrages whenever their passions lead them so to do. That is the point I want to make, and I want to put it upon the single ground that we say to these people, "Until you do surrender for trial and punishment the men that you yourselves know have been guilty of these outrages, we will not treat with you at all." Mr. INGALLS. Suppose they have fled? Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have repeatedly admitted my limited knowledge of law. I used to know something about law some years ago; but I have forgotten it. My recollection, however, is that a contract can never be construed to require an impossibility.

Mr. INGALLS. Suppose they have fled beyond the limits of the United States?

United States?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not know that.

Mr. INGALLS. My point is, ought there not to be some discretion lodged with some officer of the Government, in whom Congress can place confidence for the proper administration of law and the protection of its citizens, that will permit the provisions of a beneficent agreement like this to be carried out?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not think so. If I had thought so I would Mr. KIRKWOOD. Ido not think so. If I had thought so I would not have offered the amendment. If you will place this matter upon the ground I suggest, that these people shall not be treated with, shall not be recognized, shall be in no way contracted with or dealt with, until they surrender these guilty Indians, and they know you mean it, you will get them; but just so long as you palter with this matter in a double sense and say you will have them if you can get them, or they must surrender them if they can, and if they cannot then not, you will never get them.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I dislike to interrupt the honorable Senator, but I wish to state that I believe there is no person who is well informed on this subject who doubts that the authorities of these tribes did the best in their power to deliver up these Indians; and it must be borne in mind at the same time that they did deliver up six of them. It was doing pretty well for a savage race of Indians to bring forward and deliver up six men accused of crime, knowing that

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Of course I do not know what occurred in Colorado as well as the Senators from that State know. If they were agreed fully upon what did occur there, and what did not occur, I should perhaps feel myself compelled to assent to their conclusion; should perhaps feel myself compelled to assent to their conclusion; but knowing what I know about Indians, I think I know, I feel fully assured at least, that if these Indians had intended to deliver these men they would have been delivered long ago. It was only because of the belief that they could shuffle off this matter, as they have again and again and again, without punishment; it was because they knew that, or because they hoped they could do so in this case, and they have done so thus far and will do so again if the American Congress

I have said my say, Mr. President.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the discussion which the Senator from Iowa has evoked in regard to the surrender of these Indians indicates the absolute absurdity of the whole Indian policy which has been pursued by the Government for the last few years. is the use of clamoring for the surrender of these Indians when, after you get them, you do not know what to do with them?

Mr. COKE. Allow me to suggest that the Revised Statutes, section

2145, provides:

Except as to crimes the punishment of which is expressly provided for in this title, the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, shall extend to the Indian country.

Mr. WHYTE. "The Indian country," yes.
Mr. COKE. "The Indian country," and each Indian reservation is a part of "the Indian country," and I think that any crime committed by an Indian upon a white person on a reservation, as well as in the Indian Territory, is cognizable and punishable in the courts of the United States in that State or Territory where they may live. That is exactly the jurisdiction exercised over the Indian Territory by the courts of the United States, one of them at Fort Smith, Arbaneses

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I do not understand that this provision of the law has the slightest reference to the reservation in the State of Colorado. It has reference to the Indian Territory, as the district court in Arkansas, if I remember correctly, has peculiar jurisdiction over crimes committed on the border; but there is no law, as far as I know, and I have taken the trouble to investigate the subject, which can carry out the intention, as I suppose, of the Senate and of the President, when they made the treaty for the surrender of these bad Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that he did not listen to the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] who yesterday stated distinctly that these people could be punished under the laws

Mr. WHYTE. I supposed the Senator from Colorado had reference to crimes committed off the reservation, and not to any crimes comto crimes committed off the reservation, and not to any crimes committed upon the reservation.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that Judge Miller held in Kansas twice, and Judge Dillon in Nebraska, with the concurrence of the district judge, that for crimes committed on the reservations the Indians could be punished in the State courts. Now, this is not a proposition on the part of the Government to allow us to punish them. They were given an immunity, and told, "If you agree to this the State shall not punish you, and we will, if there is any law, or we will not, as the case may be."

Mr. WHYTE. I have understood that that question has been thoroughly discussed, and I have never heard before of these decisions in the circuit court, as I suppose they were. The discussion has been as to the propriety of authorizing the States to punish them for crimes committed within the State jurisdiction or within the boundaries of the State, and to allow the territorial courts to take jurisdiction in the Territories, wherever there were reservations; but I never have heard before that there was any law to carry out such an argument heard before that there was any law to carry out such an argument or enforce it, nor have I seen the decisions to which the Senator from Colorado refers.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator from Maryland allow me a moment to call his attention to a statute which I do not find in the Revised Statutes, but which I find in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary made by Mr. CARPENTER on the 14th of December, 1870. That report was on the question of the citizenship of Indians under the first clause of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitu-tion. In it the following laws are quoted, and I suppose they are still in force. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me I will read

That if any Indian, or other person or persons, shall, within the United States, and within any town, district, or territory belonging to any nation or nations, tribe or tribes of Indians, commit any crime, offense, or misdemeanor, which, if committed in any place or district of country under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, would by the laws of the United States be punished with death, or any other punishment, every such offender, on being thereof convicted, shall suffer the like punishment as is provided by the laws of the United States for the like offenses, if committed within any place or district of country under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Section 2 of same chapter provides:

Section 2 of same chapter provides:

That the superior courts in each of the territorial districts, and the circuit courts and other courts of the United States of similar jurisdiction in criminal causes, in each district of the United States, in which any offender against this act shall be first apprehended or brought for trial, shall have, and are hereby invested with full power and authority to hear, try, and punish all crimes, offenses, and misdemeanors against this act; such courts proceeding therein in the same manner as if such crimes, offenses, and misdemeanors had been committed within the bounds of their respective districts: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect any treaty now in force between the United States and any Indian nation, or to extend to any offense committed by one Indian against another, within any Indian boundary.

That is the law of 1817. Whether that has every been revealed.

That is the law of 1817. Whether that has ever been repealed, I am not advised. The Committee on the Judiciary presented it as

Mr. WHYTE. But the Senator will observe that that committee came to the conclusion that an Indian could not be tried by the laws of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. No, I beg pardon; the committee had under consideration the question whether or not an Indian is a citizen of the United States and of the State wherein he resides, by force of the first clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. WHYTE. Let me read, if it is the same report that I have referred to, the report made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Car-PENTER

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Mr. WHYTE. That report says:

Inasmuch as the Constitution treats Indian tribes as belonging to the rank of nations capable of making treaties, it is evident that an act of Congress which should assume to treat the members of a tribe as subject to the municipal jurisdiction of the United States would be unconstitutional and void.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand the committee to present this stat-

Mr. WHYTE. And they declare it to be unconstitutional and void.
Mr. MORGAN. Not as I understand the report.
Mr. WHYTE. If the Senator will look to the conclusion he will find it so. I differed with the honorable Senator from Wisconsin who made that report. I have quoted the language of the report. I remember the report.

Mr. MORGAN. That conclusion was not with reference to this statute.

Mr. WHYTE. It was with reference to that statute, as a matter of course, when the conclusion is that no statute which authorizes them to be tried is constitutional, because we dealt with them as nations, and they were not therefore subject to the municipal jurisdiction of the courts of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator, of course, knows that an act of Con-gress has deprived them of all nationality—that it has denationalized

Mr. WHYTE. Yes; and the reason why I am not going to vote for the bill is, because that law stands in the way of a treaty, and this is nothing more than a treaty, according to my judgment. I follow the learned Senator from Alabama in that view of the case; but that is not the question. The Supreme Court has decided that in the Territories the United States courts for the Territories can try an Indian for an offense committed in the Territory, but I am speaking of the Indians in the State of Colorado. The Supreme Court of the United States makes the distinction that outside of the States there is jurisdiction, but there is no jurisdiction in the courts of the United States within the States. I will read the decision of the court, for I looked within the States. I will read the decision of the court, for I looked at this subject and discussed it two years ago in the Senate. The power of Congress to subject these Indians (now declared to be no longer capable of treating as nations) to the authority of congressional laws cannot be doubted, for the Supreme Court has decided in United States vs. Rodgers, 4 Howard, 572, that it is—

Too firmly and clearly established to admit of dispute that the Indian tribes residing within the territorial limits of the United States are subject to their authority, and when the country occupied by them is not within the territorial limits of one of the States Congress may, by law, punish any offense committed there, no matter whether the offender be a white man or an Indian.

Again in the case of the Cherokee tobacco. (11 Wallace, 619) after

Again, in the case of the Cherokee tobacco, (11 Wallace, 619,) after declaring the Indian Territory to be considered as a part of the United States and stating the decision of the court in the case of The United States vs. Rodgers, (4 Howard, 572,) the court said:

Both these propositions are so well settled in our jurisprudence that it would be a waste of time to discuss them or to refer to further authority in support of them. There is a long and unbroken current of legislation and adjudication in accordance with them, and we are aware of nothing in conflict with either.

A treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress, and an act of Congress mast supersede a prior treaty. * * Indian treaties "have no higher sanction." (i Wallace, 6%).)

But they affirm the decision in the case of The United States vs. Rodgers, which held that whenever an offense was committed in a Territory under the jurisdiction of the United States the Indian might be tried as a white man was tried, but that that law did not apply where it was within the borders of a State. Therefore I ask where is the law to try these Indians for an offense committed on a reservation within the boundary of the State of Colorade? There is no law of the United States that makes them triable by the United States courts. There is no authority in the State to try them for a crime committed upon a reservation not under the control of the State. Then why make a point about their surrender? It strikes me there is nothing in that a point about their surrender? It strikes me there is nothing in that point at all. He who votes to require their surrender votes merely to have them transported to Washington, and then comes the question, what will you do with them? There is no law to do anything with them but to imprison them I suppose under the general power of the United States to lock anybody up.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator hear me a moment?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir; with great pleasure.

Mr. CONKLING. Shall I understand him to assert that if in Colorado an Indian, although he is domiciled on a reservation, commit murder or felony, he is not triable by the laws of Colorado in the murder or felony, he is not triable by the laws of Colorado in the

Mr. WHYTE. If he commits it on the jurisdiction of Colorado.

Mr. WHYTE. If he commits it on the reservation he is not triable in the State courts.

Mr. CONKLING. Ah, if he commits the crime on the reservation.
Mr. WHYTE. That is what I said. I said nothing else.
Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon.
Mr. WHYTE. Of course if he commits it outside of the reservation, and on the soil under the control and jurisdiction of the State, he is triable by the laws of Colorado just as a white man is.
Mr. CARPENTER. Just as a British subject would be.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to state that this question has come up in Oregon and has been considered in the State courts, which have held that they have jurisdiction to try all offenses between the whites and Indians committed on or off the reservations. They have gone so far as to convict Indians of murder on a reservation and to execute the Indians so convicted.

Mr. ALLISON. That is where a white man was murdered ?
Mr. SLATER. Where a white man was murdered. The decisions go to the extent of arresting Indians for larceny when the larceny is committed on a reservation and sending the parties to the penitentiary. There is no doubt of that authority.

Mr. WHYTE. There may be some local decisions; I am speaking about the decisions of the courts of the United States. I am speaking of the principle of law which has prevailed in the Supreme Court of the United States and in the inferior courts of the United States. I am not going to set up my knowledge against the knowledge of any Senator in regard to the local decisions of his State. I have never heard of any question being raised in regard to the decision of a State court, but I am speaking of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United State

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator understand that if an Indian commits an offense on an Indian reservation, he, more or less than a white man, committing the same offense in the same place is triable? Is there a particular jurisdiction? The Senator does not understand that there is any distinction between a white man and an Indian in that regard?

Mr. WHYTE. The distinction I am making is in regard to the locality where the crime is committed. That is the point.

Mr. HOAR. Is the reservation a part of the State, or is it excepted from the State like a United States fort where jurisdiction has been

Mr. WHYTE. That is my judgment.
Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator the question.
Mr. WHYTE. My judgment is that a reservation is excepted from

Mr. WHYTE. My judgment is that a reservation is excepted from the control of State authority.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that that question has been passed on twice by Judge Miller, who decided that unless there was something in the enabling act admitting the State or something in something in the enabling act admitting the State or something in the relation of the Indians by special treaty that excepted their res-ervation from the State control it became a part of the State and sub-ject to the jurisdiction of the State, and was not like the case of a fort. He decided that twice in Kansas.

Mr. WHYTE. Does the Senator from Colorado state now that if these Indians are surrendered they can be delivered to the authorities of the State of Colorado and tried in the State courts?

Mr. TELLER. It is my judgment that they can upon the decision that I have mentioned, unless there is a distinction made between a white man and an Indian. Judge Miller held in the Kansas case in 1863, and he reaffirmed the doctrine, (it has never been decided by the Supreme Court,) that where two white men got into a controversy and one killed the other on an Indian reservation, it was not in the power of the United States courts to punish the criminal; that it belonged to the State courts.

Mr. HOAR. Was that a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, or his own opinion?

Mr. TELLER. His own opinion.

Mr. WHYTE. A local court; the circuit court.

Mr. TELLER. The circuit court in Kansas. Judge Dillon afterward in Nebraska held the same doctrine in a case which occurred there where an Indian killed a white man off a reservation.

Mr. WHYTE. That is a different case. There is no difficulty where the locality of the crime is within the jurisdiction of the State. is committed where the State courts have absolute jurisdiction, it makes no difference, in my judgment, whether the man is white, red, or black; the crime is punishable by the State, because it is committed under the sovereignty of the State.

I merely rose for a moment, and did not intend to get into any dis-cussion of the subject, to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this debate discloses more and more the necessity of having upon that this debate discloses more and more the necessity of having upon the part of the Government of the United States some established policy in regard to the Indians. We passed a law that there should be no treaty made hereafter with Indians as nations. Having treated them from the foundation of the Government to 1871 as nations capable of making a treaty, we determined in 1871 that hereafter there should never be a treaty made with a tribe of Indians. They were to be denationalized; they were to be deprived of the power of making a contract as a nation, which before had been recognized as belonging

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?
Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.
Mr. ALLISON. The provision of the act of 1871 was put upon an appropriation bill, and if the Senator will look at it he will see that it is carefully guarded; that is, they shall not contract by treaty.

If the Senator will pardon me just one moment more, I will give the reason why that provision was made. It was contended for long years by the House of Representatives, not only with reference to treaties with Indians but with foreign nations, that the Senate could not make a treaty involving the payment of money. We had a long contest, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] will remember, with reference to the Alaska purchase. In 1868 General Sherman and others made treaties with nearly all the tribes of Indians, involving the payment of several millions of dollars per annum. Some of those treaties in 1871 had not been ratified by the Senate; and after a long contest between the House of Representatives and the Senate this provision was put on an Indian appropriation bill for the sole and exclusive purpose of preventing, as it was claimed, the Senate of the United States from involving the Government in an expenditure of money without the consent of the House. That is all that was intended to be done by that provision, and the language carefully guards that condition of things.

Mr. WHYTE. I have no difficulty and never have had any difficulty about the motive which impelled the passage of the act of 1871. It grew out of that old jealousy which began in 1798, existed in 1802, and came along down until 1816, when it was discussed largely in the House of Representatives—the jealousy upon the part of the House of the President and the Senate making contracts or treaties with foreign nations which involved the payment of money without consulting those who sat at the other end of the Capitol. I have no doubt that that was the spirit that moved the gentleman who introduced that rider to the appropriation bill—a system of legislation which I never have approved. It has grown so by custom that it If the Senator will pardon me just one moment more, I will give duced that rider to the appropriation bill-a system of legislation duced that rider to the appropriation bill—a system or legislation which I never have approved. It has grown so by custom that it has become a parliamentary law; but it is wrong in principle, because oftentimes the mind of those voting for it as a rider upon an appropriation bill is not as thoroughly called to the subject-matter contained in the amendment as it would be if it were a substantive proposition thoroughly discussed and more deliberately considered.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion in the same direction?

Mr. WHYTE. With great pleasure.
Mr. BECK. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] has mentioned some of the reasons which induced the action taken in 1871 relative to Indian treaties. With the consent of the Senator from Maryland, as I took a pretty active part in that matter, I desire to add, in addition to what the Senator from Iowa has said, that the commissioners who negotiated the treaties of 1868 were appointed by an act of Congress; and, as I now recollect, they were required in the allotment of the reservations to the different Indians under those treaties to submit their action back to Congress. That was never done. The lower House never having had an opportunity to act upon the reservations that were allotted, and those commissioners having been aptions that were allotted, and those commissioners having been appointed by an act of Congress and not under the treaty-making power, it was determined by the House that it should be heard in regard to all those matters. Therefore, in the year 1870 the House absolutely refused to carry out any of these treaties, and placed two or three million dollars in the hands of the President for Indian purposes to do as he pleased with the money; and I believe he did with that two or three millions better and kept the Indians in better order than had been done before or was done afterward with six or seven million or three millions better and kept the Indians in better order than had been done before or was done afterward with six or seven million dollars. The next year, when the controversy came again, the House and Senate agreed to carry out the treaties that had been made, but said, "You shall make no more;" and the Senate agreed to that.

Mr. WHYTE. I am obliged to the Senator from Kentucky for the information which he has furnished on the subject of the reason which induced the House of Representatives to propose this amendment to an appropriation bill, but that is not the point with me. The Senate will pardon me for calling their attention to the point with me. I did it two years ago and I am not going into the details of the discussion then. The point is that we owe it to these people, we owe it to ourselves as a civilized nation holding a high position among the nations of the world as a Christian people, to come to some determined policy in regard to this unfortunate class of people, who in the providence of God are submitted to our care and our control. We owe it to them to adopt some line of governmental administration which is not to be changed upon the discovery of a mine on a reservation, or by the desire of a railroad company to run a road through their land, or of the white settlers to occupy the property which has been set apart with all the sanctities of a treaty forever to these unfortunate people with whom we have had to deal.

We commenced with the Monroe doctrine formulated by John C. Calhoun. We acted upon the principle then of removing these people west of the Mississippi River to a large area of country, promising to protect them, promising to take care of them, promising to give them all the aid in our power to civilize them. They have gone on in that territory prospering. The reports from the Cherokees and the Creeks and the Chickasaws show that these men have been doing all in their power under God's providence, and by the aid of men who are willing to give their lives and their energies to advance the civilization of man, and to-day some of these tribes are an ornament to humanity, expending in education more per capita than is expended in many of the most civilized States for their inhabitants—$8 a day, I believe, is expended in the Cherokee Nation—publishing expended in many of the most civilized States for their inhabitants—$8 a day, I believe, is expended in the Cherokee Nation—publishing newspapers, having churches, having their upper and lower council to guide and govern their affairs. With that example before us we turn away from that policy and adopt another of segregating these people, of driving them from reservation to reservation, until at last they come to that grand reservation which is in store for them—the graveyard.

Mr. President, it would be far better for the United States to give up to the State of Colorado all of the territory occupied by the Indians upon condition that it should take care of them, upon condition that it should have its laws applied to them, upon condition that it would civilize them as far as it was in its power to do so. It would be far better to give up to the States the territory within their borders than to drive these people out of the States into the Territories farther west, until at last they are driven into the Pacific Ocean, which is evidently to be the resting-place of those in the northern part of our western country.

No, Mr. President, I shall not vote for this bill. Now is as good a time as any other, while this controversy is going on, to adopt a policy. Congress contains to-day, in its Indian Committees, men able to conceive a policy and to devise plans to carry it out, which would relieve us from the constant complaint, which would relieve us from the obloquy which rests upon us as a nation, which would make these people happier, more contented with the situation, and make them more like the Indians in the British possessions, whose conduct and the conduct of whose governing power is a reproach to our people, for while we have had wars with our Indians for years past, in the Canadian Indian reservations there have been no wars. They trust the government, they believe in the agents who are sent to them. Why? Because that government has been faithful to them. It pays them their money when it is due; it furnishes them their provisions when they are needed and are due; it lives up to its contracts; when it pledges its plighted honor that they shall not be removed, it preit pledges its plighted honor that they shall not be removed, it preserves its faith and keeps the Indians upon their reservations, and they live contented, and do not make war upon the whites, and the whites are not permitted to make war upon the Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, section 1, after the word "apprehension," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "made," in line 9, as follows:

Or until the President of the United States shall be convinced that every possible effort to effect such surrender has been made.

Mr. BECK. Please read the clause as it would read if amended. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the said agreement shall be amended by adding to the first clause thereof, after the words "gullty parties," the words following, to wit: "Until such surrender or apprehension, the proportion of the money, hereinafter provided, coming to that portion of the Ute Indians known as the White River Utes, except for removal and settlement, shall not be paid."

Mr. INGALLS. In order to make that intelligible, and that the Senate may fully understand what they are called upon to vote on, the first article of the agreement should be read with the proposed amendment, so that the whole subject may be presented in one view. The amendment that is now proposed by the Senator from Iowa is in the nature of an amendment that is proposed to the first article of the agreement. That article has not been read. In order that the Senate may understand fully the bearing of the amendments, that should be read in connection with the amendment suggested by the committee as proposed to be amended by the proposition made by the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report it as desired.

Mr. ALLISON. It follows line 39, on page 3.

The chiefs clerk read as follows:

The chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of the Utes, now present in Washington, hereby promise and agree to procure the surrender to the United States, for trial and punishment if found gulity, of those members of their nation not yet in the custody of the United States who were implicated in the murder of United States Indian Agent N. C. Meeker and the employes at the White River agency on the 29th day of September, 1879, and in case they do not themselves succeed in apprehending the said parties presumably guilty of the above-mentioned crime, that they will not in any manner obstruct, but faithfully aid, any officers of the United States, directed by the proper authorities, to apprehend such presumably guilty parties. Until such surrender or apprehension the proportion of the money hereinafter provided coming to that portion of the Ute Indians known as the White River Utes, except for removal and settlement, shall not be paid.

Mr. INGALLS. The Secretary has read that clause, not as it stands originally, but as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair understood the Senator to desire.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire that the clause should be read as it stands in the bill reported by the Senator from Texas from the Committee on Indian Affairs, page 2, from line 7 to line 12.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the agreement the fol-

Until such surrender or apprehension, or until the President of the United States shall be convinced that every possible effort to effect such surrender has been made, the proportion of the money, hereinafter provided, coming to that portion of the Ute Indians known as the White River Utes, except for removal and settlement, shall not be paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, on which the yeas and nays

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire only to say a word. After reading the bill and amendments, and after hearing or reading most of the speeches that have been made on the subject, I have felt a good deal embarrassed to know how to vote, because I desire to do what is best for the Government and the Indians; but I confess I am of those who believe that there ought to be no more treaties made with Indians. I was one of those, as I said a little while ago by perwith Indians. I was one of those, as I said a little while ago by permission of the Senator from Maryland, who took as active a part as perhaps any one else in endeavoring to prevent any more of these so-called treaties from being made. I believe that we will have no good management of Indian affairs so long as they are managed and controlled under the Interior Department and by political agents appointed for the purpose of enriching themselves by their control over them. We have two things to do to make our Indian policy a success and we have never done either. I do not now speak of the action cess, and we have never done either. I do not now speak of the action of the Government either under republican rule or democratic rule. We have, first, to satisfy the Indian that we will accord to him absolute justice, and in the next place we have to assure him that we will punish him with absolute certainty if he does not obey our just orders and demands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we must do him justice.

Mr. BECK. Yes, we must do him justice as well as require him to obey. He must be made to understand that he is all the time in the presence of a power that he cannot resist, and that punishment follows disobedience. The moment he understands that he can resist lows disobedience. The moment he understands that he can resist power, that he has to be treated with and have agreements made with him as though he belonged to an independent nation, so long there will be no permanent Indian peace. I have therefore always believed that a transfer of the management of the wild Indians to the War Department, with the officers of the United States Army, the retired officers, if you please, put upon full pay and made Indian agents, would secure at least one thing, the thing primarily and most needed, that is, honest dealing with the Indians, because the Army officer has his whole life at stake upon the maintenance of his integrity. His position in society is dependent upon the fact that he will faithfully perform the duties of his trust, pay over the money and furnish the supform the duties of his trust, pay over the money and furnish the supplies that are intrusted to him; and I have not a doubt that honesty, efficiency, and integrity would be secured in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred under that management.

Under the management we have had—and I have gone through investigation after investigation, to which I could refer, but I do not investigation after investigation, to which I could refer, but I do not propose to do it—it has been the exception rather than the rule where the Indians have had justice done them under the officials selected to carry out the present system. Men who have been appointed Indian agents, with salaries of $1,500 a year, expecting that in the course of one or two years they could come to Washington and buy or build houses, as some of them have done, costing twenty-five thousand or thirty thousand dollars, retiring rich, while the Indian was robbed, getting his supplies at wrong seasons of the year, and generally not getting the supplies promised to him, he of course felt that no justice was done him, and preferred resistance to starvation. Those agents frequently stirred up strife for the very purpose of increasing no justice was done him, and preferred resistance to starvation. Those agents frequently stirred up strife for the very purpose of increasing and making more valuable their trading-posts and otherwise making their positions more lucrative, while they would of course retire the moment trouble came, and the soldier had to be called in to take the responsibility of the difficulty off his hands.

I never have believed that the Army of the United States would seek to make war upon the Indians. There is no honor in such conflicts. No soldier seeks an Indian war. He would seek by every means in the world to avoid it, because if he succeeded in destroying an Indian tribe the world says of course the great military power of means in the world to avoid it, because if he succeeded in destroying an Indian tribe the world says of course the great military power of the country can easily conquer the Indians, and they ought to do it peremptorily. It is like a man fighting a humble-bees' nest: if one stings him, although he may kill them all, he loses. The soldier and the officer would see that justice is done, and so far improve existing conditions. But that is not all: we would have to go on and instruct the Indians in the arts of peace; perhaps the soldier is not a fit man to do that and therein lies the weakness of the view I favor; but he would secure justice; he would see that they are faithfully and honestly paid and supplied; that is a great point. As long as we are treating with them and bargaining with them and asking them to surrender culprits that they cannot and will not give up, there will be no permanent, peaceable, or proper relations established between the Government and the Indian.

In my judgment we will have to break up their tribal relations as soon as possible, and the sooner the better. As long as they have their hereditary chiefs and look to them as leaders and masters, and do not look to the United States and do not recognize the power of the Government, but feel that they are independent, owing only allegiance to their chiefs, we will have no lasting peace. More civilized nations than they have tried that. It was tried in the country from which I and from which several other Senators now before me sprang. I see my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] notably, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] also, but few degrees removed. That was tried with the Highland clans in Scotland, year after year. In 1715, the first rebellion, as it was called, broke out. After it was over the clans were allowed to retain their tribal rela-tions. The Camerons, the McDonalds, the McGregors, and all the other clans keeping up their feudal clanships, there was no settled or permanent peace. They looked to their head-men, they looked to the chiefs of their clans.

After the great rebellion of 1745 the British government said, there shall be no more McDonalds and McGregors and Camerons recognized as separate clans; there shall be no more tribal relations, no more clanships; Highlanders shall go to work like other people; we will make you recognize law and the rights of others, will punish your head-men just as we will punish the humblest man in the Highlands. It was not ten years after that policy was enforced before that country was peaceable, and it has been as loyal to the government ever since as any part of the dominions of that country.

The very moment you can bring those Indians to a position where they will look to the United States and can demand and receive its protection, and not look to the tribal relation and head-men and chiefs who are now absolute masters over them, and seek to make warriors and heroes of those who take the most scalps and who contest with the United States Government, the moment you get them in a position and disposition to recognize and obey our laws you will have peace and order, and you never will have it until that is done, and as long as you treat with them and fail to regard them as citizens, see no hope.

Mr. COKE. The United States Government can only treat with the Indians as tribes

Mr. BECK. That seems to be the case at present, but there is no reason why the Congress of the United States should not deal with reason why the Congress of the United States should not deal with them as individuals just as they may deal with the Senator from Texas or with me or with anybody else.

Mr. COKE. By acknowledging their rights as citizens.

Mr. BECK. The courts of the country have decided that they were citizens, not long ago, by issuing writs of habeas corpus, saying they had the same rights as a white man. We have gone very far in that direction already. We must take further steps in that direction or we will have no permanent peace with the Indians.

The bill before the Senate may be in the right direction, or it may be in the wrong direction. I fear it is in the wrong direction because

The bill before the Senate may be in the right direction, or it may be in the wrong direction. I fear it is in the wrong direction, because it is a recognition of agreements with men who have been guilty of offenses that would have consigned any member of the Senate under like circumstances to the gallows. When Sitting Bull achieved his victory over Custer and made his escape with his band every Indian knew it at once, and they have been defiant ever since. The fight made by the Utes last summer is making them still believemade by the Utes last summer is making them still believe—I mean those who have not realized our power, those who are wild on the plains—that they are as independent of this Government as if they did not live within the limits of the territory of the United States. Every step we take to make agreements with them and allow their assassins to go free, after all they have so wantonly and maliciously done, is only tending to encourage that spirit and that temper among them. We must devise some plan, as I said, first to do them justice, and then to punish them absolutely when they disobey. To accomplish these ends, we must place them in the hands of men who will and then to punish them absolutely when they disobey. To accomplish these ends, we must place them in the hands of men who will care for and treat them properly. I believe the only chance is the War Department, with perhaps some adjunct in the way of educational advantages to teach them the arts of peace. We must take steps to do these things or we will make no progress. I am afraid this bill is not in that direction, yet it may be better than to risk an outbreak. I confess I am at a loss to know what is best, and have said this much because I am.

M. BUDNIDE M. President I concern in every word that has

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I concur in every word that has been said by the Senator from Kentucky upon this subject. I shall vote for the bill because I want to sustain the committee and the Secretary of the Interior; but I do not think the present management of the Indians by the Interior Department is wise management; I do not think we shall ever have wise management until we transfer

I want to say this much in explanation of the vote I am going to give. The bill does not meet with my views, but I simply support it because it is the best we can do under the circumstances. I believe there ought to be a change in the management of the Indians. I am not sure that I could express myself more clearly or better on that subject or more in accordance with my own views than by repeating what the Senator from Kentucky has already said.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky says that he wants to be just to the Indians. I presume from his remarks that he intends to vote for the amendment that has been proposed by the Senator from Iowa. What justice is there in demanding the performance of an impossible condition? Suppose that the Utes had been conquered; that they had been vanquished, and we were demanding of them the terms upon which they could be restored to their rights under the Government, would there be any justice in demanding of them the performance of conditions that were absolutely and to our own knowledge impossible? Suppose a commander has under his control a captured city and is demanding conditions of its people for the salvation of their property. He demands the surrender of men who have been guilty of infractions of the rules of war. If it is made to appear that those men have been slain in battle or that they are fugiappear that those men have been slain in battle or that they are fugitives so that they cannot be apprehended, is there any justice in saying that terms shall not be made with them until those persons have been surrendered, and that unless they are surrendered the city shall be burned and its inhabitants put to the sword?

I do not understand that there can be any question of dignity or any question of honor between persons who are not equals. There is no question of dignity at stake between the United States Government and the Ute Indians. As I said a short time since, the dignity of an American citizen I suppose is not particularly compromised when he escapes from the pursuit of a grizzly bear and climbs a tree to get out of harm, nor if he keeps a safe distance from the rear end of a mule, nor if he goes into a house to avoid the dangers of a thunder-storm. We are contending here with some of the wild elements of nature, and we may as well be blamed for taking precautions against the explosions of dynamite or the raging of a torrent as to stand on questions of etiquette with the Ute Indians.

We are confronted, as I understand, with a great emergency. There is an appalling exigency that confronts us; and the danger is that these three thousand or four thousand Indians, unless some terms are made with them, will break out into the horrors of massacre and rais an appaining exigency that controlts us; and the danger is that these three thousand or four thousand Indians, unless some terms are made with them, will break out into the horrors of massacre and rapine and arson in Colorado. The Committee on Indian Affairs, acting under the advice of the Secretary of the Interior, have presented to the Senate some terms upon which this difficulty can be avoided and averted. We propose that they shall relinquish their reservation; that they shall break up their tribal relations; that they shall surrender persons who have been guilty of crime, if they can be surrendered; and if the tribe is not sufficiently powerful to surrender them it has agreed that the officers of the United States may make what search they please; may go into this reservation and pursue the fugitives, and if they can be caught that these Indians will interpose no obstacle, but, on the contrary, will aid and assist the authorities of the Government in apprehending the criminals.

Now, the Senator from lowa comes in and says that this agreement which has been reached after great labor and difficulty, for the purpose of avoiding this threatened and ominous trouble, shall not become operative in any particular unless these Indians primarily surrender the men who have been guilty of these crimes, even if it shall be made to appear that they cannot be surrendered.

All that we ask in the bill of the Committee on Indian Affairs is that after the President or the Secretary of the Interior shall become that after the President or the Secretary of the Interior shall become satisfied that the Indians have endeavored to comply in good faith with this agreement and it appears that they cannot surrender the criminals, then the other terms of the agreement may be carried into effect. What is there unreasonable about that? What is there unjust about that? What sacrifice of honor is there about that? How is the dignity of the American people compromised by that? What pre-rogative does the Senate fail to exercise by that? What do we do treating with these people as equals in this particular more than we would do if they had been vanquished in war and were lying helpless

I believe, Mr. President, while this bill is not all that could be desired, while it might be improved upon, while it does not meet my views in regard to many of the details of Indian administration, that views in regard to many of the details of Indian administration, that it is the best that can be done under the circumstances, and if we postpone action on this matter until we have settled the whole Indian policy of the Government and reviewed the whole history of Indian affairs for the last two hundred years, the people of Colorado will suffer by our neglect and delay. This is a practical question. We are confronted by something that demands immediate action to-day; and to postpone it because questions affecting the administration of the general Indian service are not satisfactorily met in the bill appears to be not the part of statesmanship or the part of practical wisdom.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I shall support the pending bill, and without attempting a discussion of the specific features of the measure, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the general subject sugure, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the general subject sug-

ure, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the general subject suggested by it.

Our Indian policy and administration seem to me to have been inspired and controlled by a stern selfishness, with a few honorable exceptions. Indian treaties have generally been made as the condition and instrument of acquiring the valuable territory occupied by the several Indian nations, and have been changed and revised from time to time as it became desirable that the steadily growing, irrepressible white races should secure more room for their growth and more lands for their occupancy; and wars, bounties, and beads have been used as auxiliaries for the purpose of temporary peace and security for the whites, and as the preliminary to further aggressions upon the red man's lands, with the ultimate view of his expulsion and extinction from the continent.

No set purpose has been evinced in adequate, sufficient measure to build him up, to civilize him, and to make him a part of the great community of States. Whatever of occasional and spasmodic effort has been made for his redemption from savagery and his perpetuity as a race, has been only sufficient to supply that class of exceptions to the rule necessary to prove the selfishness of the policy that we allege to have been practiced toward him.

The political or governmental idea, underlying the Indian policy, is to maintain the paramount authority of the United States over the Indian Territory and over the Indian tribes, yet recognizing tribal independence and autonomy and a local government, un-American in structure and having no reference to the Constitution or laws of the United States as for a the tribal enveronment of feet, the persons lives. United States, so far as the tribal governments affect the persons, lives, and rights of the members of the tribe alone. Currently with the maintenance of a policy thus based, under treaty obligations, the Government of the United States contributes to the support, equipments, and comforts of these Indians, not only by making appropriations for food and raiment but by sustaining blacksmiths, mechanics, farmers, millers, and schools in the midst of the Indian reservations. This Government also in its treaties and its enforcement thereof encourages. ernment also, in its treaties and its enforcement thereof, encourages and facilitates the missionary enterprises of the different churches which look to the Christianization and education of the Indians distributed throughout the public domain. The effort, under these circumstances, to preserve peace among the Indian tribes in their relations to each other and in their relations to the citizens of the United States to each other and in their relations to the citizens of the United States becomes a very onerous and difficult endeavor, and has not heretofore produced results that have either satisfied the expectations and public sentiment of the country, vindicated the wisdom of the policy practiced toward this people, or honored the Christian institutions and civilizations of our great country.

We have in the effort to realize a somewhat intangible ideal, to with the research of the light and the administration.

We have in the effort to realize a somewhat intangible ideal, to wit, the preservation of Indian liberty and the administration and exercise of national authority, complicated an essentially difficult problem by surrounding it with needless and equivocal adjuncts; we have rendered a questionable policy more difficult of successful execution by basing it upon a political theory which is un-American in character, and which, in its very structure, breeds and perpetuates the difficulties sought to be avoided and overcome.

Our system of government is complex in that it recognizes a general and local jurisdiction, and seeks to subserve and protect the rights of the individual and of the different political communities rights of the individual and of the different political communities and the great aggregates of society making up the nation, by a division of authority distributed among general and local agencies, which are required, like "the wheels within wheels" of Ezekial's vision, to so move in their several appropriate spheres as shall not only prevent attrition and collision, but as shall secure unity in the system, in its fullest integrity, currently with the enjoyment of the largest liberty, by the citizen.

Our system, I repeat, is complex, but it is nevertheless homogeneous. It is not incongruous; the general and local organisms belong to the same great class; they are both American, and they are moved by and respond to the same great impulse—the popular will of the American people.

Now, the political system that underlies our Indian policy is not only complex but it is incongruous, and one of the governments embraced in the system, ostensibly to secure the largest license and independence to the red race affected by the subject of this nondescript policy, is foreign in its character; the individuals and the system of laws are neither American. All the contradictions, the absurdities, and impossibilities developed and cropping out on the surface of our administration of Indian affairs are referable to this singular philosophy upon which, as a political theory, the Indian policy of the United States rests. United States rests.

United States rests.

Now, sir, there must be a change in the Indian policy if beneficent, practical results are expected, and any change that gives promise of solving this red-race problem must be a change based upon an idea in harmony, and not at war with our free institutions. If the Indian is expected and required to respond to Federal authority; if this people are expected to grow up into organized and well-ordered society; if they are to be civilized, in that the best elements of their natures are to be developed to the exercise of their best functions, so as to produce individual character and social groups characteristic of enlightened people; if this is to be done under our system, its ultimate realization requires an adoption of a political philosophy that shall make the Indians, as an individual and as a tribe, subjects of American law and beneficiaries of American institutions, by making them first American citizens, and clothing them, as rapidly as their advancement and location will permit, with the protective and ennobling prerogatives of such citizenship. tives of such citizenship.

I favor the measure pending, because it is a step in the direction that I have indicated. You propose to give the Indian not temporary but permanent residence as a tribe, and not tribal location, but by a division of lands in severalty you secure to him the individual property rights which, utilized, will sustain life for himself and family better than his nomadic career. By this location you lay the foundation for that love of country essential to the patriotism and growth of a people, and by the distribution of lands to the individual, in severalty, you appeal to and develop that essential constitutional quality of humanity, the disposition to accumulate, upon which, when healthily and justly developed, depends the wealth, the growth, the power, the comfort, the refinement, and the glory of the nations of the earth.

The measure also, with less directness, but as a necessary sequence to the provisions that I have just characterized, proposes, as preliminary to bringing the red race under the operations of our laws, to present them the best phases of civilized life. Having given the red man a habitat, having identified the individual as well as the tribe with his new home, by securing his individual interests and rights therein; having placed these people where law can reach them, govern them, and protect them, you propose a system of administration that shall bring them in contact not with the adventurer of the border, not a speculative Indian agent, not an armed blue-coated soldier, but with the American people, in the guise and fashion in which trade, commerce, arts—useful and attractive—in the panoply that loving peace supplies, and with the plenty and comforts that follow in the footsteps of peace, and for the first time in the Indian's history, he will see the industrial, commercial, comfortable side of the character of the American people; will find his contact and form his associations with the citizens of the great Republic, and not simply and exclusively its armed men-its instruments of justice and destruction. So much this measure, if it should be a type of the new policy, will do for the Indian, and the Indian problem—heretofore rendered difficult of solution because of the false philosophy underlying it, and the unjust administration too frequently based upon it—a policy that has kept the Indian a fugitive and a vagabond, that has bred discontent, suspicion, and hatred in the mind of the red man will be settled-not immediately, in a day or a year, but it will be put in course of settlement, and the question will be placed where a successful issue will be secured

Mr. President, the red race are not a numerous people in our land, not equaling probably a half million of souls, but they are the remnants of a great and multitudinous nation, and their hapless fortmess heretofore not only appeal to sympathy and to justice in any measures that we may take affecting them, but the vigor, energy, bravery, and integrity of this remnant entitle them to consideration on the merits of this question.

Our age has been signalized by the grand scientific and mechanical discoveries and inventions which have multiplied the productive forces of the world. The powers of nature have been harnessed to do the work of man, and every hour some new discovery contributes to swell the volume of the physical energies that make a people rich, prosperous, and happy. Yet, sir, in the midst of this affluence of physical energy and its utilization, human ingenuity and thought have already been directed to the conservation, to the economy against the waste, of the physical forces. The man is considered a public benefactor who can utilize waste fuel, who can convert to some practical end some physical energy still lost, to a per cent. at least, through the imperfection of the machinery employed. Now, sir, the Indian is a physical force; a half million of vigorous, physical, intellectual agents ready for the plastic hand of Christian civilization, living in a country possessing empires of untilled and uninhabited lands. The Indian tribes, viewed from this utilitarian stand-point, are worth preservation, conservation, utilization, and civilization, and I believe that we have reached a period when the publie sentiment of the country demands such a modification in the Indian policy, in its purposes, and in its methods, as shall save and not

There is nothing in the matter of obstructions, as suggested by the opponents of this measure, to convince me that the new policy is either impracticable or visionary. As a people, our history is full of surmounted obstacles; we have been solving difficult problems for more than a hundred years; we have been settling material, moral, and great political questions that before our era had been unsolved, and the possible solution of which, even among the timid in our midst, was questioned.

The Indian is human, and no matter what his traditions or his habits, if you will locate him and put him in contact, and hold him in contact with the forces of our civilization, his fresh, rugged nature will respond, and the fruit of the endeavor, in his civilization and development, will be the more permanent and enduring because his nature is so strong and obdurate. When you have no longer made it necessary for him to be a vagabond and a fugitive; when you have allowed him to see the lovable and attractive side of our civilization are really at the story will tark place; when you have made the low as well as the stern military phase; when you have made the law apply to him as it does to others, so that the ministers of the law shall not only be the executors of its penalties but the administrators of its saving, shielding, protecting provisions, he will become trustful and reliable, and when he is placed in position in which not only to become an industrial force—to multiply his comforts and those of his people—but the honest, full sharer of the things he produces, savage life will lose its attractions and the hunter will become the herdsman, the herdsman in his turn the farmer, and the farmer the mechanic, and out of the industries and growth of the Indian homes will spring up commercial interests and men competent to foster and handle them.

The American people are beginning to reach the conscientious conviction that redemption and civilization are due to the Indian tribes of the United States, and the present popular purpose is not to exterminate but to perpetuate them on this continent.

The Indian policy has never attracted so much attention as at the

The destruction of this vigorous race, rather than their preservation and development, is coming to be considered not only an outrage against Christian civilization, but an economic wrong to the people against Christian Civilization, but an economic wrong to the people of the United States; and the people of America demand that the measures and administration of government, relative to these people, shall proceed upon the wise and equitable principles that regulate the conduct of public affairs relative to every other race in the Republic, and when rightful conceptions obtain in the treatment of the red race, the Indian Conceptions of the red race, the Indian Conception of the red race, and when rightful conceptions obtain in the treatment of the red race, the Indian question, with its costs, anxieties, and wars, will disappear.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood] who has offered the amendment, that we should take away from the bill proposed by the committee the contingency embraced in what his amendment aims to strike out.

An agreement was made between the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian chiefs who were present in Washington City that has been submitted to the Senate. The committee of the Senate have seen proper to report certain amendments to that agreement. That I regard as one of the serious features in regard to this bill.

The Indians having received from these chiefs who were here and entered into the agreement a report of the terms of the agreement entered into between them and the Government of the United States, represented by the Secretary of the Interior, it will be almost impossible to eradicate from their minds that fact and make them understand that the agreement has been changed. When any amendment to that agreement is adopted they will hardly be able to understand the that agreement is adopted they will hardly be able to understand the reasons why the Government can insist upon that change, because the agreement having been once settled they have received the impression that it must remain, although the forms of law may have been complied with in changing the agreement. They will always regard it as a violation of the agreement if we do anything inconsistent with the original contract; but the change being recommended by the committee, I think the amendment of the Senator from Iowa improves the amendment of the committee. improves the amendment of the committee. The original agreement in regard to this subject of the surrender of the criminals is as fol-

The chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of the Utes now present in Washington hereby promise and agree to procure the surrender to the United States, for trial and punishment, if found guilty, of those members of their nation not yet in the custody of the United States who were implicated in the murder of United States Indian Agent N. C. Meeker and the employes at the White River agency on the 29th day of September, 1879, and in case they do not themselves succeed in apprehending the said parties, presumably guilty of the above-mentioned crime, that they will not in any manner obstruct, but faithfully aid, any officers of the United States, directed by the proper authorities, to apprehend such presumably guilty parties.

The amendment proposed by the committee is to add to the context of the United States, directed by the proper authorities, it to add to the context of the United States.

The amendment proposed by the committee is to add:

Until such surrender or apprehension, or until the Secretary of the Interior shall be convinced that every possible effort to effect such surrender has been made, the proportion of the money, hereinafter provided, coming to that portion of the Ute Indians known as the White River Utes, except for removal and settlement, shall

The words "Secretary of the Interior" have been stricken out and "President of the United States" inserted. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa strikes out the words "or until the President of the United States shall be convinced that every possible effort to effect such surrender has been made." I agree with the Senator from Iowa that if you leave any question of doubt about the surrender of these people they never will be surrendered. The Senator from Kansas says that we propose impossible conditions upon these Indians. The kind of people we are treating with must be remembered. We are treating with a people who have more power over every member of their tribe than any civilized government on the face of the earth. These Indians can ascertain every crime that has been committed; they can ascertain every individual Indian who has participated in every crime; and they can secure the surrender of that individual if every crime; and they can secure the surrender of that individual if he is living.

Mr. INGALLS. Suppose he is not living?

Mr. McMILLAN. If he is not living, that will be a matter for future consideration. There is no allegation here that these people have more than escaped merely, and that they are not in existence. These men have committed an atrocious, unprovoked murder; they have been guilty of terrible crimes; and if the perpetrators of them are not punished it will be regarded as a weakness on the part of the Government and it will be an immunity for crime.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota for information how it is that the Indians get the knowledge that he attributes to them of the action of each other?

Mr. McMILLAN. By the very relations existing among the In-

Mr. McMILLAN. By the very relations existing among the Indians. The tribal organization and the relations existing between the Indians are such that they have complete knowledge and control of their people.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand the Senator to say that there is a confidence lying in the rude and barbarous code among the different members of the tribe by which they communicate with each other such information?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is more than a confidence. They have a government among themselves, and it is a system of government far more powerful than we can conceive of.

Mr. HOAR. That does not answer what I want to know. Suppose some of these men commit an outrage on a white family. The Sensone of these men commit an outrage on a white family.

present time, and the public sentiment demands that the new departure on this question shall ultimate in measures, toward the wild tribes of America, that shall be Christian and righteous in their character.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not say they all know it, but I say it can be ascertained. They can ascertain the knowledge of persons guilty of the commission of crimes.

Mr. INGALLS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if this matter were left exclusively to him, and he became convinced that these Indians had in good faith made every effort for the surrender of the guilty persons, and it was impossible for them to be surrendered, in consequence of their death or in consequence of their having become fugitives beyond seas or beyond the dominion of the United States, would he then insist upon the performance of conditions such as he has stipulated?

has stipulated?

Mr. McMILLAN. If I were convinced that it was impossible for them to deliver the criminals, then, of course, I would excuse it; but that is not the question presented here. The question presented here that is not the question presented here. The question presented here is whether we shall say to them in this agreement that if they do not do it this money shall be paid. You are making a proposition to them. You must consider the persons to whom you make the proposition. You are not making a proposition to a civilized nation; you are not making a proposition to one of our own people. You are making a proposition to savage Indians, and they are such a people that if the proposition is inserted in this form you never will accomplish the proposition is inserted in this form you never will accomplish the object which you wish to attain.

There is no pretense here that the persons who committed these crimes are not living or that they have escaped our jurisdiction. They have not been delivered by the Indians, and there is very strong evidence that they will not be delivered. But if the Indians are compelled to deliver them, if they know that there is no other course they can pursue in order to obtain this money but to deliver these people, then they will do it. If you make a proposition depending upon anything, as the bill does, you will never have the surrender of these people.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Minnesota admits that a contingency might arise in which they could not be surrendered and the gency might arise in which they could not be surrendered and the tribe themselves would be guilty of no lackes or no neglect or wrong-doing in not surrendering them. Is it not wise, is it not prudent, to lodge in some officer of the Government, in this case the highest as the bill has been amended, the discretion to say that if every possible effort has been made for their surrender, then these conditions shall not be imposed? Is it not wise, is it not prudent, to lodge that discretion somewhere?

Mr. McMILLAN. Not in a proposition to these people or to any savage Indians. The very moment you make a condition of that kind you defeat your purpose. Let the necessity appear positively, and then if there is any necessity for changing the agreement it can be done. Mr. INGALLS. To whom should that appear, and when should it appear?

Mr. McMILLAN. It never should be made in a proposition to these people, because the very insertion of it defeats the purpose. These people will never surrender the criminals if we make a condition upon which they can refuse to surrender them.

Mr. INGALLS. They agree to surrender them.

Mr. McMILLAN. The committee having changed the original agreement, I think this amendment of the Senator from Iowa will improve the committee's amendment. As I said before, I think any change of the agreement is unfortunate if the agreement itself is such as should be enforced. With the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, I shall vote for the bill as proposed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I certainly have no desire to prevent the adoption of this or any other measure that will benefit prevent the adoption of this or any other measure that will beneau the people of Colorado or the western country and improve the con-dition of the Indians. I think that the amendment offered by myself will make the bill better than it is. I think it will be a protection to the people of Colorado and do no injury to the Indians, because I cannot help believing that if you say to these people that if they by their failure to act or in any other way, except an utter impossibil-ity, shall fail to surrender the criminals, it will not be done, and these Indians will be encouraged in the future, for any cause such as moved them in this case to the massacre at White River and the attack upon Thornburgh, to make a similar movement again. Their escape from punishment in this case will encourage them to renew that attempt.

The Senator from Kansas argues that the effect of my amendment, if adopted, is to prevent anything from being done. I do not so understand. It proposes merely that a certain sum of money shall not be paid to these Indians until they surrender the criminals. That is all there is of it. Every other part of the agreement is to be carried

Mr. TELLER. They will get their annuity.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. They will get their annuity, they will have their lands, they will have their houses built, they will have their schools, they will have everything; but we say that "certain sums of money which we agree to pay you here shall not be paid until you surrender these criminals." The Senator from Kansas very ingeniously argues that the men may be dead and therefore cannot be surrendered to my inhead. That is true undeabtedly, and if the fact were larger. punishment. That is true undoubtedly; and if the fact were known that they were dead, that knowledge would perhaps be satisfactory.

Mr. INGALLS. How does the Senator mean it would be satisfactory; that the money should not be paid even if the men were dead?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Understand me. The Senator is arguing that it may be impossible to comply with the condition because the men may be dead, or may be impossible to comply with the condition because the men may be beyond sea. Very well, I admit both those things. Now, then, the objection I have to the bill as it stands is, that it is holding out to these men the inducement not to do the thing that the Senator himself admits should be done, the surrender of these men if it can be accomplished. In order to avoid embarrassing the bill I am prepared to vote for the proposition in another form. Instead of using the language of the bill in the words that I propose to strike out, let us insert:

Or until the President shall be satisfied that the guilty parties are no longer living, or have fied beyond the limits of the United States.

That would cover the precise two contingencies that the Senator himself suppo

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the honorable Senator from Iowa will allow me a moment, he proposes to encourage the Utes who were not engaged in the massacre either to kill those who were, or to compel them to flee the country.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It goes so far as to have the Government of the United States declare that the men who have been guilty of the outrages shall not live in the United States; that is all

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have heard it intimated here that they have already escaped beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will give way to me a moment, I should like to say that there is not any evidence that can be produced anywhere that they have escaped. There may be a rumor of that kind, but I have not the slightest doubt they are down on the Grand River waiting to get this money. There is no proof that they have escaped, or that they propose to escape.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is no information on the subject as I understand ject, as I understand.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should be glad to have the Senator from Kans, or the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, state to the sas, or the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, state to the Senate what evidence there is that these men cannot be surrendered. Mr. COKE. Six of the culprits were arrested and tendered to the military commander. He refused to accept them, because the entire number, twelve, I believe, were not brought in. That statement is made by the Secretary of the Interior, and his evidence is all the statement that has been made to us on the subject. These six Indians were afterward released when they were not accepted. I will state further to the Senator from Iowa that, so far as I am concerned—I can speak for nobody else-I am willing to accept the last amendment suggested by him.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That contains just this simple proposition, that these persons shall not be allowed to remain within the limits of the United States. They have attacked our troops; they have .ardered our agent; they have outraged our women; they can, as we believe, be surrendered by the other members of the band if they remain within the United States; but we do say, if this proposition should be satisfactory to the Senate, that they shall not remain within the limits of the United States unless they are surrendered for punishment. It does not stop, as I understand, all the operations of this agreement if we refuse to pay this money. It lets everything else go on except the payment of so many dollars, and retains those dollars until these men are surrendered.

There is another matter to which I wish to call the attention of this committee—to the language of the agreement read by the Senator from Kansas and read from the Clerk's desk as well. Let me read it:

The chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of the Utes, now present in Washington, hereby promise and agree to procure the surrender, to the United States, for trial and punishment, if found guilty—of those members of their nation, not yet in the custody of the United States, who were implicated in the murder of United States Indian Agent N. C. Meeker and the employés at the White River agency on the 29th day of September, 1879.

They and no others. The Indians who were concerned in the murder on that day on the reservation—they and they only are to be surrendered. Are they the only guilty ones? Were the outrages committed after that murder not greater than those committed in that murder and by it? And why is there no provision here for the surrender of the men who committed those outrages upon the women?

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me a word? I have every dissistion to vote for the bill. I state frankly to the Senator from Iowa position to vote for the bill. I state frankly to the Senator from Iowa that I have not yet understood the answer to the objection made by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] The object of the amendment is to secure possession of the persons of these criminals who have certainly been guilty of offenses that have struck with horror the civilized world; but suppose the Senator from Iowa succeeds in causing them to be delivered up by this tribe, under what law does he propose to punish them? The Supreme Court of the United States has decided most emphatically that where crimes are committed by Indians upon reservations within the boundaries of a State, not in the Indian country, they cannot be punished; there is no law for it; they must be remitted to the laws of the tribe. I should like to know in all candor from the Senator what good will be effected if his amendment be adopted? ment be adopted?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is a proposition that I have expressly declined to answer, because I do not think it is necessarily involved in this bill. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] insists that we have full and complete authority to punish them in our courts, and that our courts have again and again so decided. It seems remarkable to me that we can have our agents and employés within the jurisdiction of our Government murdered, and no mode of proceeding in our courts by which the murderers can be punished. I have not examined that question for myself, but it seems to me such a terrible amined that question for myself, but it seems to me such a terrible omission to exist in the law, that while it is disputed and affirmed on one side that there is no such law, and on the other that there is, I shall incline in my own judgment to the opinion that such a condition of affairs cannot have been permitted to remain unprovided for. If that be the law, then every Indian agent of the United States, every employe at every agency in the United States, may be murdered in cold blood to-morrow, and, as Senators say, there is no mode by which we can punish the offenders. It may be the law; I am not prepared to say, not having examined whether it is the law or not; but the Senator from Colorado says the law is that they can be punished. The Senator from Maryland says the law is that they cannot be punished. I do not know. It ought to be the law that they can be punished, and while it is disputed, because it ought to be the law I believe that it is the law.

I wish to submit a single remark in reply to what has fallen from the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck.] He is not in his seat, but what I have to say in regard to the matter may as well be said in his absence as in his presence. He repeated the common statement that the Indian agents are dishonest men, and that the administration of Indian affairs by Indian agents is but a history of dishonesty and wrong. There is some truth in this, and a great deal of error. There have been bad men, perhaps there are bad men to-day who are Indian agents. There have been bad men in every branch of service in the Government. It has even been said that there have been bad men in this Chamber. I trust that that is a mistake.

There have been bad agents undoubtedly, and dishonest agents.

Mr. President, what have we, the law-making power of the Government, done to avoid that condition of affairs? What do you need when you are seeking an Indian agent? You need a man of unsusbusiness capacity, because he has a large amount of business to transact; you need a man of excellent business capacity, because he has a large amount of business to transact; you need a man of extensive knowledge of men as well as affairs. Now, that class of men is not as plenty in our country as it would be well for the country that it should be. Men of sterling integrity, of well for the country that it should be. Men of sterling integrity, of first-class business capacity, of an extensive knowledge of men as well as of affairs, are not as plenty as we all desire they should be. You are seeking around for a man of this kind to make an Indian agent of him. What surroundings do you place him in when you make an Indian agent of him? Take the case of the agents to these Indians, the two new agencies to be established. You send a man there with his life in his hands; you send him there with his wife, if she accompanies him, with her life in her hands; his family with their lives in their hands; and what is dearer to them than life also as well; and you place them there outside of civilization, outside of all social enjoyment, outside of everything that makes life dear to us here. You place them there; and to induce this class of men, to inhere. You place them there; and to induce this class of men, to induce these men of sterling integrity, of first-class business capacity, of an extensive knowledge of men and things, to go and live with these surroundings, you do what? You offer the magnificent compensation of $1,500 a year! Is not that just what you do?

And do you wonder that you cannot get the class of men that you need under these inducements? You get a man thoroughly honest, but unacquainted with business affairs, not knowing men, and yet have to govern large hodies of savage Indians. He goes there, his he has to govern large bodies of savage Indians. He goes there, his heart overflowing with the milk of human kindness to these people, and yet he does not know a bit more how to manage them than a tenyear-old boy, and he is a failure. Another man goes there with capacity enough, but without honesty, and he is a failure. To get the class of men you need, having all these requirements, you must pay them better; and when you do not do it, find fault with yourselves. That is where the trouble lies; it is with yourselves, with your parsimony, with your niggardliness that attempts to procure that which cannot be procured for the sums you offer for it.

It may be that these Indians had better be under the charge of the Military Bureau. I do not know; I have not examined that question; but I know perfectly well that as long as you dole out salaries in the way you do, in the mean, contemptible, niggardly way you do, for services of this kind, for men of the class that should fill these places, you cannot get them.

Now I have said my say about this whole matter and am willing the vote should be taken.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator from Iowa state his amendment as last proposed?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am content myself to insert these words, so that the bill shall read:

Until such surrender or apprehension, or until the President shall be satisfied that the guilty parties are no longer living or have fied beyond the limits of the United States.

Mr. COKE. That is acceptable to me and several of the other gentlemen of the committee around me; we make no objection to it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It just goes on the naked assumption that these men have been guilty of such outrages that if they cannot be caught in our country they shall not be allowed to live in it; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senator from Iowa has lost the power to modify his amendment, the yeas and nays having been ordered on it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. So I suppose. If the words can be stricken out that I first moved to strike out these can be inserted afterward.

Mr. PENDLETON. Cannot the modification be made by unani-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that unanimous consent be given to my colleague to modify his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked for the Senator from Iowa to modify his own amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is modified and will now be reported as modified by him.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 of section 1, after "apprehension," it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "made," in line 9, and insert:

Or until the President shall be satisfied that the guilty parties are no longer living or have fied beyond the limits of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I hardly think it is right that the state of the law on the subject of our powers and jurisdiction over crimes committed by Indians within our territory should be left in the uncertainty which is indicated by the remarks of Senators to-day and stand before the country in that condition. I drew attention this morning to section 2145 of the Revised Statutes, and I desire to read that section in conjunction with the one which follows, to show that the Government of the United States has extended its criminal jurisdiction over all the Indian country, not merely the country occupied by the five nations within what is called the Indian Territory, but has extended its criminal jurisdiction over all the Indian country and exercises its jurisdiction therein precisely as it does on any other part of the territory of the United States where it has exclusive power, as in its dock-yards, navy-yards, and places of that sort. Section

Sec. 2145. Except as to crimes the punishment of which is expressly provided for in this title, the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, shall extend to the Indian country.

The next section qualifies that:

SEC. 2146. The preceding section shall not be construed to extend to crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, nor to any Indian committing any offense in the Indian country who has been punished by the local law of the tribe, or to any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respectively.

We have under these two sections given to the Indians the right to punish crimes, and after they have punished a crime according to their own laws the matter becomes under this statute res adjudicata and their action can be pleaded in bar of a further trial and conviction in the United States courts. That far we have given to Indians the power to protect their own institutions and their own society; but we have reserved the unqualified jurisdiction, unless it is expressly yielded by a treaty, to punish crimes in the Indian country precisely as we would punish them when committed within the precincts of a navy-yard, or dock-yard, or any other part of the country reserved to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of the United

Now, this term "Indian country" is used uniformly in the statutes in reference to a number of provisions that apply to the whole body of Indians in the United States. It is not used anywhere with reference to that part of the Indian Territory occupied by the five civilized tribes. It is a broad term that is used in every one of the statutes for the purpose of indicating a broad sweep of jurisdiction of the United States over all the country occupied by Indian tribes, except so far as that jurisdiction is expressly yielded by stipulations of treaties to the contrary.

The superintendents, agents, and sub-agents shall endeavor to procure the arrest and trial of all Indians accused of committing any crime, offense, or misdemeanor, and of all other persons who may have committed crimes or offenses within any State or Territory, and have fied into the Indian country, either by demanding the same of the chiefs of the proper tribe, or by such other means as the President may authorize. The President may direct the military force of the United States to be employed in the apprehension of such Indians, and also in preventing or terminating hostilities between any of the Indian tribes.

In executing process in the Indian country, the marshal may employ a posse comitatus, not exceeding three persons in any of the States respectively to assist in executing process by arresting and bringing in prisoners from the Indian country, and allow them $3 for each day in lieu of all expenses and services.

There is another provision of the statutes of the United States which authorizes a judge of the circuit or district court to try an Indian who has committed a crime within the Indian country in that part of the country where he may be found or to which he may be carried, meaning, of course, that part of the State or States in the nearest judicial circuit most convenient to the locality where the In-

When you come to look at the treaty of October, 1868, between the Ute tribe of Indians and the United States you will find that the Ute tribe have expressly stipulated for the supremacy of the laws of the United States and submitted themselves unqualifiedly to the jurisdiction of the United States. These Indians came into our jurisdiction from Mexico. They were then situated in the country near Santa Fé somewhere. They were removed from that location and we have had three treaties with them at least, if not more. In each one of these treaties, the first, second, and third, there has been an unqualified acknowledgment on their part of their subordination and subjection to the laws of the United States. So, then, the Ute tribe of Indians can have nothing to say against our trying these people if we catch them, or against our using any process known to the laws of the United States for the purpose of arresting them.

Therefore I think that when these Indians are arrested they can be tried, and if guilty can be convicted and executed as they should be. Ute tribe of Indians and the United States you will find that the Ute tried, and if guilty can be convicted and executed as they should be. But it does not seem to me that it is the real purpose of this bill to have these Indians punished. In making this remark I cast not the slightest reflection upon the committee; but there are certain features grouped together in this bill which look to me more as if the whole project was intended to furnish an opportunity for the Indians whole project was intended to lurinish an opportunity for the Indians to escape trial and thereby to get rid of these difficulties which have been the subject of discussion and debate here this morning, rather than bring them to trial and enforce the laws of the United States against them. It seems to me so. Why should there be a provision here that you will retain the money coming out of these annuities in favor of that portion of the Ute Indians called the White River Utes. favor of that portion of the Ute Indians called the White River Utes? Simply because, I suppose, it is urged at least, that the men who committed the massacre at the White River agency belonged to the White River band. The honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] does not believe that. There are a great many men in this country who do not begin to believe it. But you impose the penalty entirely on the White River band of Utes. When you have done this, what is to prevent the Ute Indians who were guilty of the massacre going down with Ouray, it may be, into the Uncompander Park or the Uncompander country on the Gunnison River, or going down with the other leader on the La Plata River and remaining there hid away, these other Indians receiving the full amount of their stipend, the full amount of their annuity, and yet these White River Utes the full amount of their annuity, and yet these White River Utes among them entirely free from arrest and really concealed and hid away by their friends?

If we are going to offer the Indian tribe a reward for the delivery of these criminal Indians into the hands of justice, or if we are going to impose upon them a sort of coercion by withholding from them certain moneys until these Indians are delivered up, my judgment is that we should make this stipulation applicable to the whole tribe, to all the Utes as well as to the White River Utes, and let it be understood to be the duty of the whole Ute tribe to deliver these men up, if we must appeal to them rather than to our own laws to have the series. must appeal to them rather than to our own laws to have these criminals delivered into the hands of justice. It may be the cheapest way of getting at the administration of justice, and I have no complaint to make at it if it succeeds in producing that effect. I would no more object to offering that sort of coercive means to bring these Indians to justice than I would to offering a reward for a criminal who might have escaped from the hands of the officer of the law; but when we do put this coercive measure upon the Indians, let us see that it is effective; let it be understood by the people of the United States, and the Indians to that it is the real name of this Communication. the Indians too, that it is the real purpose of this Government to punish crime, and that it is not the purpose of this Government, after a certain effort has been made to bring these Indians to justice, then, in the discretion of the President, or of the Secretary of the Interior, as the bill stood awhile ago, to relieve them from this coercive measure, pay them their money, and at the same time require them out of their annuities to pension these gentlemen and ladies who have been so terribly outraged. It looks to me as if we were fixing up an arrangement by which the Meeker family and all these other sufferers may be satisfied, and by which the Indians after a while may be allowed to escape, by which justice will be defeated, and the great purpose of the Secretary of the Interior, in taking the charge of the Ute war into his hands, to determine by negotiations what the generals of the Army thought should have been terminated by blood and by warfare

I will not, however, vote for the amendment that is proposed, for the reason that I believe with the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Kentucky that it is time we had made some distinct enunciation of the authority and power and majesty of the laws of the United States among the Indian people, and until we take that course and pursue it with firmness and decision we shall never accomplish I am afraid any valuable results by anything we do in refer plish, I am afraid, any valuable results by anything we do in reference to the Indians

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Kirkwood,] upon which the

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] Mr. WHYTE, (when his name was called.) Upon this subject I am

Mr. INGALLS, (after having voted in the negative.) I forgot when my name was called that I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Withers,] who is absent. I do not know that we should differ on this subject; but as we are paired, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 11; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. On page 3, line 33, after the word "Indians," I move to insert "or their descendants;" so as to read:

This sum, together with the annuity of $50,000 hereinbefore provided, may, in the discretion of Congress, at the end of twenty-five years, be capitalized, and the principal sum be paid to said Indians or their descendants per capita in lieu of said annuities.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Alabama, first, whether he thinks it wise to insert at this time exactly how this sum shall be distributed at the end of twenty-five years, if it is capitalized; and, secondly, whether the bill as it stands is not subject to the construction he proposes to put upon it by the amendment? "The Indians" is a general term.

Mr. MORGAN. My object is merely to provide against the contingency of our dealing at the end of twenty-five years with these Indians. I expect that at the end of twenty-five years these Indians will be, as they are now, anxious to receive annuities. I have no idea that any better result than that is to be expected from the bill. I do not know what general provisions of law the committee have in their mind to offer to the Senate for the purpose of regulating our intercourse with all the Indian tribes. I should be very happy to see them bring forward some general bill, and if the Senator from Iowa thinks this amendment will probably interfere with the subject he has in his committee-room, and that it might distract in any way that committee in bringing forward a general measure for their benefit, I shall not press it. Still I think it is necessary and proper at least to provide that the descendants of these Indians, as well as the ones now living; shall have the benefit of the per capita annuity distributed among them. From the language of the bill I am not sure that they would have the benefit of it. have the benefit of it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following as an additional section, to which understand the committee will agree:

SEC. 10. That the sum of $25,000, set apart in article 3 of the act of April 29, 1874, ratifying an agreement with the Ute Indians, shall be expended under the direction of the President in the education in schools established for that purpose of such youths of both sexes belonging to said tribe as in his judgment are best calculated to make proficiency therein in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their self-support.

Mr. TELLER. If this bill is ever to be good for anything at all Mr. TELLER. It this bill is ever to be good for anything at all it is because it is satisfactory to the Indians, for it is not satisfactory to any white man that I have heard speak of it yet. I believe the committee have almost universally declared that it was not satisfactory to them. Every Senator that has spoken on the subject has declared that it was not satisfactory to him. Therefore I assume that the bill is in the interest of the Indians and that it is satisfactory to them; and if it is not satisfactory to them it has not any merit at all. Now, this is a proposition to take the money that belongs to these Indians, if they have been guilty of no crimes. Let us be consistent about it. If they have not been guilty of any crimes do not let us take away money that belongs to them under an existing treaty which it is said is still in force. If Senators cannot convince them which it is said is still in force. If Senators cannot convince themselves after all that the treaty has been violated, and some of them say they cannot, do not let us go to work and violate it now, and take this money that is theirs for other purposes and use it in the education of their children when we have put in the agreement stipulation that we will educate their children. I want this bill to be satisfactory to somebody. If it is not going to be so to white men, I insist that it shall be satisfactory to the Indians.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator is laboring under a mistake in saying that this money belongs to the Indians in the sense that it belongs to them to use as they shall determine. It belongs to the Indians, but it is expressly provided in the treaty that it shall be expended under the direction and at the discretion of the President. I will read the variation dent. I will read the provision:

The United States agrees to set apart and hold, as a perpetual trust for the Ute Indians, a sum of money or its equivalent in bonds which shall be sufficient to produce the sum of $25,000 per annum, which sum of $25,000 per annum shall be disbursed or invested at the discretion of the President, or as he may direct, for the use and benefit of the Ute Indians annually forever.

The amendment simply provides that the President shall expend this particular money in this particular kind of education of their children. That this particular kind of education of their children must be useful to them I thought was a question not open for debate. Certainly the successes of the last few years in that kind of experiment, and what is going on at Hampton, at Carlisle Barracks, and sleavelers except to have settled the fact that the young children and elsewhere, seems to have settled the fact that the young children of the Indians, of both sexes, can be educated in what will make them useful, self-supporting people when they grow up. It is not an attempt to educate them in Greek and Latin or in the higher mathematics or anything of that kind. It is not such an experimental performance as that, but it is teaching them how to work and how to acquire that which makes the Indian an individual standing upon acquire that which makes the Indian an individual standing upon his own feet and feeling himself the necessity of peace and law and order, and through that instrumentality of itself disintegrating the tribe and the band and making him prepared for that citizenship which he will assume when he becomes fit to discharge the duties of a citizen, and not forcing citizenship upon him. I do not see how he can object to that use of the money.

Mr. TELLER. I have not any doubt about our right to appropriate this money. I have not any doubt about its being a good thing to appropriate it in this way. I am now speaking from the standpoint occupied by some Senators who insist that we are bound by these treaties, and if we are bound by the treaties, I say this is a violation of the treaties; it is a violation of their spirit. I am quite willing, as far as I am concerned, to vote for it, because I insist that they have no treaty rights at all. But if Senators believe they have, they should be consistent and not put this in, and this bill must be they should be consistent and not put this in, and this bill must be voted against by every Senator if it is not upon the supposition that the treaties remain intact.

Mr. COKE. The amendment is acceptable to the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, so far as I am acquainted with their views. We all believe that it is a proper exercise of discretion by Congress to perfect this bill in reference to that amount of money provided for in the treaty, without infringing in the least upon the terms of the treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr.

DAWES.

Mr. ALLISON. The chairman of the committee thinks this amendment ought to be accepted. Of course, then, I shall not interpose any serious objection; but I should like to hear the amendment read again, and I think I can suggest some reasons why it ought not to be adopted.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. Dawes, as

That the sum of $25,000 set apart in article 3 of the act of April 29, 1874, ratifying an agreement with the Ute Indians, shall be expended under the direction of the President in the education, in schools established for that purpose, of such youths of both sexes belonging to said tribe as in his judgment are best calculated to make proficiency therein in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their self-support.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that an annual appropriation?
Mr. ALLISON. I want to submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that he proposes here a direct violation of this treaty, and if there is any one thing that these Utes are confused about it is this particular $25,000. They have understood that it was to be paid to them in the discretion of the President. Now, instead of leaving it as the treaty leaves it, we undertake to exercise that discretion here. It is perfectly competent, if the President so decides, to use every dollar of this $25,000 for educational purposes; and yet we undertake here as a condition to direct the discretion of the President for all time to come with reference to it. time to come with reference to it.

While upon that point I want to say that I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we ought to provide, so far as we can proriom Massachusetts that we ought to provide, so far as we can provide, for the education of these Utes away from their reservation. That is being done now experimentally, and I am glad that that proposition receives the support of the Senator from Massachusetts. We have a considerable fund now devoted to that purpose. I tried year after year for three years to secure the devotion of this educational fund to the purposes to which it is now being devoted, before a single dollar of it had been devoted. The provision was put upon three successive Indian appropriation bills in the Senate, beginning in 1875, but in committees of conference those provisions were stricken out successively.

Now, I for one do not desire to disturb this fund as provided in this agreement, and I do not believe that this is all we shall be called upon to pay to these Indians for their education and support. I am frank enough to say here, what I believe, that we shall be obliged from year to year to make appropriations for the support of these Indians and for their education. I think that is our fair duty under this agreement, and therefore I would leave this specific fund as the treaty leaves it, to be disposed of in the discretion of the President, and not in the discretion of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I confess that it is utterly impossible for me to understand the policy on which this bill is based. I find those who advocate it proposing to expend every year $50,000 in distribution around are certific money these Judius for all time to come I. tribution around per capita among these Indians for all time to come. I propose to them to take $25,000 of that and appropriate it to this, a purpose that no Senator has for a moment done otherwise than commend. That cannot be done, the committee say, because that will interfere with an agreement that is made with the Utes, although it is proposed in the very bill to alter that agreement in very essential parts. I propose to make it a condition that they shall agree to it, but I find objection there. Then I turn to another part of the bill and I find that $25,000 allowed by a former treaty is to be expended from year to year by the President under his discretion, and I propose to take that and apply that on these schools; but the Senator from Iowa says that cannot be done, because although the President would approve of the measure when he signed the bill, yet it would not be his discretion because we have suggested it to him in this bill, and though he will have approved of it by signing the bill, still it will not be his original discretion; he did not think of it before we did although he has approved of it when he has signed the bill. So did although he has approved of it when he has signed the bill. So whichever way we turn with any provision that tends to make something out of the Indian youth, we are met by obstacles—

Mr. MAXEY. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to expend that $25,000 in part for ordinary school education?

Mr. DAWES. The design of my amendment is to expend it in these schools away from the reservation, where they teach the Indian how to work.

Mr. MAXEY. The amendment reaches only to industrial schools. What I desire to know is if there are to be separate industrial schools what I desire to know is it there are to be separate industrial schools apart from the ordinary schools.

Mr. DAWES. That is the process now going on. There are schools, the Senator knows, about Indian agencies where they teach the higher mathematics and where they teach Greek and Latin, where they project maps on the sides of the walls, and they are all covered by the black-boards. It is the idea of this provision to teach Indians how

Mr. MAXEY. But this amendment applies to industrial schools only. It does not say a word about ordinary education.

Mr. DAWES. It is to be applied in such schools and in such education in the arts of industry as will best teach them to support themselves. I do not know that any part of it would be likely to be expended in that higher education to which I have alluded.

I was struck, when I was down in the Indian Territory, with the school establishment there. I went into as fine a school-house there as there is in the city of Boston. The seats, they said, came from New England. The walls were all covered with black-boards. It was an elegant school-house in every respect, and the teachers were as fine-looking and as fine-appearing and as highly educated teachers as you would find in the best of schools here. It happened to be vacation as to part of the scholars, and the scholars could be picked out in the tribe by their hair being cut short, but they were proficient in all that pertained to savage life more than in anything that tended to increase the expectation of their ever coming to be self-supporting. They went farther than any of the rest of the boys; they knew more about all that pertained to the savage life. It is not that kind of school I had in my mind. There is a school down at Hampton, and there is another at Carlisle Barracks, and there are three or four more springing up over the country, in which are placed the best of the Indian boys and girls, and they are taught how to work, they are taught how to plow, they are taught how to use the plane and the blacksmith's forge, and all the arts of peace, and they go back to their tribe efficient men.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want the Senator from Massachusetts to understand that I object to the principle of his proposition.

Mr. DAWES. I know.
Mr. ALLISON. I only object to it because it will be difficult to make the Indian mind understand that we are not in some form intending to violate this treaty, and I am for maintaining the treaty in

Mr. DAWES. I think if that is the greatest obstacle toward making the Indian understand what we mean by this bill, the way is very clear. If you cannot make the Indians understand that the $25,000 which the President is authorized in his discretion and just as he pleases to expend for their benefit will not be expended as the President thinks for their benefit when it is expended according to the provisions of a law which the President himself approves, then you cannot make them understand anything, and we must send them to a different kind of school and subject them to a different kind of treatment. I think the refinement of objection has been reached. I do not think casuistry or dialectics or any other large name that does not occur to me now will express the refinement into which this has been reduced by an objection that it is in violation of a treaty which expressly in so many words puts it in the discretion of the President as this does.

Mr. DGALLS, Mr. Decident to provisions of a law which the President himself approves, then you

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the proposition made by the Senator from Massachusetts is open to two objections. In the first place, liberal provision is made in the agreement for the establishment of schools and for the education of the Indians. If the Senator will examine the fourth article of the agreement he will find:

Fourth. That as soon as the President may deem it necessary or expedient, the agencies for the Uncompalgres and Southern Utes be removed to and established at suitable points, to be hereafter selected, upon the lands to be set apart, and to maintain and support the said Utes until such time as they shall be able to support themselves, and that in the mean time the United States Government will establish and maintain schools in the settlements of the Utes, and make all necessary provision for the education of their children.

And again, on the sixteenth page of the bill, from line 9 downward, the sum of $350,000 is appropriated "for the cost of removal and settlement of the Utes, surveying their lands, building houses, establishing schools, building mills and agency buildings, purchasing stock, agricultural implements," &c.

That is the first objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

from Massachusetts.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Kansas if there is anything at all in the clause which he has read which would prevent the industrial arts being taught as a branch of the very schools provided

Mr. INGALLS. On the contrary I believe that the great tendency of the administration of Indian affairs in educational matters has been toward what are known as industrial schools. That is the object and toward what are known as industrial schools. That is the object and purpose of it, not to instruct them in the higher mathematics, in the differential calculus, and Joseph Cook's philosophy, and all the transcendentalism of Boston philanthropy, and in civil service reform, as the Senator from New York suggests, [laughter,] but to educate them in matters of agriculture and the industrial pursuits generally.

But there is a second objection, and that will be found in the fifth article of the agreement, which says:

Fifth. All provisions of the treaty of March 2, 1868, and the act of Congress approved April 29, 1874, not altered by this agreement, shall continue in force, and the following words from article 3 of said act, namely.

This is an article in the agreement of April 29, 1874, and it is expected.

This is an article in the agreement of April 29, 1874, and it is expressly agreed in this contract now before us that all those articles shall continue in force, and an attempt to alter the direction of that appropriation would justly be regarded by the Indians as a violation of the terms of this agreement that we are now considering.

Mr. MAXEY. I would ask the Senator from Kansas whether the point which I was trying to make was not correct, that under that very agreement the object sought to be accomplished by the Senator from Massachusetts can be accomplished by adding an industrial branch to the schools thereby authorized.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know, and I presume nobody else does, what the Senator from Massachusetts endeavors or wishes to accomplish; but if he does desire to accomplish what the Senator from Texas thinks he does, then of course I have no hesitation in agreeing with him on that subject.

with him on that subject.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that any Senator knows what I desire to accomplish; but there cannot be any doubt as to what the Senator from Kansas desires to accomplish, and that is apparently, very evidently, to provide for the throwing away annually of about $120,000 of money. Here are these provisions; and he says that it is expressly provided in the agreement that this section of the third article shall be ratified and affirmed. It is perfectly plain also that this provision that I offer does not conflict with it; but the anxiety of the Senator to keep inviolate, intact, that agreement, is singularly illustrated on the last line of the second page of this bill that he advocates, where it is declared: vocates, where it is declared:

Provided, That the said agreement shall be amended by adding to the first clause thereof, after the words "guilty parties," the words following, to wit:

And provided also. That three-fourths of the adult male members of said confederated bands shall agree to and sign said agreement, upon presentation of the same to them, in open council, in the manner hereinafter provided.

The Senator's anxiety to keep this agreement inviolate loses all its force the moment we come to the question how we shall dispose of this money, for if we dispose of the money in any way that will contribute toward elevating the race and making one of them a citizen worthy of the duties and functions of a citizen of the United States, the Senator from Kansas is distressed for fear we shall violate the agreement; and he seems to think that nobody who desires that knows what he does want. That may be. I am not particular whether the Senator from Kansas understands me or not. I think I understand myself, and I think the Senate understands me. Of course the Senate will not adopt this amendment if it does not meet their approval.

After having provided for this process of distributing per capita around among these Indians this little present, so that they will feel good, then we have here $25,000, which can be disposed of according to the discretion of the President or in any way he may direct; and when it comes to directing how that shall be expended, then there is trouble. The question is, what is the purpose of the bill? If the purpose of the bill is to make the condition of these Indians and of this Indian and of this Indian problem better, to improve it, then I think there can be no doubt that this provision or something equivalent to it should be adopted. It was proposed to take $25,000 out of the per capita money, but that was not thought best; but here was $25,000 placed at discretion and therefore it was proposed to be taken for this beneficent pur-

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, the purpose sought to be attained by the Senator from Massachusetts, I think, commends itself to every Senator upon this floor. His purpose is to provide that $25,000 of the amount of money already agreed to be given or agreed to be given by this treaty—I recall the word "treaty" because that is offensive to some gentlemen—this contract, shall be appropriated for the purpose of educating these Indian youths. The simple question is how it can best be appropriated. By the contract $50,000 a year are to be distributed to these Indians per capita. By the contracts that have heretofore been made $25,000 are to be distributed to these Indians according to the discretion of the President. The proposition of the according to the discretion of the President. The proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is that we shall advise the President that the $25,000 distributable according to his discretion shall be appro-

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to read from the bill? The words "distributed among the Indians" are not found the bill? The words "distributed among the Indians" are not found in the agreement at all.

Mr. PENDLETON. "Disbursed or invested for the Indians."

Mr. MORGAN. Not "distributed" at all.

Mr. PENDLETON. I agree that the Senator is right; the word is not "distributed;" but after all the Senator is only right in correcting me as to the use of a particular word and not as to the effect of the precision. the provision.

As I said, $25,000 are now at the discretion of the President of the United States for disbursement or investment. The proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is that $25,000, either from the one fund or the other, shall be disbursed for purposes of education; therefore he provides that that fund which under old treaties is within the discretion as to disbursement of the President of the United States shall be appropriated to education rather than that we shall amend the contract which is now before us providing that $25,000 of the new annuity provided shall be disbursed for that purpose.

when the Senator suggested to me this morning the desire which he had to accomplish, I for one was very free to advise that it was better to provide by an act within our discretion that the President should appropriate $25,000 in this way rather than to seek to amend further the agreement already made with these Indians; and after consultation among many members of the committee it was suggested, constitution among many members of the committee it was suggested, I will not say agreed, because that probably could not be done on the floor in an informal meeting, but it was understood, as I think, that the purpose should be accomplished by distributing the $25,000 already proposed to be distributed within the discretion of the President, rather than by asking an amendment to this agreement.

I believe I have stated the question correctly. We have two funds in our discretion. One of them requires an amendment of the law; in our discretion. One of them requires an amendment of the law; the other requires an amendment of the convention, or contract, or treaty, or agreement, whatever it may be called. I, for one, prefer that the appropriation of money shall be made by an advice which we can give to the President of the United States, rather than to encumber our negotiation with these Indians by an amendment to their convention or contract; and it was in this view, under this understanding, informal, perhaps, not complete, that the chairman of the committee said that the committee agreed to this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I do not consider the question vital at all to the bill, vital to the agreement, vital to the law. It is a question, all of us being agreed as to what ought to be done, simply as to how we shall do it, and my opinion is that the way suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts is the best and most expeditions.

Mr. COKE. I stated a few moments ago that the committee so far

Mr. COKE. I stated a few moments ago that the committee so far as I knew were agreed that this amendment might be accepted. I did not know then that the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Iowa objected; and so I was mistaken. I will still vote, however, for the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think after the statement made by the chairman of the committee that I ought to say that the Senator from Mas of the committee that I ought to say that the Senator from Massachusetts did come to my seat and propose the diversion of one-half of the $50,000 for per capita distribution for purposes of education, and I said to him that I saw no real objection to that except that the consent of the Indians must be procured. Then it seems afterward the Senator from Ohio saw the difficulty in the way, that it would be cumbering this agreement and changing it in a material respect, and then the other suggestion was made by the Senator from Massachusetts about which I was not consulted, because if I had been I certainly should have objected. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts now, and the Senators of the committee who have agreed to this, to revise their judgment in regard to it, and I want to call attention to one single suggestion which has not yet been made.

By the fourth provision of this agreement, as an inducement to

By the fourth provision of this agreement, as an inducement to these Indians we have promised them that we will establish and maintain schools. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] called attention to this language awhile ago.

The United States Government will establish and maintain schools in the settlements of the Utes, and make all necessary provision for the education of their children.

What is the reasonable meaning of the words "necessary provision?" It is that we shall educate these youths.

Mr. DAWES. That is in the Indian settlements.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. These Indians, in other words, understand that we are to provide for their education; and now in the very beginning, even before this agreement is ratified by us, after we have told them that we will provide for their education, we come in here and by a propesition of law take from them what we had agreed in 1874 to give them, to be distributed from time to time in the discretion of the President of the United States, having regard to the exigencies of the case at the time.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Iowa give way for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. ALLISON. I will give way in a minute for any purpose the Senator may desire. I only have a word to say. I will not give way now, but I will in a moment.

This sum is to be distributed in the discretion of the President; This sum is to be distributed in the discretion of the President; and the Senator from Massachusetts says that if we make a law and the President signs it, that is in the discretion of the President. That is the refinement of casuistry, it seems to me. What is the meaning of this third section? It is that this year these Indians may come and say to the President: "We want this sum used for school purposes," and the President may say, "I agree to it." Next year they may say to the President "We want this sum for another and a different purpose," and in the exercise of his wise discretion he may agree to their demand, or he may, at his discretion, again say "No. I agree to their demand, or he may, at his discretion, again say "No, I will devote this fund this year to schools as I did last year." Now, we propose to take away from him that discretion and put it in a

Mr. President, I for one must protest against any provision here that will divert this fund to school purposes, when we have expressly provided in this agreement that we will maintain schools for these Indians and make the necessary provision for their education.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the theory of this bill is to carry out in good faith the agreement. Now, it will be found on page 5 of the bill:

The said chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of Utes promise to obtain the consent of their people to the cession of the territory of their reservation as above on the following express conditions.

The third condition is:

A sum of money, or its equivalent in bonds, which shall be sufficient to produce the sum of $50,000 per annum, which sum of $50,000 shall be distributed per capita amongst them annually forever.

Coming, then, to the fourth clause of the agreement, it is that the-

Coming, then, to the fourth clause of the agreement, it is that the—United States Government will establish and maintain schools in the settlements of the Utes, and make all necessary provision for the education of their children.

Therefore it follows that by the third article of the agreement they are to get the $50,000 for distribution per capita, and by the fourth article of the agreement the Government of the United States is bound to "maintain schools in the settlements of the Utes and make all necessary provision for the education of their children." If the establish sent of an identified beauty has present to the education of the lishment of an industrial branch be necessary to the education of the to such schools, and they have a perfect right to them by that clause without depriving them of any portion of the $50,000 which they are entitled to by virtue of the third clause. Thus you make a material change, and this Congress comes in and says "we go back on what we did agree to; we did agree in the fourth clause to establish schools; we did agree to; we did agree in the fourth clause to establish schools; we did agree to make the necessary provisions for the education of your children; but now we back out of that and say that in order to carry out that fourth article we intend to take $25,000 of that which we already agreed to give to you for another purpose, and put that in to help us to carry out what we promised to do for the Ute children outside of the third article." If that is fair dealing, then I do not understand myself (and I think I do) what it is. I say they have a right to these schools and all necessary provisions—for the very terms of the fourth article must be met; and if an industrial branch is a necessary provision, they are entitled to it under the fourth article, and they are entitled to it outside of the $50,000 which is to be distributed. they are entitled to it outside of the $50,000 which is to be distributed per capita.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question ? Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I do not want to prevent an opportunity to vote, but I should like to make a motion to adjourn, if there is going to be any more discussion.

Mr. COKE. I hope there will be no adjournment until we get through with the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not want to press the motion to adjourn if there is to be a vote.

Mr. TELLER. It is not very probable, Mr. President—
Mr. BURNSIDE. I hold the floor, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. TELLER. I give way for that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 20; and (at five o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, April 7, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennes

Mr. WILBER, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2817) giving the consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into between the States of New York and

Vermont respecting the boundary between said States; and
An act (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the morning hour for to-day be dispensed with. My object is that we may proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON. I hope that the motion will not be agreed to.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Clymer, there were—ayes 91, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Clymer and Mr. McKenzie were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 61

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion of Mr. CLY-MER was not agreed to.

RAILROAD FROM SAN ANTONIO TO LAREDO.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty-five minutes before one o'clock. The pending question, as the Chair is advised by the RECORD, is upon the reference of a bill reported with amendments from the Committee on Railways and Canals, for reference to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. The title of the bill will be

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2967) to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with the San Antonio and Mexican Border Railroad Company for the immediate construction of a railroad from San Antonio to a point on the Rio Grande at or near the town of Laredo, for the purpose of establishing a postal and military highway from the United States military headquarters at San Antonio, Texas, to the Mexican

Mr. SHELLEY. I understand that the gentleman from Maryland Mr. McLane] desires to withdraw his objection to the reference of this bill as proposed by myself.

Mr. CABELL. The gentleman from Maryland, the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, informs me that he does not desire to press the objection he made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is already advised of that fact by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SHELLEY.]

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I renew the motion of the gentleman

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I renew the motion of the gentleman from Maryland.
Mr. CAMP. When the morning hour expired yesterday this bill was being read. It had been read about two-thirds through, I should judge, when the morning hour expired.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the bill to be again read.
Mr. REAGAN. May I say that this bill has already been reported to the House by a committee that had regular control of it; and the proposition is simply to place it upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.
The SPEAKER. Debate is hardly in order under the rules. The bill will be read, so that the House may be accurainted with its pro-bill will be read, so that the House may be acquainted with its proonli will be read, so that the House may be acquainted with its provisions before voting upon the question of reference.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to say in reply—
Mr. CABELL. This bill was read yesterday, if I mistake not.
The SPEAKER. It was not read through.
Mr. CABELL. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Under clause 16 of Rule XI was it not competent, after examination of the title of the bill, to make the reference to the Committee on Railways and Caple? and Canals

The SPEAKER. That point is not in dispute. The bill went to the Committee on Railways and Canals originally. The Chair does not decide points which do not arise. The rule, as stated by the gentleman who occupied the chair yesterday, and the practice under it, the present occupant of the chair confirms.

Mr. CABELL. I should like to have the two rules read.

The SPEAKER. To which rules does the gentleman refer?

Mr. CABELL. Clause 16 of Rule X—

which is not now in dispute.

Mr. CABELL. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that the bill having once been submitted to the committee and considered by that committee for a long period of time, whether it is proper and competent for the House now to take that bill, after it has been reported from the Committee on Railways and Canals, and give it to another committee for consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the House to determine.

Mr. CABELL. I submit that, if the original reference was competent and proper, it is just, the bill having been reported from the Committee on Railways and Canals, that report should be committed for further consideration to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the House to determine. The bill will be read.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STEVENSON. I make the point of order that the bill already has been read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMP] and the Clerk agree the bill was not read through yesterday.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the Chair say it is to be read over again

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the Chair say it is to be read over again from the beginning?

Mr. McKENZIE. I object to the rereading of any part of that bill which has been already read.

The SPEAKER. When demanded, the reading of the bill is in order. The House being called upon to vote on the reference of the bill, when demanded, the bill ought to be read connectedly.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. What I wish to know, Mr. Speaker, is, whether the rule does not require all bills relating to railroads west of the Mississippi River shall go to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads. cific Railroads.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the Chair must make the same answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania he has already made to the gentleman from Virginia, that that is not now a point in controversy.

Mr. WISE. My colleague from Pennsylvania is out of order from the fact that this is not west of the Mississippi River but west of the Gulf of Mexico.

The SPEAKER. That is not a point of order. It is a question for the House to determine. What gentlemen state is in the nature of

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. This is neither east nor south of the Mississippi River.

Mr. HOUK. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. The Committee on Railways and Canals have reported the bill now before the House and which, it is proposed, shall be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. That Committee on Railways and Canals have not only had this bill in reference to the Pacific Railroad before it. but it has now various other bills of a like character under consideration, some of which have been referred to myself and others as a sub-committee

The SPEAKER. That has nothing to do with the pending question

before the House.

Mr. HOUK. The House will see the point, [laughter,] and the Speaker, too, I trust. The bills which have been referred to us are west of the Mississippi River. I understand the position assumed by the Committee on Pacific Railroads is that that was an improper reference to the Committee on Railways and Canals. If, then, the bill now reported from the Committee on Railways and Canals shall be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, of which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] is chairman, ought not the same action be taken in reference to all the other bills, and the Committee on Railways and Canals he discharged from the further consideration. on Railways and Canals be discharged from the further consideration on Rahways and Canals be discharged from the further consideration of the numerous bills on which we are now at work, in order that they may be referred to the same Committee on Pacific Railroads?

The SPEAKER. The House may see it, but the Chair still fails to see that is any point of order. [Laughter.] It is in the nature of argument and, under the rule, it is not allowable.

Mr. CABELL. May I be permitted to make a statement not to exceed three minutes

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HOUK. The point of order, it seems, if this reference is made to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, is that then the Committee on Railways and Canals becomes at once a committee clerk for that

The SPEAKER. The collegation and the House and it is a speaker. The SPEAKER and we want to know our status.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee having concluded his argument, [laughter,] the Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Virginia to ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I object.

The SPEAKER. The only question before the House, and it is not debatable, is on the proposed reference.

Mr. CAMP. The bill has not been read yet.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, (pending the reading of the bill.)

I move to dispense with the further reading of the bill. No one appears to be paying any attention to it.

The SPEAKER. That is the fault of the members themselves. The gentleman from New York demanded the reading.

Mr. CAMP. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I renew the demand for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the reference of this bill under the rule to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The reference was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLEY. I ask permission that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OSCAR TURNER] have the privilege of presenting the views of the minority on this bill, and that the same be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WYOMING, MONTANA AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. FORD, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4637) creating the Wyoming, Montana and Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming, and for other purposes, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGES AT SHREVEPORT AND MONROE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. SLEMONS, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5676) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge at or near Shreveport, Louisiana, and also another across the Ouachita River at or near Monroe, in said State; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SURVEY, ETC., OF MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. STEVENSON, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4805, a bill (H. R. No. 5635) to provide for the survey and disposal of the mineral lands of the United States

Mr. STEVENSON. I am requested by the committee to ask that this substitute be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining

Mr. PAGE. I desire to know if this bill is recommitted to the committee whether it can be brought back by a motion to reconsider? Mr. STEVENSON. I am unable to hear the remarks of the gen-theman from California. My request was, however, that the substitute be printed and recommitted to the committee. The committee as yet make no recommendation as to placing it upon any calendar. Mr. PAGE. I understood that the bill was presented now to be recommitted, and I only wanted to know if it would then be in a position where it could be brought back under a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The rule would prevent its coming back at all events on a motion to reconsider. There appears, however, to be no report accompanying this bill. The rule requires that.

Mr. STEVENSON. This bill is not reported to be placed on a calendar, but simply to be recommitted.

The SPEAKER. The rule, however, requires that every bill coming from a committee shall be accompanied by a report. Consent, however, may be given in this case.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is a report accompanying this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that also should be printed with Mr. STEVENSON. There is a report from the land commission.

The SPEAKER. Let it be presented, then, and printed with the

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MINING DÉBRIS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported, as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 161, a bill (H. R. No. 5636) for the appointment of a commission to investigate the débris question in the State of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed

Mr. PAGE. Why not let it go to the Public Calendar?
Mr. BERRY. It should go to the Committee of the Whole in order that the appropriation may be made to carry it into effect. Mr. PAGE.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 2150) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING FUND.

Mr. McLane, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5637) to alter and amend the sinking-fund act approved March 7, 1878; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. McLane. A portion of that bill has already been reported to the House, and is pending under a motion to suspend the rules. It requires the investment of money now in the Treasury, in a sinking fund, and demands urgent action. I therefore ask the House to allow it to be made a special order for the 27th of April.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot ask that at this time, but will after the morning hour.

The bill will be referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZING THE MILITIA OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SCALES, from the Committee on the Militia, reported, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 4979, 992, and 4889, to reorganize, &c., the militia of the United States, a bill (H. R. No. 5638) to provide for reorganizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed. to be printed.

Mr. SCALES. I ask that the minority be allowed to make a report, and that the same be also printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 815) to increase the pensions of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who are utterly helpless from injuries received or disease contracted while in the United States service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. COFFROTH. I give notice that after the morning hour I will ask to have this bill taken up for action.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH D. POCKWOOD.

On motion of Mr. MILES, from the Committee on Pensions, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of the peti-tion of Joseph D. Packwood, of Colchester, Connecticut, for remuneration for property destroyed in the revolutionary war, and for extraordinary services then rendered the Government; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. CLYMER. Has the morning hour expired ?
The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President, by Mr. Pruden, one of his secretaries, announced that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 5258) appropriating money to provide for the

An act (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes

An act (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of L. H. Hershfield & Bro.; A joint resolution (H. R. No. 68) to authorize the printing of 13,000 copies of the Report on Sheep Husbandry; An act (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah

S. James

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors, and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels; and An act (H. R. No. 4568) for the protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River.

WEST POINT OUTRAGE.

Mr. McCOOK. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution of inquiry in regard to the alleged outrage at West Point; and I am sure, after it has been read at the Clerk's desk, not a member on this floor will object to it.

Mr. COX. I hope that will be done; it should be inquired into.

Mr. McCOOK. It is a simple resolution of inquiry.

Mr. COX. There will be unanimous consent for my colleague's

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it be read.
Mr. CLYMER. I must insist on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. McCOOK. Oh, no; there can be no objection to it.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING-FUND ACT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] made a request this morning which the Chair at the time, under the rule, could not recognize. The morning hour having expired, he now renews the request. It is that the bill reported to alter and amend the sinking-fund act passed March 7, 1878, relating to railroads, be made the special order on the 27th of April next, to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CLYMER. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. CONGER. I think we had better adhere to our rules and go on with the business in the regular order. I object. Mr. McLANE. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. CONGER. Let it take its place among the regular business.
Mr. McLANE. The Government is losing its interest by this delay and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection.
Mr. CONGER. I do, because I have bills on that Calendar.
Mr. McLANE. This is not a personal matter at all, but a public

Mr. CONGER. I have bills which I desire to reach, and let them all come up in regular order.

WEST POINT OUTRAGE.

Mr. McCOOK. I ask that my resolution be read.
Mr. CLYMER. I do not object to the reading of the resolution Mr. CLYMER. offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is reported that one Johnson C. Whittaker, a cadet at the United States Military Academy at West Point, was visited in his room at night-time by a number of his fellow-cadets and subjected to a most shocking and barbarous treatment, his ears being slit and cut and he being otherwise inhumanly treated. There-

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish this House with all the information he may have in regard to the alleged outrage perpetrated upon Cadet Whittaker, and also what steps, if any, have been taken in relation thereto.

Mr. AIKEN. I object. I have the honor to represent the district from which Whittaker comes, and feel competent to see that he is thoroughly protected. The authorities at West Point are now con-ducting an investigation, and I think it far better to await their decision than to jump at conclusions based upon newspaper reports, especially as the latest report is that it is a "bogus outrage."

COMMUTATION OF RATIONS TO ENLISTED MEN.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to such portion of the Army appropriation bill as relates to commutation of rations to enlisted men; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER. I insist on my motion to go into committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. Springer in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL,] as amended on motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne.] The Clerk read the pending amendment, as follows:

After line 71 insert the following:

Contract surgeons shall not be employed until all commissioned surgeons shall have been assigned to duty with troops, and then only upon request of the commanding officer, approved by the General of the Army; but this shall not be construed to require assignment to duty with troops of commissioned surgeons who are now, or may hereafter be, put in charge of the national soldiers' homes or those who are detailed to prepare the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion, or those who may be detailed on examining boards.

Mr. HAWLEY. There was much inquiry for information while that was under discussion yesterday, and there is further information. I have visited the Surgeon-General since, and shall be glad to have the debate opened for a short time.

Mr. DIBRELL. Debate is not in order, and I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope debate will be opened.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was closed, and the committee was dividing on the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Possibly unanimous consent may be obtained for

Mr. HAWLEY. Possibly unanimous consent may be obtained for a brief explanation.

Mr. DIBRELL. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. This breaks up the Medical Museum.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish gentlemen to vote intelligently, which they are not doing now. Not one in the House understood this yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers, Mr. Marsh and Mr. Sparks, will resume their places

The committee divided; and the tellers reported there were-ayes

Mr. CONGER. There was a great deal of confusion in that count while it was being taken, and I hope there will be no objection to allowing the tellers to make another count. I object to that count allowing the tellers to make another count. It object to that count as being incorrect.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers having reported to the Chair the result of the vote, it is not for the Chair to say that the count was not correct. The Chair can only announce it to the committee.

Mr. CONGER. But the tellers have changed their report or changed their count, and changed it against the side on which I voted. They announced in the first instance that a certain number had voted in the affirmative, but afterward it appeared that they voted in the neg-

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask if the teller who counted on the minority side complains that there was inaccuracy in the count?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has announced the vote as he received it from the tellers. The tellers made no complaint of inaccuracy in the count, as far as the Chair is informed.

Mr. SPARKS. The only difficulty grew out of the fact that seven gentlemen were announced inadvertently as voting in the negative who really voted in the affirmative. It was seen, it seems, at the time, and was corrected immediately after, although not corrected instantly, as it should have been had attention been called to the inadvertence

Mr. CONGER. During that intervening time before the correction was made several gentlemen passed between the tellers who voted in the negative. Whether they were counted or not I am unable to say.

Mr. SPARKS. I propose to say to the gentleman and to the committee that the count is an accurate one. No mistake was made excepting in this announcement of seven voting in the negative who voted in the affirmative, and the correction, as I have stated, was immediately made. But the final result of the count is correct, in my independ

The CHAIRMAN. The decision must stand, unless the tellers declare that it was an inaccurate count. Having reported their count, it is only for the Chair to state the result.

The Clerk resumed the reading, and read as follows:

Mr. CONGER. I must move to reconsider the last vote. The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order in Committee of the Whole to move a reconsideration.

Mr. CONGER. Then I call for a recount. If necessary, I move that there be a recount by tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not aware that there has ever been a precedent for a recount when the tellers announced the result and the tellers themselves agree as to that count and adhere to the report they made.
Mr. Marsh. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say—
Mr. CONGER. If the Chair should decide that, then there is no power to ratify mistakes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is none except in the House and by the yeas and nays. The gentleman from Illinois addressed the Chair.

Mr. MARSH. I wish to say that I think there were three or four votes cast that may not have been counted, or were perhaps improperly announced. There was some little confusion, owing to the change of the votes, to which my colleague from Illinois has referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman as asking for a recount?

Mr. MARSH. I prefer that there should be a recount, for the reason I have stated. I am not entirely satisfied that the count was accurate. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, under the circumstances, will direct the tellers to resume their places.

Mr. SPARKS. I desire to say one word, Mr. Chairman, in justice to myself-Mr. KEIFER. There is not the slightest imputation against the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know that there is any objection to the count, but in justice to myself I would like to make an explanation in reference to this matter.

Mr. KEIFER. But nobody has imputed anything wrong to the gentleman in this count.

Mr. SPARKS. I am aware of that; still I would prefer to make a statement in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair to order the tellers to resume their places if the tellers themselves agree that the count

Mr. MARSH. When the gentleman from Illinois erroneously an-Mr. MARSH. When the gentleman from Illinois erroneously announced that there were seven votes to be added in the negative and then changed them to the affirmative, I think there were three or four votes in the negative that I do not believe were announced. The CHAIRMAN. The vote having been announced and one of the tellers objecting to it as having been in his judgment inaccurate, it is the duty of the Chair to order a recount.

Mr. CONGER. I desire that there shall be order while the vote is being taken.

being taken. The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. WHITE. I ask for the reading of the amendment on which we are to vote

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Mr. ATAINS. I wish to ask the charman of the committee on Military Affairs if this amendment comes from that committee? Mr. DIBRELL. It does. Mr. SPARKS. I wish to say in answer to the question that it comes

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to say in answer to the question that it comes from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs how this amendment changes existing laws or regulations?

Mr. SPARKS. I believe we are not debating the question now.
Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment also include the Medical Museum and library.
Mr. HAWLEY. And also the National Board of Health.
Mr. BROWNE. I am willing to consent to that.
Mr. MARSH. I object.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I wish the Chair would state the question on which we are now to vote. There seems to be some confusion in the House as to whether we are voting on the amendment of Mr. Sparks or the amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment pending when the committee rose on yesterday.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I shall ask for a vote on this amendment in the

Mr. MARSH. And I give notice that I shall object to any vote in the House upon it. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. SPARKS. I desire to be heard on this for a moment.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that this amendment, not having been agreed to in committee, it will not be reported to the House at all; and unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of this bill admits the amendment, it cannot be voted upon in

Mr. SPARKS. That is just my proposition, that he does admit it. understand the condition of the question.

Now, sir, as this comes from one of the committees of this House, I hardly think that the member of the Committee on Appropriations having this bill in charge will refuse the request of that committee to have a vote in the House, after having announced on yesterday that he would do so.

Mr. CLYMER. I did state last night, when the committee appeared to be without a quorum, that I would, under the circumstances, allow a vote in the House. What I will do now, when the time comes, I am not prepared to say. [Cries of "Regular order!" "That is in hot prepared to say. [Cries of Regular order.]

Mr. SPARKS. It will cut no figure with me whether the gentleman does or does not allow a vote in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to say I have received no such request from that committee; when it is submitted to me I will determine upon it.

Mr. SPARKS. I declare to the gentleman that this amendment comes from that committee. I am authorized to demand this thing and the gentleman knows it and he cannot dodge it.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not propose the gentleman shall come here and assert that which does not exist. There has been no request to me for the yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. SPARKS. Does the gentleman insinuate that this does not come from the Military Committee? If he does, he lies. That is all there is about it.

Mr. CLYMER. You cannot insult me, sir.
Mr. SPARKS made some further remarks, which were inaudible at the desk on account of the confusion and the rapping of the Chairman's gavel. He concluded by saying: I say I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to do what I can to pass that amendment, and no man shall dispute my word upon it without it being emphatically resented.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen must resume their seats, or the Chair will order the Sergeant-at-Arms to take them into custody.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have peace.

Mr. CONGER. I demand that the language of the gentleman from Illinois be taken down.

Mr. CLYMER. I trust not.
Mr. HAYES. Yes, let it be taken down.
The CHAIRMAN. Nothing can be done until the committee shall come to order. [After a pause, during which order was being restored.] The gentleman from Michigan will state for what purpose

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] used unparliamentary language on this floor, and I ask that it be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clauses 4 and 5 of Rule

The Clerk read as follows:

4. If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will indicate what words are excepted to.

Mr. CONGER. The language of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] to which I refer, as far as I could hear in the confusion, charged the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] with being a liar. That was his language, if I was not mistaken. Whether it was conditional or absolute I could not understand; but I think it is proper that the language should be reported to the committee that we may know what was said.

Mr. McLANE. Reported to the House, you mean?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say there was so much confusion at the time the words excepted to were spoken that the Chair does not know what was said.

Mr. WILBER. The reporters do, I guess.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must appeal to the reporters for what was said. The Chair was rapping the gavel and could not hear. The words will be written out by the reporter. [After a pause.] The Clerk will now read the transcript of the reporter's notes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Sparks. Does the gentleman insinuate that this does not come from the Committee on Military Affairs† If he does, he lies. That is all there is about it. Mr. Clymer. You cannot insult me, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. Read what follows. The CHAIRMAN. The reporters inform the Chair that that is all of the language of the gentleman from Illinois that they could hear of the language of the gentleman from Illinois that they could hear in the confusion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point that it becomes the duty of the presiding officer to report to the House, with the Speaker in the chair, the words excepted to. Any proceeding that may follow must be not in the Committee of the Whole but in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule, as the Chair understands it, is that if disorderly conduct occurs in the Committee of the Whole or language is used to which exception is taken, it becomes the duty of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to report the disorderly conduct or the language to which exception is taken to the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is exactly as I understand. I do not think it is necessary to move that the committee rise. It becomes the duty it is necessary to move that the committee rise. It becomes the duty of the presiding officer to have the committee rise without a motion. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that a motion is necessary that the committee rise. Otherwise it would devolve upon the chairman of the committee to determine that the language was such as should be reported to the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. SPARKS rose.

Mr. CONGER. One word upon that proposition. It seems to me that that is assigning to the Committee of the Whole the duty of the Chair to preserve order and decide questions of order. If it be left to the committee to say whether in fulfillment of this rule the committee shall rise, that takes away in my judgment from the chairman the duty which rests upon him to decide the question of order, and whether anything irregular or improper has occurred that fairly comes within that rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that, as he understands the general parliamentary law upon this subject, a committee of the House has no right to pass upon the conduct of any of its members; and if any disorder occurs in one of the committees of the House or in the Committee of the Whole House it is the duty of the committee to report the facts to the House, and it is the duty of the House to decide what action shall be taken in reference to it. That is not only the general parliamentary law, but it is the rule of the House itself. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has moved that the committee rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only made that motion because I understood the Chairman to rule that such a motion was necessary. I myself think that no such motion is necessary; and it seems to me that the reason of the opinion I express would be found in this:

It would always be within the power of a majority of the Committee of the Whole to prevent a minority here from enforcing the rules of decorum simply by mere force of votes. Now, let me call attention to the language of the rule:

It a member is called to order for words speken in debate the number calling.

If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to—

That has been done-and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk-

That has been done, too-and read aloud to the House

Now you, sir, as the presiding officer of this committee, have reached the point where there is only one other duty for you to do; that is for you to report to the House what has happened in this committee, and then the House will proceed to act upon it.

Mr. McLANE. Will the gentleman allow me to call his atten-

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.
Mr. McLANE. These rules in their text are rules for the House.
Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.
Mr. McLANE. Therefore when they recite that "the words shall be taken down and read aloud to the House," it is supposed that the

be taken down and read aloud to the House," it is supposed that the words were spoken in the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, no.

Mr. MCLANE. Surely that is so.

Mr. GARFIELD. The language is, "words spoken in debate."
Everybody knows that debate is largely in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCLANE. One moment.

Mr. COVERT. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has the floor on the subject of a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair will first hear him.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the gentleman from Maryland [Mr.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] desires to make an inquiry of me.

Mr. McLane. The point I want to make of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Garfield] is that the text of the rules shows that they one can charter of the House; and certainly they prescribe that when the rules of decorum have been transgressed the words shall be taken down and reported to the House. Now, when such words are spoken in Committee of the Whole House, then the Committee of the Whole House should act precisely as the House should act—that is, the words are to be taken down by the Clerk and read to the Committee of the Whole Whole.

Mr. GARFIELD. That has been done.
Mr. McLANE. And the Committee of the Whole should take no action until, as a Committee of the Whole, they find they cannot apply any remedy to the case.
Mr. GARFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that they know that in advance.

Mr. McLANE. I do not think so at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee of the Whole cannot apply any remedy.

Mr. McLANE. Suppose the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] should withdraw the offensive language used?

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the Committee of the Whole any power whatever to settle a controversy between members? That is within the power of the House alone.

Mr. McLANE. I differ entirely with the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will read from page 220 of the Digest of the Rules of the House:

A committee cannot punish a breach of order in the House. It can only rise and report it to the House, who may proceed to punish.

That is all the Committee of the Whole can do. Now we have reached a stage where the words objected to have been written down and read aloud, and the demand has been made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that we proceed under the rule. Now, the next step under the rules is that these words shall be reported to the House. Here is the language of the Digest:

Disorderly words spoken in a committee must be written down as in the House, but the committee can only report them to the House for animadversion.

That shows that we have now in Committee of the Whole gone just as far as the committee has any power to go. There remains nothing else for the chairman of this committee to do than what he would do if he found himself without a quorum in the committee. Suppose the chairman of the Committee of the Whole found that there was no quorum, he would be obliged to call the Speaker to the chair and report the fact to the Speaker of the House. I will withdraw my motion that the committee now rise, for I want a decision on this point. on this point.

Mr. ATKINS. It seems to me that this matter might be adjusted without all this construction of the rules, &c., if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] will make a statement.

Mr. McLane. Right here in committee.
Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman will do it.
Mr. McLane. It ought never to go further than the committee, and if it be reported to the House at all it should only be when the committee are obliged to report to the House for some summary pro-ceeding to preserve order or censure those who have transgressed its

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] having been called to order, cannot proceed to address the committee now except by unanimous consent of the committee

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to make a statement.

Mr. COVERT and others objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The only doubt the Chair has upon the subject is whether it is his duty at once to call the Speaker to the chair, or whether the committee must by a majority vote decide to rise and report this matter to the House. The Chair is clear upon the point that the committee has no jurisdiction to decide upon the question, and if acted upon at all it must be reported to the House.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Does it require unanimous consent to allow the gentleman from Illinois to make a statement to the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemar, having been called to order for disorderly language, cannot proceed to speak unless the committee

Mr. ATKINS. Does it require unanimous consent?
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A majority can give the leave.
The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the House first to determine

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that the first question for the Chair to determine is whether the Committee of the Whole has jurisdiction at all to hear anything on the subject. If this committee has not jurisdiction to hear anything on the subject, it cannot receive an apology.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the committee cannot decide upon the question.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. I want to know whether the Chair entertains the motion that the committee rise, or whether he holds that upon his own motion he is authorized to report this matter to the Hous

The CHARMAN. That is the point in question.
Mr. COX. How does the Chair decide? We may have debate on the point all day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio withdrew the motion that the committee rise and report the matter to the House. Chair will entertain that motion if any gentlemen will renew it.

Mr. COVERT. I renew that motion.

Mr. COX. The Chair is bound at any rate to report the matter to the House on application of any member.

The motion of Mr. COVERT was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed

Mr. SPRINGER (chairman of the Committee of the Whole) said: The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union have, according to order, had under consideration House bill No. 5523, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. In the discussion on that bill the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] made use of landard the state of the Whole have a support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. In the discussion on that bill the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] made use of landard the state of the Whole House on the state of the Union have, according to order, had under consideration House bill No. 5523, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. guage which was alleged by another member to be disorderly; and I have been instructed by the committee to report the language to the House. The SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that pending the consideration of the Army appropriation bill certain language deemed to be unparliamentary has been used, and the Committee of the Whole has directed that this language be reported to the House. The language will now be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Sparks. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insinuate that this does not come from the Committee on Military Affairs? If he does, he lies. That is all there is about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that two clauses of Rule XIV which relate to such matters as have occurred be now read.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to have read first the provisions of the rule which are applicable; and then he will direct attention to a clause of that rule which would enable the gentleman to make an explanation if he so desires.

Mr. SPARKS. I want to have read the language preceding what has just been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the gentleman from Illinois an opportunity under the rules to be heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as Joliows:

4. If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

Mr. AUKINS. I rise to a populsementary in gainer.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order that both gentlemen be allowed to make an explanation to the House?

The SPEAKER. The rule contains a provision, to which the Chair was about to direct attention, that "on motion of another member," a gentleman whose language is called in question under such circumstances as now exist shall be allowed "to explain."

stances as now exist shall be allowed "to explain."

Mr. ATKINS. I make that motion.

Mr. FRYE. I object to the motion in the form in which the gentleman stated it a moment ago—that both gentlemen be permitted to explain. Only one gentleman is charged with having used unparliamentary language.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well; I make the motion that the gentleman alluded to be allowed to make an explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] moves that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] be allowed to explain.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, I want, if I can get it, the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] immediately preceding whatever of difficulty occurred between us. I ask the reporters to furnish it, that it may be read at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to say I have received no such request from that committee. When it is submitted to me, I will determine upon it.

Mr. SPARKS. I declare to the gentleman this comes from that committee; and I am authorized to demand this thing; and the gentleman knows it, and cannot dodge

Mr. CLYMER. I do not propose the gentleman shall come here and assert that which does not exist. There has been no request to me for the yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. SPARKS. Now, Mr. Speaker, there was much confusion here, and as members of the House know, in writing out anything of this kind, errors frequently occur. For my own part I am willing frankly to admit that I was laboring under some excitement at the time. do not know that I am more excitable than other men. I did understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that I was not only not warranted in my action by the committee over which I have the honor to preside, but to insinuate that I was trying to deceive the House or to cheat the House and to falsify the action of the committee, and in response to that allegation, which no man of proper spirit would for a moment submit to, I used the language I did.

I want to say one word further. Since I have been a member of this House, though at times I may have manifested some impatience or impulsiveness, I have on all occasions endeavored to be courteous, fair, benerable, and projects in manifested. pulsiveness, I have on all occasions endeavored to be courteous, fair, honorable, and upright in my intercourse with my compeers around me. If I have not done so I am quite sure, sir, that the head and not the heart has failed. I have tried to be gentlemanly to those around me. I will not bear insult from others without resenting it. I would scorn to insult another man causelessly. No brave man will insult his fellow-man needlessly nor at all, except under some excitement or for just cause; and when he does, it is his duty to admit it.

If I have been in error; if I have mistaken the gentleman from Pennsylvania; if he did not charge or insinuate I was trying to deceive this House, or to misrepresent the facts, as I understood him to do, I want it distinctly understood that the language I used toward him was unwarranted, and I will recall it. But if he did thus charge me with this wrong, I want it known that no power under the sun will get me to withdraw it. I did so understand him. Now, if I mistook him I owe him and the House an apology.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have one further word. The gentleman from him I owe him and the House an apology.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have one further word. The gentleman from Pennsylvania among my compeers in this House has been my personal friend. We served two years together on the Committee on Appropriations of this House, and have been intimately associated. There is no earthly inducement why I should have any unkind feeling toward him, nor would I do him any injustice, and if I have violated the rule of the House it is my duty and my pleasure to make proper toward him, nor would I do him any injustice, and if I have violated the rules of the House it is my duty and my pleasure to make proper amends to it. With this statement, I have done.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Speaker, the language which I used has been correctly reported, and, when read in a cool moment, no such construction could possibly be put upon it as the gentleman from Illinois imagines it to be capable of. I certainly intended only to say that no request had come to me from the Military Committee that I should permit a vote by year and nays in the House on this proposition. I did not pretend to say, sir, the gentleman from Illinois was misrepresenting his committee in offering it; but I did say, what I reassert, that there was no request from the Committee on Military Affairs, nor from the gentleman from Illinois himself, that I should permit a vote in the House. I understood it was to be offered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for action, but that did not carry with it, by intimation, the idea that if defeated there a vote in the House was to be allowed. No request of that there a vote in the House was to be allowed. No request of that nature had been made to me by any one; and, as I am but the organ of the committee having charge of the bill in the House, I did not feel, until I had gathered further information on the subject, I could assent to the demand of the gentleman from Illinois.

Here, sir, I leave it. I felt that when the excitement of the moment was over, when the gentleman from Illinois had time to read what I really said and understood it, he would do as he has done, what I really said and understood it, he would do as he has done, and as a man of honor and gentleman, as he is, and friend of mine, as he has heretofore been, make that reparation which was demanded under the circumstances. He has done it and I am content.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Illinois has made his explanation to the House and offered an apology to the House and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the language used, having used it under a false impression, and, therefore, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. The point having been made in the committee and reported to this House with the accompanying language, that it was unparliamentary language, improper language, I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

of the Chair.

Mr. ATKINS. Is the motion I submit debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the Chair thinks it better to listen.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the ruling of the Chair on the point of order made that the language of the gentleman from Illinois was unparliamentary. Then, of course, the question will be for the House to determine what shall be done in view of the entire refusal of the gentleman from Illinois to admit, under a certain contingency, if the language be ruled unparliamentary, to take it back and apologize for it. That question, I think, should be determined before we go back into committee. back into committee,

The SPEAKER. While the Chair's attention has been called by the gentleman from Michigan to the language used, and while the the gentleman from Michigan to the language used, and while the Chair, under the circumstances, might omit to rule on the language used, as he considers the words have practically been withdrawn, and would hope, by agreement between the two gentlemen, they might even be omitted from the RECORD, yet being called upon to decide whether the language used was parliamentary or not, the Chair would state distinctly his opinion that they are unparliamentary. He recognizes the fact, however, that an amicable adjustment has taken place, and therefore does not desire in any way whatever unnecessarily to revive any ill-feeling between members of the House. For that reason, he entertained the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask a question, whether that language is to appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer that question.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he insists upon retaining the language in the RECORD, to the disgrace of the RECORD.

Mr. SPARKS. I have no desire to retain it in the RECORD. I should grace of the Record.

Mr. SPARKS. I have no desire to retain it in the Record. I should prefer in fact that it would not appear.

Mr. CONGER. There is another point, Mr. Speaker, that I raised. I have no desire myself in any possible way to extend remarks upon this subject, and I have certainly no desire, of all gentlemen on that side of the House, to press anything against the gentleman from Illinois, as he well knows. But the gentleman did say while he withdrew anything offensive in his remarks, if his understanding was in error as to the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that he did assert and repeated the assertion that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania intended to have made the remark as he understood it, he had no apology to offer to anybody for having used such language rennsylvania intended to have made the remark as he understood it, he had no apology to offer to anybody for having used such language in the House. Now I desire to submit that the wrong was to the House, and to its proceedings, and its honor, if I may say so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will recollect that some time during the statement of the gentleman from Illinois he said distinctly that he regretted any offense, or language of similar import, to the House. The Chair thinks that in view of the facts that an apology has been made to the House, and that an amicable arrangement has been had between the gentlemen, the sooner the matter is allowed to drop the better.

Mr. CONGER. I was not aware that there was any apology of that kind used to the House.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I desire to offer the following resolution in connection with this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that Mr. Sparks, a member of this House from the State of Illinois, be, and he is hereby, under the censure of this House because of unparliamentary language in debate, and a gross violation of the rules of this House.

Mr. COX. I move to lay that resolution upon the table.
Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I desire to say
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order.
Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I desire to say that I offer the resolution without the slightest feeling against the gentleman from

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I made the point of order that this resolution cannot be entertained pending the motion of the genfleman from Tennessee unless the Speaker decides that it is a privileged motion.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, I am entitled to the floor on the point of order. My point of order is that there is a motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee now pending, and unless the Speaker decides this to be a privileged motion it cannot be in order while the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is pending.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina will observe that the rule seems to provide that questions of this character are to be decided without debate, if debate is objected to. Objection has been made. The gentleman from New York makes the motion to lay on the table the resolution submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina, and that motion the Chair entertained, and such motion is not debatable.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I submit that the gentleman

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I submit that the gentleman from New York had not the floor to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made the motion, and the Chair entertained it. The motion to lay on the table the resolution is not open to debate. The rule will be read.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. Then I demand the previous question on the resolution, and I would like to make one remark.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the latter clause of paragraph of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

If the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be hable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. Now, I desire to make just one

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the first clause of paragraph 4 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, without debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, Mr. Speaker—
Mr. COX. There is no debate on this as I understand it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, Mr. Speaked.

Mr. COX. There is no debate on this as I understand it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not making the slightest reference to the merits of the proposition, but I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the thing there to be settled "without debate" is whether the member who has been called to order may proceed or not. That is the question that must be settled without debate under the rule; but in the subsequent part of the rule it is provided that the House may censure the member or inflict such punishment upon him as it chooses for the violation of its rules. Now, the resolution him as it chooses for the violation of its rules. Now, the resolution introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina touches the question of censure. There is nothing in the rule which says that shall be decided without debate, and it would be strange if so grave a thing as censuring a member should be decided without debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inclines to think that the rule provides in a case where the Here is a resolution of the rule provides.

in a case where the House is appealed to and where the language of

in a case where the House is appealed to and where the language of this clause of the rule applies, it should be decided without debate; but the Chair entertains the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. The specific language in this fourth clause of the fourteenth rule is as to whether a member who has been called to order shall be allowed to proceed. Suppose somebody calls him to order, and immediately the question is raised, is he out of order, and shall he be allowed to proceed or not. That we have got to decide without debate; but that point has been already passed. The Speaker has decided that, and declares the language is not in order. Now a member rises and moves something in the nature of punishment on account of the decision of the Chair, and there is no intimation in the rule that this proposition in the nature of punishment is tion in the rule that this proposition in the nature of punishment is not debatable.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I desire to make a single remark. I did not hear distinctly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] in his explanation; but as I understood it, it amounted to

Mr. McMILLIN. I object to debate.
Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. That he declined to apologize to this House. If that be true, then I shall insist upon the resolution.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] moves to lay the resolution on the table.
Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order. I had demanded the previous question.
The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table may be made notwithstanding the gentleman has demanded the previous question.
Mr. McMILLIN. How does it happen that the gentleman from North Carolina is still debating the question if he demanded the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The demand for the previous question does not prevent the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I demand the yeas and nays on

Mr. RUSSELL, or North Carolina. I demand the year and mays on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before that demand is insisted on, I would like to say that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. RUSSELL] has misapprehended the gentleman from Illinois. I do understand the gentleman from Illinois to have apologized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated he did.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want the gentleman from North Carolina to be seemed of that so that we may says the time of the roll-call.

assured of that, so that we may save the time of the roll-call.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to remark that everything turns on the question of whether the apology was conditional or absolute. I ask that the apology itself be read that we may know what we have to vote upon. If it be an absolute apology, there need be no division; if it be a conditional one, there should be.

Mr. COX. Is not that debate?

Mr. SCALES. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Illinois intended that the applicacy should be sufficient so far as the House was tended that the apology should be sufficient so far as the House was Mr. COX.

Mr. COX. I insist on my motion.
Mr. GARFIELD. I ask to have read the subject-matter of the gentleman's statement to which the resolution relates.

tleman's statement to which the resolution relates.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman's statement will be read. If the apology was made as understood by the Chair, there will be no disposition on the part of any gentleman to press this matter to a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the language is not written out as yet by the reporters. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois as making a full and sufficient reparation to the House, and also to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]
Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair says there was an absolute apology, and nobody denies it, that satisfies me.

Mr. SPARKS. I desire to say a word, if I can now get the attention of the House. I believe I stated before that I thought I was brave enough and fair enough to put myself always right on any oc-brave enough and fair enough to put myself always right on any oc casion, so far as I understood what was right. I stated that so far as the gentleman from Pennsylvania was concerned, if I understood his language aright, I certainly had nothing to take back—that is, if it was as I understood him; but if it were otherwise, I certainly owed an apology to him. Now the question occurs, is that language under any circumstances or provocation under our rules competent in this House? I think not, and I want to impress that fact upon the brethren. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Mr. SPARKS. I repeat I think not; and thinking not, I am brave enough to withdraw it.

Mr. GARFIELD. After that statement I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw his resolution.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I withdraw the resolution.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that in the absence of the Vice-President the Senate had chosen the Hon. ALLEN G. THURMAN, a Senator of the United States from Ohio, as President of the Senate pro tempore.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) providing for payment of wages to employés in the Government Printing-Office for legal holidays.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Springer in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as a proviso after line 71.

Mr. CLYMER. Not knowing what the amendment is, I reserve all points of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The GIEFK read as follows:

Provided, That acting assistant surgeons, employed as such in the Army of the United States, who have served continuously in that capacity five years or more, shall, upon application, be granted one month's leave of absence for each year's service with full pay, upon condition that the applicant shall, during such absence, attend a course of lectures at some standard college of medicine; after which such acting assistant surgeon shall be allowed, upon application, an examination before the Army medical board, and if reported by said board to be in all respects qualified, the President shall appoint and commission him an assistant surgeon in the Army of the United States, in the same manner as such officers are now appointed and commissioned.

Mr. CLYMER. I suppose it is not necessary that I should press the point of order on the Chair. The amendment clearly contains an increase. It provides for a five months' leave after five years' service with full pay.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on the point of order?
Mr. CLYMER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

Subsistence Department:

For subsistence of 25,000 enlisted men, 120 additional half-rations for sergeants and corporals of ordnance, enlisted men of the Signal Service, women to companies, daundresses,) 1,875 civilian employés, 125 contract surgeons, 200 hospital matrons, 110 military convicts, and 500 prisoners of war, (Indians,) in all, 10,755,820 rations, at twenty cents each; for difference between cost of rations and commutation thereof for detailed men, and for enlisted men and recruits at recruiting stations, and for cost of hot coffee and cooked rations for troops traveling on cars; for subsistence stores for Indians visiting military posts, and Indians employed without pay as scouts and guides, $2,250,000; of which amount $300,000 shall be available from and after the passage of this act for the purchase of stores necessary to be transported to distant posts in advance of the 30th of June, 1880: Provided, That to the cost of all stores and other articles sold to officers and men, except tobacco, as provided for in section 1149 of the Revised Statutes, 10 per cent. shall be added to cover wastage, transportation, and other incidental charges, save that subsistence supplies may be sold to companies, detachments, and hospitals at cost prices, not including cost of transportation, upon the certificate of an officer commanding a company or detachment or in charge of a hospital that the supplies are necessary for the exclusive use of such company, detachment, or hospital: Provided further, That commutation, in lieu of rations in kind, shall be paid to enlisted men only, under regulations made by the Secretary of War, and at not exceeding the following rates per diem, and under the following circumstances: Seventy-five cents when traveling under orders and it is impracticable to cook their rations or carry cooked rations; seventy-five cents when stationed where it is impracticable to draw rations in kind from the Subsistence Department, or wh

Mr. UPSON. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the last proviso, as follows:

Provided further. That commutation, in lieu of rations in kind, shall be paid to enlisted men only, under regulations made by the Secretary of War, and at not exceeding the following rates per diem, and under the following circumstances: Seventy-five cents when traveling under orders, and it is impracticable to cook their rations or carry cooked rations; seventy-five cents when stationed where it is impracticable to draw rations in kind from the Subsistence Department, or where there may be no opportunity of messing; and twenty-five cents while on furlough by competent authority.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. Upson.

Mr. CLYMER. A communication from the Secretary of War has been received by the Speaker of the House and by him submitted to the Committee on Appropriations this morning. It has not yet been submitted to me as the member of that committee in charge of this bill. That communication expresses the views of the Secretary of war with reference to this proviso. In justice to him and in order that this committee may fully understand what his opinion is, I desire that it may be read before I proceed to discuss the proposed amendment. I think it must be on the Speaker's table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the paper to which the gentleman alludes was referred to the Committee on Appropriations this morning in the House.

the gentleman and des was referred to the Committee on Appropriations this morning in the House.

Mr. CLYMER. It has not yet reached the committee; probably it is in the hands of the distributing clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will send for it.

Mr. CLYMER. I will endeavor to state what this proviso, if adopted, will effect

Mr. McMillin. I desire to reserve all points of order upon the amendment, and with that understanding I am willing the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] shall proceed to discuss it.

Mr. CLYMER. It is well known that there is a class of men in the Departments here and at headquarters and elsewhere known as "general-service men;" men who are enlisted as soldiers, not for the purpose of serving in the field but to serve as clerks. I think there are in this city some 350 men of that description. I may be in error in regard to the number, but I have a statement here which shows the number. [Referring to a manuscript.]

There are in this city 352 of such men, I believe, distributed among the various Departments. There are 30 in the War Department proper; 127 in the Adjutant-General's Office; 14 in the Office of the Chief of Engineers; 20 in the Surgeon-General's Office; 10 in the Office of the Chief of Ordnance; 8 with the Chief Signal Officer; 5 in the Army Dispensary at Washington; 8 in the Office of the Geographical Survey; 4 at the headquarters of the Military Division; 1 engaged in general recruiting service in New York; and 195 and I engaged in general recruiting service in New York; and 125 engaged in the Signal Service throughout the country. Then there are some 500 engaged in other service throughout the country.

Under an order of the War Department, which has been repeatedly sanctioned in appropriation bills, these men, instead of drawing twenty cents a day for rations, have their rations commuted at the rate of a dollar a day. They are also allowed commutations for quarters, commutations for clothing, for subsistence, for fuel, and extra-duty pay. Some of them, those of the rank of sergeant, receive pay amounting to $1,102.86 per year. This is made up, with other items, by commutation of subsistence in this city amounting to a dollar a day.

The Commissary-General, in repeated interviews with the sub-com mittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of this bill, suggested that commutation of subsistence at the rate of a dollar a day was excessive; that men here on this extra duty in this city should not receive more than seventy-five cents a day. It is for the Committee of the Whole to determine whether they ought to receive the greater or the smaller sum.

Here is a statement of the number of general-service men and where serving:

Total to whom $1 per day for commutation of rations is to be allowed... 352

Enlisted men on duty at headquarters military divisions and departments....
Enlisted men on duty at headquarters recruiting service at New York and San Francisco
Enlisted men in Signal-Service throughout the country
Enlisted men in Signal-Service as repairmen
Enlisted men on detached duty, traveling...

Total to whom seventy-five cents per day for commutation of rations is to be allowed.....

There is a class of men who are put on detached duty, traveling, &c. This proviso will give them seventy-five cents a day, the same sum which they now receive. The whole proviso was submitted to sum which they now receive. The whole proviso was submitted to us by the Commissary-General, and he desired that that class of men, on detached duty, &c., should have their commutation raised to $1 a day instead of seventy-five cents a day, as it is now by law. The committee, not agreeing to that, has left the provision for this at the same amount now allowed by the order of the Secretary of War.

The proviso further allows twenty-five cents a day in addition to the secretary of the secretary o their rations to private soldiers who are on furlough. After this statement I ask that the letter of the Secretary of War be read, as it will present the other side of the case.

Mr. McMILLIN. Before the gentleman takes his seat I desire to say that, if I understand him correctly, should this provise be stricken out there will be a larger amount given for this purpose than would be given by the proviso. Am I correct?

Mr. HAWLEY. It will leave the law as it is now.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it would be an increase over the amount prowided by the bill.

Mr. CLYMER. Unquestionably it would.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I insist upon my point of order, and it is not necessary to take up time by reading the communication of the not necessary to take up time by reading the communication of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BAKER. The point of order is certainly not well taken. The motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] is simply to strike out this proviso, and if adopted it will leave the law to remain as it now is. It is only where a proposition is made to change existing law that a point of order would lie.

Mr. McMILLIN. But in determining a point of order, you must determine it by the bill before the House, and not by the law as it exists.

Mr. WHITE. Not at all. The point of order might be made against the provision reported by the committee, but clearly it cannot be made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. UPSON.] It is the provision reported by the committee which proposes to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order not having been raised against the proviso in the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations, which proviso, if enacted into a law, would change existing law, the Chair is of the opinion that it does not lie against the motion to strike out such proviso, because that would not change existing law. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BAKER. Let the letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., April 5, 1880.

Washington, D. C., April 5, 1880.

The Secretary of War has the honor to ask the attentive consideration of Congress to the following remarks upon that part of the Army appropriation bill which may be found under the head of "Subsistence Department," commencing at line 163. It is therein provided, in substance, that commutation, in lieu of rations in kind, shall be paid to enlisted men only, under regulations made by the Secretary of War, and at not exceeding the following rates per diem, and under the following circumstances:

First. Seventy-five cents when traveling under orders, or it is impossible to cook their rations or carry cooked rations.

Second. Seventy-five cents when stationed where it is impracticable to draw rations in kind from the Subsistence Department, or where there may be no opportunity of messing.

Heretofore in both the classes above cited the regulations and laws have authorized the Secretary of War to fix the rate of commutation according to the requirements of the case, not only as to enlisted men but also to civil employés who may be entitled to draw a ration. This bill excludes the latter class (civilians) altogether.

ments of the case, not only as to enlisted men but also to civil employés who may be entitled to draw a ration. This bill excludes the latter class (civilians) altogether.

The rule has been that when enlisted men have traveled under orders, without having been supplied with rations in kind, they have been reimbursed their expenses for meals, in such reasonable limited amount as the facts would warrant, having in view the expenses which were actually incurred by the claimant.

Enlisted men detailed at particular stations for the performance of clerical and other duty, where it is impracticable to draw rations in kind, the Secretary of War has granted them commutation of rations based upon the cost of living at the point where they may be stationed. So much as to existing practice.

I. The proposed allowance to soldiers traveling under orders at seventy-five cents a day is manifestly insufficient. In the country west of the Mississippi River, where most of such traveling is done, it is notorious that it costs much more than said sum to procure daily subsistence, as each meal costs that or more. The proposed allowance, if traveling by rail, would give a man one meal a day, and if traveling by stage west of Omaha not even that. The clause would operate as a pecuniary punishment upon every enlisted man ordered upon the performance of duties in which he was not supplied with rations in kind, thus inflicting a hardship upon a class whose compensation is not sufficient to pay such expenses.

The whole matter has ever been under the control of the Secretary of War, to determine the sum to be paid upon the merits of each class of cases as they arose. II. As to the second clause it may be well to say that it involves a reduction of the allowance now authorized to every man who is on duty as a general-service clerk, and to all the men of the Signal Corps stationed at the seat of Government, and to many of the men detailed as clerks at division and department headquarters. Congress has limited the number of those men who s

Of the House of Representatives.

ALEX. RAMSEY, Secretary of War.

Mr. CLYMER. It will be perceived by this communication that the Secretary of War thinks the reduction of the pay of these enlisted men in the general service would be wrong; that their present pay is not in excess of what is right. I beg leave now to submit a statement, carefully prepared, with explanatory notes, of the pay of this class of public servants.

The proposed reduction of pay would be a saving to the Government of something more than $88 a day, nearly $30,000 a year. Whether it would be just to make this reduction the Committee of the Whole should decide impartially. I think the whole error is in the fact that enlisted men, men credited to the Army, are employed to do clerical duty instead of the Government employing regular clerks. I believe this practice is an injury to the public service. Under it we may get clerical work done more cheaply than we could otherwise, but the Army is depleted to the extent of the number of these general-service men. The Army is credited with three hundred and fifty men who have never been in its ranks, and who, if called to serve there, would plead that they had enlisted under an agreement that they should be employed as clerks at headquarters in this city or else-

Mr. ATKINS. Is it not a fact that these men all prefer to stay where they are rather than to go into the ranks of the Army?

Mr. CLYMER. Of course they would not want to go into the ranks.

They never enlisted for that purpose

Mr. ATKINS. That settles the whole question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it not true that these men enlisted because it was expected that they would be detailed to do this character of Mr. CLYMER. Unquestionably that was the agreement.

Mr. ATKINS. I suppose that is true.
Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether these men were not enlisted for this service and with the understanding at the time that they would receive this commutation of $1 a day.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not know about that.

Mr. CLYMER. There is no law for the enlistment of men for this kind of service. There is a law that permits soldiers to be used as clerks in the different Departments here, fixing the number for

Mr. CALKINS. There was a provision of law, if it is not the law now, that persons might be enlisted for this special service.

Mr. CLYMER. That was during the war.

Mr. CALKINS. And since the war.

Mr. CALKINS. And since the war.
Mr. CLYMER. It is no longer the law; it is a regulation.
Mr. CALKINS. I beg to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that these enlisted men who are detailed for clerical duty in the War Department have always been allowed to resign their positions and be mustered out under a provision of law, as I have always understood derstood.

Mr. CLYMER. But, as I understand the case, and we examined it very fully—

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman allow me one word further? I know it to be a fact (and so I have no doubt does the gentleman) that many of these men accepted these places instead of clerkships under general appointments.

Mr. CLYMER. No, I do not know that; I do not so understand.

I only know that there is a provision of law permitting a certain number of these enlisted men, as they are termed, to serve in the Quartermaster's Department and elsewhere.

Mr. CALKINS. In the Engineer Department a great many of these men have served for years, and their services are almost indispensable, as they are familiar with the routine work there, which is peculiar. It would, in my judgment, be a very serious detriment to the interests of the Government to dispense with their services.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I do not understand any one as claiming that the clerks of this class are overpaid. On the contrary, I believe it is conceded on all sides that other clerks not in the military service, doing work side by side with these very men, are receiving a higher rate of compensation than these clerks, whose salary will in effect be reduced by reducing the amount of this commutation. Now let me duced by reducing the amount of this commutation. Now let me show how the position of these men, who while in the military service are discharging this clerical duty, differs from the position of other clerks. How is it with these other clerks? You reduce their salary and they have the right to resign at any time they please; when you say you will pay them only so much they have the right to leave the Department; but so far as this class of service is concerned, these men are enlisted for one, two, three, four, or five years. They enlisted with a full knowledge of the amount they were to receive; and when you reduce their salary they have no right to resign; you might reduce it to a nominal amount, and yet they are compelled to render these services. Isay it is unjust toward them. This is in the nature of contract between them and the Government, and the amount which the Government pledged itself to pay them at the time when which the Government pledged itself to pay them at the time when they enlisted and were mustered in is the amount which the Government should continue to pay them so long as they remain in the

As has been well said, this saves us nothing. For, if you muster them out you will have to increase the clerical force and pay a larger compensation for other clerks who may be engaged to discharge the duties

Mr. UPSON. In support of my motion to strike out I desire to have read an extract from the letter of the Adjutant-General of the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Dear Sir: * * * On pages 5 and 6, lines 103 to 112, are entirely new legislation which in my opinion is not only unnecessary but exceedingly ill-advised. The existing regulations for the Army cover all the essential points in this proposed legislation, and it is the rule by which such allowances are governed. But a few circumstances arise where an enlisted man may be sent in pursuit of a deserter, or with some important dispatch, where seventy-five cents a day would not more than half cover his actual expenses. Two such cases are remembered where after exhausting the regulation allowance, seventy-five cents a day, and spending all his own private means to subsist himself, a soldier was forced to return without accomplishing his mission, for want of money.

Again, under the sanction of general appropriations and laws the Secretary of War has assigned a commutation of $1 a day in lieu of rations in kind to enlisted men doing the duties of clerks in the War Department and at military division and department headquarters. The entire compensation of these clerks, who do the same duties precisely as civilian clerks at $1.200 per year, does not exceed $350 a year. It would be unjust to take from them, in this indirect way, so large a portion of their hard-earned salary. This proposed legislation, which I append below, would utterly deprive the Secretary of War of all the discretion which he ought properly to exercise in matters of this kind. He does not confide in any other person the exercise of this discretion, and therefore it cannot be open to abuse. I therefore earnestly hope the provision will be stricken out of the appropriation bill.

Very respectfully and truly yours,

E. D. TOWNSEND,

E. D. TOWNSEND, Adjutant-General.

Hon. C. UPSON,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask who put that proviso in?
Mr. CLYMER. The committee did, after due deliberation.

Mr. McCOOK. On what information?

Mr. CLYMER. At the request of the Commissary-General, Macfeely, and I believe the proviso should not be stricken out. That is my judgment.

Mr. McCOOK. What does General Macfeely know about it?

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, withdrew his formal amend-

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I renew it; and I wish to say a word about this proviso. The Committee on Appropriations were not unanimous, by any means, in reporting this to the House, and I wish, if I can, to break the force of the recommendation of the Commissary-General by reference to some facts. This amendment cuts down three General by reference to some facts. This amendment cuts down three hundred and fifty-two employés in the War Department, who, as stated by the gentleman from Texas, are paid on the average of $950 a year, although clerks doing precisely the same duty alongside of them receive $1,200 a year. Because these men receive $250 a year less than other clerks who do no more or any higher grade of duty certainly cannot be put forward as any good reason why their pay should be still further reduced $85 each per annum. If it is necessary to keep some and discharge others, why not retain the nine-hundred-and-fifty-dollar clerks and discharge the twelve-hundred-dollar clerks, or those who receive $250 a year more?

As I understand it, the Commissary-General did make a recommendation in favor of this reduction, but he coupled with it a recommendation that fifty enlisted men who received only seventy-five cents a day as commutation should have that amount increased to a dollar a day. In other words, under that recommendation, he would cut off three hundred and fifty-two men who are getting a dollar a day for commutation of rations in order to raise fifty men from seventy-five cents to $1. I do not know whether that is a selfish recommendation or not, but I do know the object sought cannot be accomplished under the proviso contained in this bill; and when the committee understand all the facts in the case I am sure there will be no question about the propriety of striking it out. I hope the motion will be agreed to.

Mr. UPSON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he is not satisfied that seventy-five cents a day is not sufficient for detailed enlisted men in the Army west of the Mississippi River to purchase their subsistence?

Mr. CLYMER. It would be after all only an expression of my opinion, but it seems to me seventy-five cents a day or $4.50 a week to enlisted men for subsistence is sufficient. I think they ought to get along with that.

But I ask to have read the recommendation of the Commissary-General on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

In compliance with your verbal request, I transmit herewith, in the form of proviso to be attached to the appropriation bill, what may be considered my views as to the allowance of commutation to enlisted men in lieu of rations in kind, and as to the several classes of men to whom commutation should be given.

The Army Regulations of 1857 fixed the rate of travel allowance to enlisted men for subsistence at seventy-five cents per day. My opinion is that $1 per day is not at this time in excess of the average cost per diem of meals throughout the country, and enlisted men, traveling on detached duty, when it is impracticable to cook rations or carry cooked rations, should be enabled to purchase subsistence in the mode in which ordinary travelers usually procure their meals.

The ration of a soldier stationed in a city, with no opportunity of messing, should be commuted at not exceeding seventy-five cents per day. This price was fixed by the War Department in 1857, but in 1863 the commutation in this city was increased to $1.

The ration of a soldier to whom a furlough has been granted should be commuted during the period of his furlough at not exceeding twenty-five cents. This price was fixed by the War Department in 1865.

The question recurred on Mr. UPSON's motion to strike out the pro-

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 33. So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I make no further opposition, and will have a vote in the House on this proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical Department:
For purchase of medical and hospital supplies, medical care and treatment of officers and soldiers on detached duty, expenses of purveying depots, advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $200,000.

and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $200,000.

Mr. McLane. I move to reduce the appropriation $1 for that item. My idea is, Mr. Chairman, frankly stated, to go back again to the item providing for the civil surgeons, or, as they are known in this bill, the contract surgeons. I do not think justice has been done to the Surgeon-General's Department in this debate. This morning, when we left that branch of the bill, there was very little, indeed no opportunity to examine the matter in its details. I desire now to state that I do not know in the whole public service of a more efficient or faithful officer than the present Surgeon-General of the Army; and certainly honorable gentlemen representing the Committee on Military Affairs left an impression on our minds that there was not due economy in so far as the civil surgeons employed in the Army are concerned. concerned.

Now, I have carefully analyzed the letter which was read on yester-day from the Surgeon-General's Department, and from that analysis I am satisfied that the entire military force of surgeons is fully occupied and that there is a manifest vacancy in that Department which calls for a certain number of contract surgeons, and which made it calls for a certain number of contract surgeons, and which made it necessary to employ those who have heretofore been employed. Every man is properly accounted for in this letter of the Surgeon-General. When you take the whole number available for duty, one hundred and thirty, and then take the military posts at which more than one are constantly employed, and take that small item of twelve surgeons serving with detachments of the Army in the field at this present moment there will be a deficiency of near one hundred that must be supplied from the contract surgeons if supplied at all.

I am very well aware that there are nearly one hundred and eighty surgeons always on the rolls, but the report of the Surgeon-General shows that there are only one hundred and thirty available for duty; and believing, as I do, the statement of that officer to be perfectly and believing, as I do, the statement of that officer to be perfectly reliable, I take this one hundred and thirty as my basis, and all over one hundred and thirty must be supplied from the civil or contract

One word more. It is alleged that there are an undue number of Army surgeons in the city of Washington, but it must be remembered that there are a considerable number employed in the work that Congress has made necessary; that is, in the publication of the Medical and Surgical History of the War and in the preparation of medical statistics. There are over ten employed on these miscellaneous duties, including the National Medical Library and Museum.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not now.

Mr. McLANE. Well, I do not know the number exactly now, but I am in the main correct.

Mr. KELLEY. There are only eight in Washington, and only three

Mr. KELLEY. There are only eight in Washington, and only three in that special department.

Mr. McLANE. At all events, I am convinced from this analysis that there will be a large number required to be employed from the civil list, to replace the regular Army surgeons on special duty, and I know no officer in the Army upon whose judgment and discretion I would more cheerfully rely than upon that of the present Surgeon-General, whose integrity and fidelity as well as whose intelligence has been illustrated by a long and active service of five and thirty years.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DIBRELL. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland withdraw his amendment?

his amendment? Mr. DIBRELL.

Mr. DIBRELL. I wish to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this question is entirely out of order. It relates to another branch of the bill which has been

Mr. DIBRELL. I think I ought to be heard, as the gentleman from Maryland has been allowed to discuss the matter.

Mr. SPARKS. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The subject-matter of this discussion has been already considered and passed over in the committee in previous stages of the bill, and therefore it is not in order at this time.

stages of the bill, and therefore it is not in order at this time.

Mr. BLOUNT. As the gentleman from Maryland has been allowed to refer to the matter, I think it is only fair that the gentleman from Tennessee should have the right to reply to him.

Mr. CLYMER. Let him be heard.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman ought to be heard.

Mr. DIBRELL. I will not detain the committee but a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. Chairman, I made my statement as to the number of posts and the number of surgeons from the Army Register, which was furnished to the Committee on Military Affairs by the Secretary of War, and I am satisfied that it was correct.

Mr. McCOID. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DIBRELL. And the gentleman himself is aware that a large number of the surgeons of the Army are not on duty.

Mr. McCOID. I insist upon my point of order. I insist that the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. DIBRELL. The gentleman seems to be very sensitive on this subject now. I had a notion when this part of the bill was under consideration to offer an amendment providing for five hundred of these contract surgeons and to station two hundred and fifty of them in Washington City, and I venture to say he will do it if we give him the money. Now, as you are so sensitive you can go on with your bill.

Mr. McLANE. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

For the Army Medical Museum, and for medical and other works for the library of the Surgeon General's Office, $10,000.

Engineer Department:
For engineer depot at Willet's Point, New York, namely: For purchase of engineering materials to continue the present course of instruction of the engineer batalion in field engineering, 81,000.

For incidental expenses of the depot, remodeling ponton-trains, repairing instruments, purchasing fuel, forage, stationery, chemicals, extra-duty pay to soldiers engaged in special skilled labor, such as wheelwright work, printing, photographing, and lithographing engineer documents, and ordinary repairs, $4,000.

Ordnance Department:

For the ordnance service, required to defray the current expenses at the arsenals; of receiving stores and issuing arms and other ordnance supplies; of police and office duties; of fuel and lights; of stationery and office furniture; of tools and instruments for use; of public animals, forage, and vehicles; incidental expenses of the ordnance service, including compensation of workmen in the armory and museum building connected with the Ordnance Office and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small-arms, and other ordnance supplies, $10,000. For manufacture of metallic ammunition for small-arms, $80,000. For overhauling, cleaning, and preserving new ordnance stores on hand at the arsenals, $20,000. For dismounting guns and removing the armament from forts being modified or repaired, including heavy carriages returned to arsenals for alteration and repairs, and other necessary expenses of the same character, and for repairing ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and for issue at the arsenals and depots, and for extra-duty pay for enlisted men detailed for ordnance service, $30,000.

Mr. CLYMER. There is a mere verbal amendment which I wish to make in line 240. Insert before the word "dismounting" the words "mounting and;" so it will read:

For mounting and dismounting guns and removing the armament, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading and read as follows:

For purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops, $115,000.

For infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments, consisting of clothing-bags, haversacks, canteens, and great-coat straps, and repairing horse equipments for cavalry troops, $65,000.

For powder depot: For grading grounds, erecting magazines and other necessary buildings, and all expenses incident thereto, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, expend a sum not exceeding $18,500 of this amount in the purchase of additional land adjoining the present site.

For manufacture of arms at national armories, $300,000.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer the following amendment after line

The Clerk read as follows:

That upon the application of any college, university, or institution of learning, incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having a capacity at the same time to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, the President may detail an officer of the Army on the retired list to act as president, superintendent, or professor therefor, and such officer may receive from the institution to which he may be detailed the difference between his retired and full

Mr. WHITE. If the gentleman will hear me for a moment I will state that the very purpose of that latter clause—

Mr. CLYMER. I will suggest the addition of the words "and shall not receive any additional pay or allowance from the United States."

Mr. WHITE. Do you want that in?

Mr. CLYMER. Yes; let it come in at the end of the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. All right.

The 'amendment as thus modified was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment: Strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,000."

Strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,000."

I offer that formal amendment that I may allude to the paragraph which immediately follows the clause which sums up the total amount appropriated. This bill appropriates $26,425,800. Now, we frequently hear in debate upon some of the appropriation bills which annually pass this House about the expensiveness of this and that arm of the public service. I accidentally fell a few days ago upon a statement of the expenses of other nations as compared with our own in maintaining their military establishments; and I think we may congratulate ourselves as citizens of this Republic that we really appropriate so small a sum of money for the support of the Army. I believe that the public sentiment to-day of the country is very well satisfied with the present Army at its present size. I do not believe there is a demand for an increase of the Army, nor do I believe that public sentiment would sustain a reduction of the Army.

tary establishments of other countries cost. In Germany the cost of the military establishment is $101,626,000; four times the amount of the cost of our own Army. In France the cost is $128,520,000, or five times the amount of the cost of our Army. In Great Britain it is $153,510,000. In Russia it is $173,740,000. In Austria it is $53,074,000. In Italy it is $44,030,000.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNNELL. I have only five minutes and have not much time to yield for questions.

Mr. CHALMERS. I merely wish the gentleman to state, if he can, the number of troops of which the armies of those nations con-

Mr. DUNNELL. That has nothing to do with the point I am submitting. We are happy as a nation that we have so small an Army, and I simply wish to congratulate the House that we are able to provide for our Army by an appropriation of $26,000,000. I am happy it is all we need to support the Army of the United States of America, and I allude to the fact simply for that purpose.

Mr. CLYMER. I have but this to say, that we all of us, Americans, have deep cause for gratitude that this Government rests upon the love and affections of its people and not upon bayonets for its support. In computing the cost of armies in other countries the gentleman from Minnesota has not stated to us their number. Possibly if he had done so it would have anneared that the cost per man of our he had done so it would have appeared that the cost per man of our Army is much greater than the cost per man of the armies of other

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he is not glad that the American soldier is better fed and better paid than the soldiers of Europe?

Mr. CLYMER. Yes, sir; and moreover I am glad to say he has less to do. If within my power I would not have him less well clothed, less well fed, or less comfortable, and the action of the committee in reporting this bill is the best attestation they can make in

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That there be printed and bound 8,000 copies of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, compiled for the years 1861 and 1862 from Union and confederate sources under the direction of the War Department; of which 6,020 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,520 copies for the use of the Senate, and 540 copies for the use of the Executive Departments.

Mr. McCOOK. If that amendment will pass without my saying

Mr. MCCOOK. It that amendment will pass without my saying anything in its support I do not want to say anything.

Mr. BAKER. I do not make the point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. If the gentleman from Indiana does not make the point of order, I do. I must act an impartial part. The Committee on Appropriations have avoided attempting in the least degree to make any appropriation in this bill which is not warranted by law; and if I do not take my stand against appropriation of that also makes. any appropriation in this bill which is not warranted by law; and if I do not take my stand against appropriations of that character I would not be doing my duty in obeying not only the expressed but the implied wishes of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to insist on the point of order?

Mr. BAKER. I have stated that I do not desire to press the point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. I have made the point of order, but I am willing to withhold it until the gentleman from New York is heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make the point of order.

Mr. WHITE. He withholds it for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order must be made now before debate is entered on or it must be withdrawn.

Mr. CLYMER. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains it.

Mr. ATKINS. I would remark to the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCook] that the proper place for the section he has offered would be in the sundry civil bill any way.

Mr. McCOOK. If the gentleman will say that the Appropriations Committee will put it into that bill, then I have no objection to withdrawing it now.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not authorized to speak for the Committee on Appropriations as to that.

Mr. McCOOK. It is of importance that these records should be printed. The Secretary of War has recommended it time and again, I think, for the last four years, and Congress has already made an ap-

Think, for the last four years, and Congress has already made an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not now in order.

Mr. BAKER. On the point of order I desire to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the point of order.

Mr. BAKER. I ask the Chair to hear me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BAKER. This is an appropriation for a public object that has already been in progress for several years past; and the third clause of the twenty-first rule provides that an amendment may increase expenditure where the object of such amendment is the continuation of a public work or a public object that is already in progress.

This is a "public object" that is already in progress. The Chairman must recognize that fact, must be familiar with the fact that for a series of years the Government has been engaged in the prosecution a series of years the Government has been engaged in the prosecution of this work, and this appropriation is simply for the purpose of continuing this "public object."

Mr. McCOOK. I do not wish to say anything out of order; but in connection with the point of order I would like to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this fact: for four years past appropriations have been made for the compilation of the official records of the late war from Union and confederate sources. That compilation has been now carried on so far that it is complete for the year 1861, and nearly so for the year 1862. The work for those two years will make eight large volumes of eight hundred pages each. It is scarcely necessary for me to speak of the almost invaluable character of these official reports from both sides engaged in the late war. It appears to me that it would, at all events, be wiser for us to make some provision for printing these volumes year by year as they are prepared and not wait until all the volumes are compiled and then throw twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty volumes on the country at one time. Of twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty volumes on the country at one time. Of course it should be done at some time, and it would be better to do it

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair having decided the point of order,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair having decided the point of order, debate upon it is not now in order.

Mr. CLYMER. I would suggest that it would be better to incorporate such a provision as this in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that while this may be an appropriation in continuation of a public work already in progress, it is not germane to this bill. The Chair would be inclined to entertain it as germane to this bill. The Chair would be inclined to entertain it as germane to the sundry civil appropriation bill, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. SPARKS. By instruction of the Committee on Military Affairs I offer as an additional section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the merits of the proposed amendment are discussed, the point of order should be settled. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] will state his point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Pending the point of order, I move that the committee now rise, so that the debate may come up on the point of order to-morrow

The motion of Mr. Hawley was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. Springer reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H.R. on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. K. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some resolutions adopted by the council of the city of Savannah, in relation to sundry bills now pending in Congress to increase the powers of the National Board of Health. They are short, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions by Alderman Duncan.

Whereas the bills now pending in Congress increasing the powers of the National Board of Health will, if enacted into laws, be prejudicial to the interests of our seaport cities by imposing onerous restrictions upon our commerce: Therefore,

1. Be it resolved, That in the opinion of this council the bills proposed by Messrs. Harris and Young in Congress, entitled "A bill to increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health;" the bill introduced in the House by Mr. Acklen, entitled "A bill for the regulation of interstate freight and passengers, and to relieve the same from the restrictions of local quarantines," and the bill introduced by Mr. King, to "increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health," are intended to confer upon the National Board of Health powers far too great to be safely intrusted to any central body, inasmuch as they convey the right to supersede the anthority of all State and local government in the matter of quarantine, and to close any State against intercourse with the rest of the world whenever in the opinion of the National Board of Health or its executive committee (of five persons) an epidemic of infectious or contagious disease prevails in that State.

2. Resolved, That in the opinion of this council such legislation by the Federal Government is revolutionary in its tendencies and contrary to the spirit of our institutions.

3. Resolved. That a conv of these resolutions he sent to the contract of the spirit of our institutions.

Government is revolutionary in the stitutions.

3. Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Hon. J. C. Nicholis, Representative of the first district in Congress, with the request that he will use his influence against the passage of the above bills.

4. Resolved, That his honor the mayor be requested to communicate with the State and municipal authorities bordering on the Atlantic and Gulf coast, with a view to appointing delegates to a convention, the object being the sanitary and commercial interests of the States, and the framing of such a bill which, while looking to the health of the communities, will not compromise their commercial prosperity.

Adopted.

A true extract from the minutes.

FRANK E. REBARER, Clerk of Council.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLYMER. Before the House agrees to a recess or an adjournment, I desire if possible to have some understanding with regard to any general debate to be had upon the proposition offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] as an additional section to the Army appropriation bill now pending in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAGE. I shall object to any understanding at all now.

Mr. CLYMER. Although I shall not insist upon it in the present and it is a facility of a first I will now the present and in the present and it is a facility.

condition of affairs, I will say that I do not believe any general debate can be had.

Mr. KEIFER. Are you opposed to general debate?
Mr. CLYMER. I have not said so; when I do gentlemen will hear it.
My purpose in rising now is to endeavor to get some understanding or agreement.

Mr. REED. It seems to me that this is not the proper time to make any agreement about debate. Such agreement should be made only any agreement about debate. Such agreement should be made only when it is determined whether the proposition is in order or not.

Mr. CLYMER. We might fix some time when the vote is to be taken on the bill, for that would be a great convenience to members.

Mr. CONGER. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. ATKINS. I insist upon my motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I have made a motion for a recess until half past seven o'clock, for the purpose of holding a session this evening to consider business upon the Private Calendar. Mr. ATKINS. I believe my motion to adjourn takes precedence of

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read clause 4 of Rule XVI, on "motions, their precedence," &c.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the provious question, (which motions shall be decided without debate.) to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Atkins] is a good one, and under the rule the Chair is required to submit the motion to adjourn before he submits the motion for a recess.

Mr. FROST. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the motion to adjourn, so that I may move that the evening sessions of the second Monday and Tuesday in May may be set apart for special debate upon a bill reported yesterday for the establishment of a court in the Indian

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.
Mr. FROST. I ask that unanimous consent.
Mr. REED. I object, and call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 8, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of February 19, 1880, lists of the names of the clerks and other persons employed in the several bureaus of the Treasury Department, with the exception of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, during the calendar year ended December 31, 1879, and showing the time each was actually employed and the sums paid to each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, if there be no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Committee on Appropriations called for the information. I move the communication be printed

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Committee on Appropriations called for the information. I move the communication be printed and referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Accompanying the communication is an exhibit which is a very large roll. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question whether that shall be printed.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senate and to the Senator from West Virginia that if the letter be printed and the accompanying teners to be referred without height printed in the first instance the papers be referred without being printed, in the first instance, the committee can determine afterward whether it be necessary to print them or not. I do not object to the reference to the Committee on Appropriations, but I suggest that this large roll of paper need not be printed in the first instance.

Mr. ALLISON. If this information is of any value whatever, and the resolution under which it is transmitted applies to all the Departments, the whole ought to be printed. It is either unnecessary to have this information, or it is necessary to have it for purposes of examination. If we are to look into it, I submit that we had better

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, that the communication, with the accompanying exhibit, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation of $5,000 for the completion of a road from Fort Bridger across the Uintah Mount-the completion of a road from Fort Bridger across the Unitan Mountains to the Uintah agency; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation of $100,000 to build a new military post at or near the junction of the Gunnison and Grand Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Michigan, praying for the appointment of a national railroad commission, which shall have the power to fix the rates of tariff to be charged by railroad companies for the transportation of freights; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of G. E. W. Sharretts, praying compensation for the preparation of tables in use by accounting officers of the United States in the payment of the clerical force in different Departments of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BRUCE. Some time since I introduced a bill (S. No. 1600) for the relief of W. J. Cowan, of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Claims. Since then evidence sustaining that bill has been placed in my hands, which I present now and desire to have referred to the same committee and considered by them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRYOR. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Evans, a citizen of Arkanwhom was referred the petition of Samuel Evans, a citizen of Arkansas, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of his property at Devall's Bluff, Arkansas, by the United States military forces during the late war, to submit an adverse report, and I ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on discharging the committee from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. COCKRELL. As there is an adverse report I ask that the report recommending that the claim be not allowed be approved, so as to conform to the rule.

Mr. GARLAND. The proper motion is the one made by the Senator from Missouri, it seems to me. It is a case from the State I represent in part, which has been here four or five sessions, adverse reports having been made upon it, and the safest way to get rid of it is to adopt the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. To adopt the report and decide that the claim be not allowed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, shall the report be adopted and the claim not allowed?

The report was agreed to.

Mr. McMillAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered the Forty-fifth Congress, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Saulpaw, praying compensation for the steamboat Alfred Robb, alleged to have been seized near Coger's Island, Tennessee River, by United States military forces during the late war and converted into a gunboat, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1606) for the relief of George W. Saul-paw.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

TENTS FOR KNIGHTS TEMPLAR ENCAMPMENT.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, and so forth, to the triennial committee of Knights Templar at Chicago, to report it with an amendment. I will state that the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster-General in several instances of this kind have notified us that there were no tents to be allowed when the Grand Army of the Republic organization and other organizations made a similar request. I so stated in the report that I made the other day on a similar joint resolution. But I have received a letter from the person having charge in Chicago, and he writes me that he thinks a few can be obtained from the Department in Chicago. For the purpose of giving that opportunity, I have reported the joint resolution with the consent of a majority of the committee, with an amendment, and I will ask, if no one objects, that it be now acted on. It will take but a moment. There is an amendment to it authorizing the parties to receipt for the tents if they should receive them. The joint resolution has passed the House.

The joint resolution was read at length, and, by unanimous consent, considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I introduced a joint resolution some time ago authorizing the Secretary of War to loan flags, &c., to a soldiers' reunion to be held at Milwaukee next June, which was reported back unfavorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] stating in substance what he now states. I desire now to ask the Senator from Illinois what number of tents are in charge of the quartermaster for the Department at Chicago, if that be the officer having them in charge i

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to remark that, in accordance with a letter that I received from a very responsible citizen at Chicago, in which he stated that it was thought they could get the loan of certain equipage of this character from the depot there, I asked leave of a majority of the committee to report this joint resolution, although we had reported against a joint resolution of a similar character on the information from the Quartermaster's Department, which I have stated. I have no knowledge of the quantity of tents on hand; perhaps there may be none, but on the letter I received, the writer saying that he had information that satisfied him the articles could be procured there, I obtained leave to report this joint resolution, and I hope it will be

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs will be read.

The amendment was, at the end of the joint resolution, to insert the following proviso: Provided, That said articles shall be receipted for by some responsible person or

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the joint resolution read again. As I heard it, it was not to lend public property to soldiers for their reunion but to some other organization of citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution as amended will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution as amended, as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan the triennial committee, representing Apollo, Chicago, and Saint Bernard commanderies of Knights Templar, for use at their triennial encampment at Chicago, Illinois, on the 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th days of Angust, 1880, such tents, tent-poles, fiags, standards, guidons, and camp equipage as they may require: Provided, That such things are in the reserve supplies at the various quartermasters' depots: And provided further, That the said society shall pay all freight charges to and from said supply depots to Chicago, and shall return said articles in as good order as when received, ordinary wear excepted, or otherwise to pay the assessed damages: Provided, That said articles shall be receipted for by some responsible person or persons.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from Illinois if it as been the practice of Congress to lend public property to anybody except to soldiers? I know that has been sometimes done?
My. LOGAN. I do not remember anything about the precedents so far as that point is concerned. I cannot see any objection to loaning tents to an organization of this kind any more than to any other remember in the does not belong to the Army. tents to an organization of this kind any more than to any other organization that does not belong to the Army. I myself would be in favor of allowing any encampment, if we had the articles on hand and they would pay the expense, to have the use of them whether they were soldiers or otherwise. What the policy has been heretofore I do not know, for I do not remember any precedents of the kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to offer an amendment. I move to add to the interpretabilities the following additional province.

Provided further, That they can be spared without detriment, injury, or loss to the public service.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only wish to say that I think this is going altogether too far. I doubt if there is any precedent for it, and if there is it is a bad precedent. It is injurious to public property to use it in this way, as a matter of course. We have lent it to soldiers or those who have been soldiers for their encampments; but that stood on a pecuhave been soldiers for their encampments; but that stood on a peculiar ground and perhaps that has been carried further than was very safe; but now by lending it to a private organization of private citizens for charitable or other purposes you open the door to everybody who wants to borrow the public property. I should hope the Senate would not be quite willing to do that. I might like to have a tent myself, as well as other gentlemen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know where we are to stop. An encampment of Knights Templar is an association, doubtless, of very All over the country there are celebrations going on of worthy men. All over the country there are celebrations going on of the 4th of July, Saint Patrick's day, and other celebrations, picnics, circuses, temperance organizations, democratic meetings which are the reverse, and Knights of the Golden Circle. I suppose when we shall have passed this joint resolution we shall be bound, in common justice, to lend a tent to any citizen or association of citizens who wants to use it. I do not see where we can stop in principle if we establish this precedent.

Mr. LOGAN. I have but a word to say. I cannot see the objection, where persons are responsible and pay the expense, to the lending of property of this character to an organization not political but purely charitable, whether it be a soldiers' organization or otherwise.

I reported against a similar joint resolution the other day; and I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I am perfectly willing that that joint resolution shall be reconsidered and put in the same language that is used here, providing that the articles may be loaned only where it can be done without detriment to the service. I am ready to vote for such a joint resolution. If the Quartermaster's Department have the articles to spare, it is all right; if they have not, that ends it. I said that the only information I have received is a statement that in all probability these parties can present a certain amount. ends it. 2 said that the only information I have received is a statement that in all probability these parties can procure a certain amount of this property at Chicago. I have received a private letter of that character. Of course I do not know anything about it; but these people, I think, are very worthy and certainly will do no damage to the property. It is a convocation of persons from all parts of the United States to meet there at a certain time. They are all worthy men. They desire to have an encampment outside of the city, and they cannot have it without something of this kind. I do not see any objection to it myself. Certainly there can be none politically. I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I certainly should vote against lending public property to any political organization, no matter what their name might be, and to any organization except a charitable organization, and I would be in favor of lending them such property if we had it to spare.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it appears to me, with great respect to my friend from Illinois, that a political organization is just as necessary to the welfare of the country as a charitable organization is, because you cannot dispense charity satisfactorily without some political organization in its broadest and best sense. As long as the country is governed by the people, and I hope it will continue They desire to have an encampment outside of the city, and some political organization in its broadest and best sense. As long as the country is governed by the people, and I hope it will continue to be for a good while, then a political organization is a proper, useful, and good thing. Yet my friend seems to suggest that it would be going too far to lend public property to a political organization. I think so too; and I think the same as to charitable organizations, and to all other organizations of any kind on principle. But we have made an exception in respect of the soldiers, and upon peculiar grounds. That I have been quite willing to agree to, although upon principle, I doubt if that is defensible; but we are willing to stretch it a little for that purpose. I do not think there is any instance yet of our lending the public property to any other organizations or set of citizens, and I think we had better keep up the dividing line, and not go beyond the extent that we have gone in this respect.

It is true, as the Senator from Illinois says, that this is a very small affair and will hurt the property very little; but, as the Senator from affair and will hurt the property very little; but, as the Senator from Illnois says, that this is a very small affair and will hurt the property very little; but, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, if we are to exert fair play—and we are all for that—if we do it unto one we must do it unto another, and the result will be that every organization that is decent and respectable in the United States, as this one is, will have a just claim in the same sense upon the action of Congress to make such use of the public property that may be on hand as will for the time being serve its worthy and necessary purposes.

I do not believe the Government is constructed for any such operations. I believe that we ought to hold strictly to the possession and preservation of the public property; and it is no answer to say that the injury is a very small one, as it is in this case. It is the principle of the case which must spread so widely if we adopt this measure, that the injury is a very small one, as it is in this case. It is the principle of the case which must spread so widely if we adopt this measure, that leads me to oppose it.

Mr. HOAR. There is one other suggestion which strikes me as very forcible in addition to that made by the Senator from Vermont. He says that if we grant this request we have got to grant a like request to every other organization in the country that is decent. We have got to do more than that. We have got to determine every time a request is made whether the organization is decent or not. I submit that the law-making power of the country ought never to be put in such relations to the citizens or to any class of them as to say that one body of men asking a favor is entitled by reason of the respectability of the men who compose it or the excellence of its objects to a favor which we deny to another because we do not think its objects so excellent or the members composing it so respectable.

The Senator from Illinois says he would not lend the public property to a political organization. Why not? I do not myself think that a democratic organization is an organization for the public advantage, as this is; but I do not think I have a right to so declare in legislation or in my dealing with the public property. A democratic encampment or a republican encampment has a right to present itself to Congress and to have the presumption apply to it in all our dealing with the public property that it is the equal of any other organization. I have no doubt there are many Senators on this floor, perhaps a majority, who think a democratic organization which had no politics in it at all.

The difficulty in my mind is that it requires us to give to every politics in it at all.

The difficulty in my mind is that it requires us to give to every man who asks the use of this property; and if tents, why not muskets for instruction in the various military schools of the country, and why not other military property; why not wagons and other equipage? Muskets now are, under certain limitations, because the accomplishment of military instruction is a public object. It seems to me unless we deny this request and confine such loans to military organizations or organizations of persons who have rendered military service to the country, which everybody agrees to, we shall be in trouble hereafter.

Mr. LOGAN. So far as the loaning of property is concerned there is a certain character of property of course that I would not agree to loan to any one; but if Senators will reflect for a moment they will see that, so far as the term "equipage" applies to tents, the mere fact of spreading a tent on a plain in the open air is a thing that has been done frequently without loaning them. They are in a great deal better condition that way than they are when rolled up and put away in some dry place where they are not as well cared for as if they were in actual use. No damage can occur to this property by its use for in actual use. No damage can occur to this property by its use for a short time.

I have no desire to discuss the question relative to the difference between this society and other organizations except to say that this organization is made up of all parties, and all denominations, and all religions. In everything of that sort it is of a different character from the bulk of the organizations of the country. It is certainly one that has nothing to do with political matters, and is devoted to charitable

I insist that in this instance we are not making a precedent that is a bad one. I do not see why the tents or flags of this country should not be loaned to organizations not political that are for charitable or patriotic purposes. I cannot see any objection to it. I think the more frequently our flags are displayed in this country, the better it is for the country. That is my judgment in reference to it, whether they are used by a military organization or by any other organization. For these reasons I hope the Senate will pass the joint resolution.

organization. For these reasons I hope the Senate will pass the joint resolution.

I wish to say in addition that my information is that a few days ago, without an objection, the Senate agreed to a House joint resolution for the loaning of this very class of property for a celebration at Nashville, Tennessee. I did not know it, but I am told it is the fact that just a few days ago we agreed to a joint resolution loaning this same character of property to a centennial celebration at Nashville, Tennessee. I hope the joint resolution as amended will be passed.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I have been a member of the organization for the benefit of which this action is asked, and I am frank to say that I do not think the joint resolution ought to pass. It appears to me that it is something for which the organization ought not to ask. If we grant the use of the public property to this organization, where is it to stop? We have national temperance conventions, we have camp-meetings for religious purposes in all parts of the country. Of course this property cannot be devoted to private purposes without serious loss and inconvenience. There are often national conventions for purposes affecting the Government in differnational conventions for purposes affecting the Government in different parts of the country. It appears to me that the precedent sought to be established here is injurious and one that the Senate ought not to be established here is injurious and one that the Senate ought not to be called upon to make.

For one, as a member of the organization, I shall very cheerfully vote against the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution read a third time? on which question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

SOLDIERS' REUNION IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask to call up House joint resolution No. 218, granting the use of artillery, tents, and so forth, at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City, Nebraska, reported by the Military Committee favorably; and, inasmuch as a resolution to the same effect has just passed for another organization, I ask that action be had on

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be done by a vote of the Senate postponing the morning business. The Chair understands the Senator from South Carolina to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 218.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City, Nebraska, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add the following proviso:

Provided further. That the adjutant-general of the State of Nebraska, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said arms, ammunition, and camp equipage in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the amendment, but I desire to offer some additional amendments as soon as that amendment is acted upon, or I will offer them now, whichever the Chair may indi-is acted upon, or I will offer them now, whichever the Chair may indicate as proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does it happen that we require the State of Nebraska to be responsible for the soldiers having these articles, when we do not require the State of Illinois to be responsible for the Knights Templar? Are the soldiers less responsible than the Knights Templar for public property?

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to ask him a question? I ask him as a lawyer by what authority can we impose that obligation on the State of Nebraska?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have authority according to modern notions to do pretty much anything we like.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is proposed in the contingency of loss to charge it to the quota of the State, and the adjutant-general, I suppose, is the proper officer to take charge of it for the State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not propose to charge the State of Nebraska

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not propose to charge the State of Nebraska with anything the soldiers lose, unless we charge the State of Illinois with what the Knights Templar lose. I move to amend the amendment by striking out that part relative to the State of Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would strike out the whole

amendment.

Mr. HAMPTON. I submit that the objection made by the honorable Senator from Vermont might be germane to the prior bill, but it is hardly applicable to this joint resolution. We have taken in the Military Committee all the precautions we possibly can do to have the property well guarded and to be returned.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask if there is a provision there for the return of the blank cartridges? I did not hear it.

Mr. HAMPTON. No, sir. The blank cartridges can do no harm; and as we do not wish to use ball cartridges so early in the campaign we think the blank cartridges can be expended there. The bill pro-we think the blank cartridges can be expended there. The bill provides that the adjutant-general of the State shall receipt for this property and if any of it is lost or injured that it shall be charged against the State of Nebraska. I should be perfectly willing to vote for an amendment of that sort to the joint resolution passed just now; but we have only been more careful in framing this resolution so that the United States shall lose no property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that my proper motion inasmuch as this amendment is entirely devoted to the responsibility of the State of Nebraska, is to move to amend it. I modify my motion by moving to strike out all after the words "Provided further" and insert:

That the proper officer of the United States shall take satisfactory security for the preservation and return of the articles before mentioned.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the committee will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. That would include the blank cartridges, I sup-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose so. This is an amendment to the amendment

Mr. CONKLING. But it would include the blank cartridges in the

Mr. PADDOCK. To relieve the mind of the Senator from New York in regard to blank cartridges, I will say that I understand a Senator will move to strike out the blank cartridges before we get

Mr. COCKRELL. I intend to move when it shall be in order, to insert in line 7 between the words "tents" and "muskets" the word "and," and then to strike out "and blank cartridges;" so that the loan will be of four pieces of artillery and such tents and muskets as can be conveniently spared.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire to say that the amendment proposed by the committee is in my opinion a very proper amendment. It is a very usual thing for State authorities to loan to soldiers military propvery usual thing for State authorities to loan to soldiers military property of the State for reunions. The quartermaster or adjutant-general of the State, or whoever is in charge of the State property, very frequently loans to soldiers that class of property. Now, all military property issued by order of the War Department to the State of Nebraska is receipted for by the adjutant-general of that State and is charged against the quota of Nebraska. That proceeding, then, as here provided for, is a perfectly proper one. If that officer chooses to take the responsibility of giving this receipt, it is a perfectly valid receipt, and if he chooses to take the responsibility of allowing these soldiers to use this property, he has the right to do it. Therefore I contend that the amendment as it comes from the committee is a proper amendment and is the regular course. I see no reason for requiring the Ordnance Department or the Quartermaster's Department to enter into a private contract with private individuals for the return of pub-

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment as reported by the committee, in my humble opinion with great deference to my friend from Rhode Island, is equivalent to saying that these soldiers shall not have these articles at all. You might just as well not pass the bill, because the adjutant-general of the State of Nebraska has no legal power whatever to do what this amendment requires him to do. The laws of Nebraska do not authorize him to do it, and therefore it is perfectly impossible for him to do it in his official capacity unless he makes himself liable to impeachment in that State for misconduct in office. He might be ever so willing personally to do it, but it requires an officer of the State of Nebraska to do a thing that the laws of Nebraska do not allow him to do. He has no authority to do it.

do not allow him to do. He has no authority to do it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Senator from Vermont is entirely mistaken about that. The officer in charge of military property in the State of Nebraska can communicate with the Secretary of War without any intermediate powers, and receive property and receipt for it, and it can be charged against the State of Nebraska as against her quota of arms. of arms, &c. There is a certain amount of arms and military property issued to the different States every year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I correctly understand this bill, it is to provide for the issuing arms, &c., not to the State of Nebraska, but to a certain association of individuals who have been soldiers, for a certain purpose, and the amendment requires the State of Nebraska to be responsible for that issue. That does not come within the law authorizing the War Department to issue arms to the several States and has nothing to do with it. When the arms are issued to the State, if the State authorities choose to lend them to the soldiers, that is their affair. Itmay be that they can do it or not, as they like. But this bill requires the Secretary of War to issue these arms to these soldiers direct from the United States, and then says that they shall not have them unless the State of Nebraska acting through its proper authorities shall agree to be responsible. The State of Nebraska cannot agree to be responsible. A bond taken under that provision would be absolutely uncollectible taken from the adjutant-general, would be entirely void, for the reason that it is beyond the power of Congress to impose upon a State officer any such duty, or responsibility, or right.

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose they do it notwithstanding, would it be void? sponsible for that issue. That does not come within the law authorwoid?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do say it would be void for the reason that it is entirely beyond our power to bind the official people of the State of Nebraska to anything of the kind. The trouble is that the adjutant-general of Nebraska under the laws of that State has no power, as I understand those laws—they are like those of every State which give the officers no power—to do a thing of this kind in respect of property that does not belong to the State. The consequence is that it will be found, unless the adjutant-general of Nebraska is willing to violate his official duty, that you have defeated the very object of the bill. the bill.

My proposition is to substitute for that the simple and ordinary provision that the proper officer of the United States shall take adequate security for the preservation and return of this property, just as we provided in the case of the Knights Templar, a mere private organization of citizens; but why you should tie this up and make it more difficult for the returned soldiers from the war to have a good time than the Knights Templar, I am quite unable to understand.

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for a division on that question. I do not think it would be in accord with the spirit of the bill that that amendment should be adopted. I have several amendments which I desire to offer which, I think, will put the bill in the shape it ought to be. I will say now that I propose, in line 7, to insert the word "and" between "tents" and "muskets;" to strike out "and blank cartridges;" and then, in lines 8 and 9, to strike out "and so forth" and insert between the words "tents" and "muskets" the word "and." It will then read: It will then read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient Government arsenal, to be used at the soldiers' rennion at Central City, Nebraska, to be held in September, 1880, four pieces of artillery, and such tents and muskets as can be conveniently spared; said cannon, tents, and muskets to be returned after the holding of said reunion meeting in as like good condition as when received.

And then I desire to add:

And then I propose to strike out, in line 15, the word "ammunition;"

Shall receipt for said arms and camp equipage-

Striking "ammunition" out entirely-in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State—

Then I propose to add, immediately after the word "State".

and deducted out of the sum, amount, and share of the annual sum of the $200,000 appropriated for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of militia which may be assignable, distributable, or allotted to the State of Ne-

I simply suggest these amendments, and I think they will make the bill in better shape than it will be if the amendment of the Senator from Vermont prevails.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri amounts clearly to my mind to a provision that the State of Nebraska, after it has received these arms and become re-State of Nebraska, after it has received these arms and become responsible for them, may lend them to the soldiers if it wants to do so. Well, the State of Nebraska, if it has any arms and tents, can do that now. It is simply saying, therefore, that the soldiers shall not have these tents for this purpose that we have just granted them to an association of civilians, unless they get them under the authority and under the responsibility and really from the State of Nebraska, because this is to be charged to her. I am not willing to agree to that. We have gone into this business a long time before as to the soldiers, and we have never before that I know of required a State to be responsible for the soldiers. They can probably find somebody sufficiently responsible without the responsibility of the State.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the adjutant-general of Nebraska happens to be that officer of the Grand Army of the Republic who would naturally take charge of this subject.

this subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does that help it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Missouri demand a division on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; I demanded a division on it. Now, as to the point the Senator from Vermont makes about the responsibility, let me say a word. The State of Nebraska has not these cannon and this camp equipage, and they cannot be furnished to her because they would more than cover her quota; but the Government loans these four cannon and such muskets and camp equipage as it can spare without detriment to the service and simply requires the State to be without detriment to the service, and simply requires the State to be responsible, and then promises in advance to receive back all these arms that may be returned, and if the adjutant-general of Nebraska should not return any of them, those particular ones at the cost-price will be charged to the State and deducted out of the annual appropriation which would be allowed her. There can certainly be no harm in this. It is not to deprive the soldiers of the use of these articles, but to provide so that the soldiers can use them, and, at the same time, the Government not be a loser.

same time, the Government not be a loser.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If it is in my power to accept the amendment of the honorable Senator from Missouri to my amendment, I will do so. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a question now pending, and it is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair did not originally hear the demand for a division, but he is informed that it was made, and therefore the Senate must divide on that question.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire to say that the amendment of the Military Committee as amended by the Senator from Missouri will be very satisfactory to me, for I proposed the committee's amendment myself. I desire to say further that this amendment does not impose any duty whatever on the State of Nebraska or any of its officers. It any duty whatever on the State of Nebraska or any of its officers. It any duty whatever on the State of Neoraska or any of its officers. It simply says that if the officers of the State will do that much, then the Government of the United States will assent to it, and those officers will most surely do anything they can to further this reunion of soldiers and promote its success. It imposes no duty whatever on those officers, but simply makes a condition that this property shall be turned over to the State of Nebraska temporarily on condition that the officers of the State of Nebraska do certain things. When it comes to be the proper time and it is in my power, I shall accept the amendments of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state on behalf of the State of Nebraska

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state on behalf of the State of Nebraska that it will be perfectly willing to accept the responsibility which the committee proposes to impose upon it in regard to the preservation and return of these arms. It happens, as I said before, that the adjutant-general of the State is a high officer in the Grand Army of the Republic of the State and I think it is well enough under all the circumstances to leave the bill substantially as it was reported from the committee. the committee. However, I think the amendments proposed by the Senator from Missouri would be well enough; and yet I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont if that is the sense of the Senate. Nevertheless it strikes me that the whole dis-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] as a substitute for the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair will state it again. The committee report this amendment to the resolution:

That the adjutant-general of the State of Nebraska, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said arms, ammunition, and camp equipage in name of said

State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota.

The Senator from Vermont moves to strike that out and to insert in lieu of it these words:

That the proper officer of the United States shall take satisfactory security for the preservation and return of the articles before mentioned.

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 8, noes 26;

no quorum voting.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think if we divide again we shall find a quorum voting. There is certainly a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There would be a quorum if all the Senators present would vote. The Chair will put the question again

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 9, noes 36; so the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee. Mr. COCKRELL. Now I offer the amendments, which I have indicated to the Chair, marked in the copy of the resolution I sent to the desk

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The first thing in order is the committee amendment or some amendment to that. The Senator from Missouri proposes to amend the text of the bill. The pending question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. One of my amendments is to the amendment at the close of the bill in my own handwriting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to the committee amendment, first striking out "against its quota" and inserting:

And deducted out of the sum, amount, and share of the annual sum of $200,000 appropriated for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia which may be assignable or distributable or allotted to said State of

Mr. CONKLING. How does that change the effect?
Mr. COCKRELL. It just simply shows how this credit is to be

Mr. CONKLING. Points out the way of doing it?
Mr. COCKRELL. It comes out of the quota, and shows how it shall be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I move the amendments in the body of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I move, in line 7, after the word "tents," to insert the word "and;" so as to read, "tents and muskets."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, in line 7 I move to strike out "and blank cartridges."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amend-ent? The Chair hears none, and it is adopted. Mr. COCKRELL. In line 10, after the word "provided," I move to That the same can be spared without detriment or injury to the public service:

And provided.*

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. FERRY. Let the resolution be reported as amended.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution, as amended, will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient Government arsenal, to be used at the soldiers' reunion at Central City, Nebraska, to be held in September, 1880, four pieces of artillery and such tents and muskets as can be conveniently spared; said cannon, tents, and muskets to be returned after the holding of said reunion meeting in as like good condition as when received: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment or injury to the public service: And provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion to the arsenal shall be without expense to the Government: Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Nebraska, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said arms and camp equipage in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State and deducted out of the sum, amount, and share of the annual sum of $200,000 appropriated for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia which may be assignable or distributable or allotted to said State of Nebraska.

Mr. CONKLING: Few things are more interesting or more credit—

Mr. CONKLING. Few things are more interesting or more creditable in legislation than progress; and the zeal and enterprise of the Senate this morning touching this subject, will be illustrated by a short statutory provision, which I will read. On the 14th of June, 1878, the soldiers of Iowa, then being the persons considered, the two Houses of Congress passed, and there was approved a "joint resolution granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldier's reunion, to be held at Centreville, Iowa," in these words:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient Government arsenal, to be used at the soldiers' remion at Centreville, Iowa, to be held in August, 1878, four pieces of artillery, and such tents, muskets, and blank cartridges as can be conveniently spared; said cannon, tents, muskets, &c., to be returned after the holding of said reunion meeting in as like good condition as when received: Provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion to the arsenal shall be without expense to the Government.

That is all. Those and only those safeguards were considered necessary then. Now, in the greater advance of civilization and with the greater diligence of the Senate, we have many modern improvements in this bill. I do not know whether under this provision here loss or difficulty occurred or not; but there are two other instances which I have not looked up, one in the State of Ohio and another somewhere else, found, I think, in this same volume in which this years weakers form was employed.

where ease, round, I think, in this same volume in which this very meager form was employed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the question be taken separately on the last amendment about making this conditional on the assent of

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks for a separate vote on the last amendment. If there be no objection the question will be taken on all the amendments together except the one reserved by the Senator from Vermont.

The other amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last amendment will now be reported, on which a separate vote is asked.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution, strike out "against its quota" and insert:

And deducted out of the sum, amount, and share of the annual sum of $200,000 appropriated for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia which may be assignable or distributable or allotted to said State of

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is also a provision about the adjutant-general receipting in the name of the State.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the exception of the Senator from Vermont is of the last amendment as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My point was to have a distinct vote on the question that involves the matter of any action of the State. That what I asked to have reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee as amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Nebraska, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said arms and camp equipage in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State and deducted out of the sum, amount, and share of the annual sum of $200,000 appropriated for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia which may be assignable or distributable or allotted to said State of Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONKLING. What amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment just read.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont demanded, as he had a right to demand, a separate vote on some amendment. Now the Chair has had read to the Senate not only that amendment but a great deal more with it. It is not of much consequence; but I do not understand, as a matter of parliamentary proceeding, or under the rule of the Senate, that the vote ought to be or can be regularly upon the whole amendment. It must be upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri which was an entire and separate amendment by itself. I have no care about this whatever; I merely suggest it to the Chair because in other cases this course may lead to confusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from New York that it seems to the Chair perfectly regular. The committee reported an amendment; that amendment was amended on the motion of the Senator from Missouri; and now the question is, will the Senate concur in that amendment of the committee as amended; and that presents a question upon which a distinct vote

Mr. CONKLING. I respectfully submit that the question is whether the Senate will concur with what the Committee of the Whole did. What was that in respect of this amendment? To adopt the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. Then whether the Senate will adopt the whole thing is a question in the Senate which comes up on the third reading and on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. I amended an amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand that.
Mr. COCKRELL. Then the question is on the adoption of that amendment as amended. It is not a part of the original resolution; it is an amendment amended, and stands as one solitary amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not so understand it, and I think that way would lead to great difficulty in the Senate. I care nothing about it in this case but I am satisfied that that is not the practice of the

Mr. HOAR. I understand that it is but the final action of the Committee of the Whole in proposing an amendment which the Senate is asked to adopt or reject; that all the steps by way of amending that amendment before the Committee of the Whole has proposed it to the Senate the Senate has nothing to do with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That states it exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the view of the Chair.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I would not make a point of order, if I could, upon this matter, so as to require a vote to be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I had just as lief have it taken on the whole amendment; and I would vote for the joint resolution without any such amendment. I drew the amendment proposed by the committee, and drew it simply in the interest of the safety of the public property. I shall vote for the joint resolution even if this amendment is rejected; but I think it is wise to retain the amendment in the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, will the Senate concur in the amendment just read, made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5621) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommoda-tion of the revenue officers, and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia, to report it without amendment.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask the Senator from Vermont to request the immediate consideration of that bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope so.
Mr. MORRILL. I will say that the Senators from West Virginia ask that the bill may be now considered. I desire to state that it is precisely the same bill, word for word, reported some weeks ago by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, and therefore I can see no objection to the request made by the Senators from West Virginia that action be taken upon it at the present moment.

Mr. CONKLING. I am not going to object to this bill but to avail myself of the opportunity to ask a question. How many public buildings are there in the country proceeding now or ordered now?

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot answer the question now without re-

Mr. MOKRILL. I cannot answer the question now without referring to a statement that we have had prepared in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I do not remember.

Mr. CONKLING. Can the Senator approximate the number?

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot. There are quite a large number that have been commenced and are yet unfinished.

Mr. CONKLING. Repeating that I do not rise to object to this bill,

I feel moved to express an apprehension that we are going very fast in the erection of public buildings. The other day such a bill passed the Senate—I will not refer to it more particularly—but a Senator from the State in which the building was ordered, when I inquired of him what was the population of the place at which the building was ordered to be erected, told me about two thousand five hundred. Now, if it can be that we propose to erect public buildings so generally that they fall to places the population of which is under three thousand, it strikes me as being very extraordinary. I do not doubt that the committee does its duty on this subject; but my impression is that we shall wake up before long and find that, if not more atten-tion, more hesitation should have been given to this subject than seems to prevail.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator from New York that this place is the capital of the State of West Virginia.

Mr. CONKLING. As I have said, I do not rise to level an objection at this bill. I know nothing about it. It is not my province to object to it. I am not a member of the committee. I simply make it ject to it. I am not a member of the committee. I simply make it the occasion of calling attention to this subject. I suspect and indeed I may say that I believe that the business of erecting public buildings is becoming excessively general and unwarrantably so; and the idea of erecting a public building in a place of three thousand inhabitants anywhere, I believe is utterly indefensible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5621) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommodation of the revenue officers, and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia.

Mr. KERNAN. I inquire whether there is any limit in the bill to the amount that this building is to cost?

Mr. MORRILL. There is.
Mr. KERNAN. Is that to be the entire cost?
Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.
Mr. CONKLING. Hearing the inquiry of my colleague I wish to say for myself, so that he may not labor under any misapprehension, that whether there is a limit or not is in my belief entirely immaterial. It does not make one hair white or one hair black because you have put it in over and over again, and the building will cost just as much in the end as if you said nothing about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.
Mr. HEREFORD. I hope a vote will be taken on this bill.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I trust it will be disposed of. Let

It will not require time.

ns act at once. It will not require time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent to continue the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I gave notice yesterday that I would call up for consideration to-day the question of privilege in reference to the seat of the Senator from Louisiana. I have been requested by genseat of the Senator from Louisiana. I have been requested by gentlemen who desire to consider the subject a little further not to call it up to-day, and I have consented that I will not call it up until next Tuesday. I give this notice so that Senators may govern themselves accordingly. One of the members of the committee made a request the day before yesterday which I had not in mind at the time I gave the notice I did give yesterday.

BENJAMIN HOLLADAY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to give notice that as soon as the Geneva award bill is disposed of I will call up and ask the Senate to proceed to consider a bill reported by me from the Committee on Claims on the 9th of February, entitled a bill for the relief of Benjamin Holladay.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I cannot let the notice go unpassed.

The Senator will recollect that a few days ago I said that there were three bills on the Calendar from the Committee on Appropriations that I should ask to have taken up as soon as the Geneva award bill was out of the way.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I shall not object to giving way to an appropriation bill.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1607) for the relief of S. W. Fountain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1608) for the relief of certain settlers within the late Fort Kearney military reservation in Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1609) to authorize the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department certain parts of the Camp Douglas military reservation in the Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BALDWIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1610) making an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of a light-house and fog-signal at or near the entrance of Little Traverse Harbor, on Lake Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered. That the papers in the case of Alexander McNary and John H. Taylor be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the considera-tion of the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement sub-mitted by the confederated bands of the Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Dawes, o insert as an additional section:

SEC. 10. That the sum of $25,000, set apart in article 3 of the act of April 29, 1874, ratifying an agreement with the Ute Indians, shall be expended under the direction of the President in the education, in schools established for that purpose, of such youths of both sexes belonging to said tribe as in his judgment are best calculated to make proficiency therein, in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their self-support.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, in order to obviate the objections urged with so much force last night by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] I propose with the consent of the Senate to withdraw that amendment, and in place of it to offer the following, to come in on the second page on line 14, after the words "to wit:"

Provided. That the President may in his discretion appropriate an amount thereof not exceeding $10,000 for the education, in schools established beyond the limits of the land selected, of such youths of both sexes as in his judgment may be best qualified to make proficiency in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their selfsupport, and.

The difference between this amendment and the one pending is this: The one pending requires the President to expend the $25,000 which is the income from an established fund under a former treaty in the way indicated in this amendment. That, it was supposed, and with some force, would be interfering with the treaty obligation. To obviate that, it is proposed instead to appropriate $10,000 out of the head-money for that same purpose. As I have always considered that the head-money was just so much money thrown away, if I can save $10,000 of it for the purpose of beginning this work of education I shall be exceedingly glad; and, therefore, with the consent of the Senate, I withdraw that amendment for the purpose of offering this. This, I will say, the Committee on Indian Affairs will not antagonize. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws the amendment offered by him yesterday and now moves an amendment which will be read to the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 14 of the first section, after the words

"to wit," it is proposed to insert:

Provided. That the President may in his discretion appropriate an amount thereof not exceeding $10,000 for the education, in schools established beyond the limits of the land selected, of such youths of both sexes, as in his judgment may be best qualified to make proficiency in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their self support, and.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that I exactly understand the object of the Senator from Massachusetts in the proposed amendment, and I will ask him to advise the Senate whether this is a withdraws of this amount of money from the appropriations made specifically in this bill for definite purposes.

Mr. DAWES. This is taking of the $50,000, which in all time to come is each year to be distributed per capita among these Indians, $10,000 and appropriating it for the purposes indicated. It is an amendment of the agreement to come in in connection with the other amendment of the agreement to come in it connection with the other amendments of the agreement proposed by the committee themselves. The committee propose to amend the agreement by taking of that sum, which in the agreement is specifically appropriated per capita, certain amounts to pay to certain aggrieved individuals; and this adds to that change by proposing also to take from that sum per capita $10,000 and appropriate it for the purposes indicated in the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. And, therefore, adds another difficulty to the obstacles that already seem almost insuperable to the coming to some understanding with these Indians. I do not know how far the Senator from Massachusetts is justified in saying that his amendment meets with no objection from the Committee on Indian Affairs. As one member of that committee, I do object to it.

Mr. DAWES. I will explain to the Senator—
Mr. INGALLS. And I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts to throw no further obstacles in the way of the passage of this bill.
We have an Indian appropriation bill that will be here in the course of a few weeks upon which he can ingraft appropriately any provisions that he sees fit in regard to the education of the Ute Indians. Here we have made a specific agreement with these tribes to meet an emergency upon which immediate action is demanded, and the Senator from Massachusetts insists on coming in here and interpolating other provisions that will inevitably prevent an agreement being reached with these savages upon the frontier of Colorado.

I sympathize with the desires of the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the civilization of the Utes; I should be glad to have them all immediately assume the costume of civilized life and become selfsupporting and cultivate the soil and learn all the foreign languages supporting and cultivate the soil and learn all the foreign languages and wear dress-coats and become ornamental members of society and vote the republican ticket; but I appeal to him to let this bill go, and put his provisions on the Indian appropriation bill when it comes before as, where these subjects properly belong.

I can see no good reason why this whole subject should be dealt with here, because we have before us a specific bill for accomplishing specific purposes; and I assure the Senator from Massachusetts that I will co-operate with him, at a proper time and on a proper occasion and when the suitable bill arrives, in doing whatever may seem best to him in order to accomplish those purposes which we adeasing and when the suitable bill arrives, in doing whatever may seem best to him in order to accomplish those purposes which we admit to be desirable; and I hope that he will withdraw this amendment and allow us as far as possible to carry out this agreement as it was made with the Indians, who have just departed for their reservation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas whether the object contemplated by the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts cannot be ingrafted in the bill by a provision authorizing the Commissioner, by the consent of the tribe, to so modify the agreement which has been made with them that of the appropria of course I see the difficulty of altering the agreement without the consent of the Ute Indians; but by ingrafting in the bill—

Mr. DAWES. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that Mr. INGALLS. Did the Senator from Delaware address the Senator from Massachusetts or myself?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was addressing myself to the Senator from

So I understood,

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask whether the object contemplated by the Senator from Massachusetts might not be accomplished in the manner I have indicated simply by giving authority to the Commissioner by agreement with the Ute Indians themselves to consent to this by agreement with the Ute Indians themselves to consent to this disposition of part of the money.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir. There is no doubt that this agreement can be modified by act of Congress in any particular if the Indians will accept it. But the chiefs and the head-men of these confederated bands have been here in Washington for several months engaged in negotiations with the Secretary of the Interior, and after much difficulty and great tribulation they have at last reached a common basis upon which they hope to secure an adjustment of the outstanding difficulties between the United States Government, the people of Colorado, and these Indians. Of course it is in the power of Congress to accept these conditions; it is in the power of Congress to modify them; it is in the power of Congress to say they will accept none of them; but it is a practical question before us whether under all the circumstances this is the best thing that can be done, and if it is, then we ought to assent to it; if it is not, we ought to modify it. But I insist that upon mere matters of speculative propriety, upon matters that can just as well be considered somewhere else, we ought not to embarrass this bill in its details by inserting all these provisions, and I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts whether he is not willing to allow his views in regard to the education of these Indians to be placed on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I should feel that there was a great deal of force in the argument of the Senator from Kansas about interfering with this agreement if I had not observed on the face of the bill that he himself proposes to interfere with this very agreement in these words: "Provided, that the said agreement shall be amended by adding to the first clause thereof" a provision that these Utes, before they shall receive a dollar of this money, shall deliver up the guilty parties, whether they can or not.

Mr. INGALLS. That was adopted in opposition to my expressed wish; I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. DAWES. Very well. And also either he, or his committee over his head, I do not know which, agreed to alter the agreement so as to take out of this head-money

To Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker, $400; to Miss Josephine Meeker, $400; to Mrs. Sophronia Price, $400; to Mary and John Price, each, $150; to George Dresser, $200; to Mrs. Sarah M. Post, $200; to Mrs. Eaton, mother of George Eaton, $200; to the parents of Arthur L. Thompson, $200; to the father of Fred Shepard, $200; to the parents of Wilmer Eskridge, $200; to Mrs. Nannie J. Elliott, $300.

And all this, either with the assent of the Senator from Kansas, a member of this committee, or over his head, has been agreed to as amendments of this agreement. Now, I propose to amend it just one inch further, and that is to take $10,000 out of this $50,000 and appropriate it in some way that will benefit the Indians. The moment I broach that I find embarrassment; I find an appeal made to me by the Senator from Kansas, "For God's sake, do not touch this agreement," when he himself or his committee proposes to amend it in all these particulars. Do not touch this agreement when you come to anything that looks toward the education of these Indians.

Now, sir, it makes no difference with me whether this $10,000 appropriation shall be put here or in the regular Indian appropriation bill; but if it is stricken out of this bill, this bill on the face of it is simply a bill to extinguish the title to eleven million acres of land in Indians who have committed such an outrage in the murder of white citizens that many people think they ought to be driven off without a cent; and the bill proposes on the face of it not only to extinguish their title, but to pay them what amounts to $2,700,000. Now I should like to get into this bill something for which I can vote; that is all. I should like to have this bill on its face make a small provision of $10,000 a year toward the education of the children of these Utes.

hope that possibly the time may come when I may not affront the convictions of any Senator here by some provision of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. May I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that by this agreement we have positively pledged this Government to make provision for the education of these people?

Mr. DAWES. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. And that we have appropriated in a general way in this very bill for that purpose.

Mr. DAWES. I alluded to that provision last night. That is a provision which is in all treaties and all agreements with Indians, to provide for schools for their children upon the reservations. The characteristic of them are acter of those schools is well known; the beneficial results of them are well known. It is not to add anything to the money expended in that line that I desire this amendment adopted, because I think that is in a great measure wasted, because it shoots over the heads of the Ina great measure wasted, because it shoots over the heads of the Indians; it does not touch their necessities, their wants, their demands. You may expend it all and the Indian is just so far from understanding how to support himself and be an individual Indian, parting company voluntarily with his tribe and his clan, as he was before he entered the school. He may be able to demonstrate a proposition in Euclid and not know how to sow the ground. We furnished the Indians down in the Indian Territory with a quantity of agricultural implements and the seed to be planted in the spring. We did not tell dians down in the Indian Territory with a quantity of agricultural implements and the seed to be planted in the spring. We did not tell them how to plant it, and they went and dug a hole and put it all into one hole, [laughter,] and their children in the mean time were in these elegant schools! I have had enough of that, and the country is coming to understand that that is money misspent, and it is no relief to that conviction to turn to this provision in the bill, saying that we have already provided for attention to that sort of education. What is proposed is instead of giving these individual Indians a

What is proposed is, instead of giving these individual Indians a little pocket money, that will be wasted, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $120,000, but in the distribution to eleven or twelve dollars apiece, to take the small sum of $10,000 out of its aggregate and authorize the President to select promising boys and girls and put them in such schools as, at Hampton and at Carlisle, are demon-strating that the Indian youth may be taught to understand that he is capable of being a man alone, acquiring property of his own that does not belong to his clan or his tribe, and separating him by his own choice and will from those strong bonds which hold him to his tribe; and in no other way can you loosen them. This is all there is

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a speech on this subject; I desire merely to say that in the amendment to the original bill submitted by the committee we have not proposed to inoriginal bill submitted by the committee we have not proposed to in-troduce a scheme for the regulation and reorganization of our entire Indian policy. It is a bill to meet a present emergency upon the country, and I have listened patiently to hear some objection that went to the real merits of the proposition of the committee from any

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will come to that presently and define the emergency. One class of objectors object to this bill because they say it is inhuman, it is cruel in its provisions; another class object to it because they say that there is too much mercy and moderation in it; and a third set of objectors say there are legal technicalities in it which do not conform to the harmony of our general laws; but not one of them has urged an objection going to the merits of the bill

This, sir, is not a question to be settled by Boston sentimentalists This, sir, is not a question to be settled by Boston sentimentalists nor by border ruffians either. It is a question to be settled by business, by sense, and by practical statesmanship. It is not a question to be settled by philanthropy on the one side nor by cruelty upon the other; neither by sentimentality nor by inhumanity and wrong.

What are the facts? I will now tell the Senator from Alabama what is the emergency that requires this bill. What is the condition of that country that has brought this question before the Senate ? It is that there has been war, which has been suspended only by the intervening of the winter and the impossibility of military operations against these warlike and hostile tribes. We do not care particularly about this bill. If any gentleman will propose a better plan the committee will gladly accept it. But while urging all these objections no man has proposed a substitute for the plan of the committee. The committee do not pretend that this plan is perfect.

Mr. FATON. May Lack my friend from Kantaky if the committee is the committee.

Mr. EATON. May I ask my friend from Kentucky if the reason war does not exist is because the Indian ponies have not been able to wat does not clear to be a state to eat during the winter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know about that. I do not know that there is much corn in that country, or grass, either. These Indians are in mountains almost inaccessible to us.

Mr. McMILLAN. Allow me to ask—
Mr. WILLIAMS. I prefer to go on if my friend will allow me. Mr. WILLIAMS. I prefer to go on if my friend will allow me.
Mr. McMILLAN. I merely wish to submit a question in regard to the remark made by the Senator, whether this is not an agreement entered into between the Secretary of the Interior, representing the Government of the United States, and the representatives of these Indian tribes; and do the committee propose themselves to substitute or will they accept a substitute in the form of a law enacted by Congress abolishing this agreement entirely?
Mr. WILLIAMS. If any gentleman will present a better scheme the committee will be most happy to accept it; but no one has presented or offered any. Gentlemen find all sorts of objections. It is much easier to find objections than to suggest remedies. It is easier to pull down than it is to build up. Now, sir, what are the difficulties? This bill or some similar measure must be adopted by Congress in order to avert the calamities of a war between the Ute Indians and in order to avert the calamities of a war between the Ute Indians and

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the United States as well. Hostilities have already existed between these Indians and the Government troops. War has existed between these indians and the Government troops. War has existed, with all the attending horrors of savage warfare, with murder, massacre, rape, and arson. The passions of the Indians have been inflamed by a sense of injustice on the part of the Federal Government in withholding from them the annuities they were justly entitled to receive, and the passions of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the outroops are the same of the white men have been engaged by the same of the s raged by the outrages perpetrated upon their kindred and their neighbors. There is no sort of doubt but that these Indians deserve chasbors. There is no sort or doubt but that these states tisement for their outrages and their crimes.

The battle with Thornburgh and the massacre at the White River agency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall, and military operagency all occurred very late in the season last fall occurred very late in the seaso tions were impossible in that country until the return of spring. During the season of cessation of hostilities the President of the United States, through his Secretary of the Interior, has tried the arts of negotiation, to see if these troubles might not be settled without a recurrence again to war when the season of spring shall return in that region of snow. Believing that he has arrived at a satisfactory conclusion of these troubles, he sends in to Congress the projet of a treaty, the memorandum of a contract, a sort of memorial to Congress asking that the stipulations be enacted into law. Is there anything wrong in that? Is there anything irregular or unusual or unconstitutional in that? Is it a treaty? If it be, is it not such a one as Congress is competent to make? What is a treaty under our Constitution? A treaty is a compact made between the United States and a foreign independent nation—made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. With this constitutional definition of a treaty, will any gentleman say that this is a treaty? Will any gentleman say that the law that we propose is even a violation or an annulment of the act of 1871, prohibiting any further treaties with the Indians as independent tribes? No, sir; it cannot be so said. It is not a weaty. It is a proposition which the Secretary of the Interior, directed by the President, sends to Congress and asks their concurrence in, that peace may be restored to that country.

What are the propositions of the bill? What does it propose to accomplish? In the first place, it accomplishes the surrender to justice of the murderers at the White River agency to be punished by our laws. In the second place, it restores to the public domain 12,000,000 acres, a vast territory, covering and embracing, it is said, the richest mineral wealth in the world. It opens all the vast country up to settlement by our miners and by our farmers. These are the two benefits that the United States are to get from this treaty.

What do we propose to give to the Indians? We propose to pay them at once the long-withheld annuity to which they are entitled. We propose, in addition to that, to transplant them in colonies, not in tribes but as colonists, upon new territory adapted to agriculture,

We propose, in addition to that, to transplant them in colonies, not in tribes but as colonists, upon new territory adapted to agriculture, a new profession which we propose to teach them. One-third of them are to go down to the southern border of Colorado upon the La Plata River; a part of them are to be settled in New Mexico, and the remainder in Colorado. The Uncompangre Utes are to be sent up on Grand River, and the White River Utes are to be settled in the Unitah reservation, in the Territory of Utah. They are to be reduced to less than one-tenth of their original territory. They are to be compacted more closely, in fertile valleys, where they may be taught agriculture and all the arts of peace. They are to be allotted lands in severalty, inalienable for twenty-five years. School-houses and dwelling-houses are to be built at the public expense; teachers are to be provided to teach them the arts of agriculture, reading and writing, and, indeed, all the arts of peace. all the arts of peace.

Is not that humane enough to satisfy the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Dawes?] Ought not their removal to satisfy the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller?] In addition to this, we propose to pay them annually an annuity of $50,000, provided that after the expiration of twenty-five years the Government of the United States may capitalize that fund and distribute it per capita among the In-

These are all the essential provisions of the bill, and I can see no objection to its passage. Its immediate passage is demanded. The committee are now considering a general law to be applicable to the whole of the Indian tribes. If this emergency had not demanded the immediate action of Congress this question would have been retained in the committee until that general law was presented; but we had proofs before us that satisfied every member of the committee that the immediate passage of this bill is demanded by the interests of the whites as well as of the Indians themselves.

We do not contend that we have a perfect bill. We shall be gled.

of the whites as well as of the Indians themselves.

We do not contend that we have a perfect bill. We shall be glad if some better plan can be presented; but something must be done, and that something must be done immediately, or with the coming of spring the forty thousand men that await the opening of that Ute reservation to settlement will be too strong to be resisted by the Indians or repressed by the Government of the United States. It will not be done; it cannot be done.

I hope, therefore, the Senate will proceed immediately to the passage of this bill, in order that the commissioners may start at once, before the snows have melted from those hills, and remove these Utes and establish them at once upon the reservations which the bill provides for them.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, as I shall vote against this bill, I desire to state briefly the reasons which will influence my action. My principal objection to the bill is that it temporizes with and postmy principal objection to the bill is that it temporizes with and postpones a final and satisfactory settlement of the Indian question, one of the most important with which we have to deal. Temporary expedients, a halting, vacillating, uncertain policy, have entailed upon us and the Indians the evils of the past and multiply the difficulties which confront us at each succeeding session of Congress.

If the debate on this bill accomplishes no other purpose it demonstrates and brings conspicuously before the country of leave as to the ideas, the diversity of opinions, the instability of laws as to the status of the Indian. He is a native and yet he is a foreigner, for when we treat with him we treat through the executive head of his when we treat with him we treat through the executive head of his nation or tribe, who exercises in that regard the functions of sovereignty. He is not accorded the privileges of a citizen, and yet he is held responsible for many of the attributes of citizenship. There are grave doubts whether he is amenable to our laws in certain localities within the jurisdiction of the United States, and in other localities he can be hunted like a dog and corralled like a wild animal. He is not a freeholder, and yet his race owns a hundred and forty-one million acres of land within our territorial limits. He cannot hold an acre of land by inheritance or transmit a rod to his descendants. He is subjected to certain of our general laws, and yet almost without is subjected to certain of our general laws, and yet almost without the protection of any of them. He "is native here and to the man-ner born," and yet we treat him in many respects as a foreigner, cir-cumscribed by the limits of a reservation outside of which he has no rights which a white man or a black man is bound to respect. He is a full-grown, stalwart man, perfectly developed in mind and body, accustomed to untutored liberty, and yet we exercise over him a paternal and personal government which dwarfs his faculties rather than cultivates and enlightens them.

My objection to this bill, Mr. President, is, that it does not tear away from this fatal policy, so disastrous to the Indian and to the peace and welfare of the whole country. It has cost us in annual appropriations $179,000,000, money paid out of the Treasury from year to year, with every prospect of being continued indefinitely unless some

I think it safe to say that it has cost thrice that sum in numerous Indian wars with which our policy in the past has inflicted the country. In the loss of human life, in the taking off of the very best and bravest of our Army, and the boldest, most enterprising, and useful of our pioneers, the mind can scarcely comprehend the estimate. And yet we propose by this legislation to continue in all essential particulars the identical policy which has cost us all this blood and treasure

The honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] for whose opinion I have great respect, speaking for himself, and as the organ of the Committee on Indian Affairs, says that this is not a treaty and this remark is repeated by the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] this morning—but an agreement with the Ute tribe of Indians; but, Mr. President, I submit that it may be an agreement and still be a treaty. It certainly bears upon its face the evidences of having been made with all the forms and ceremonials of a treaty between high contracting parties, the Secretary of the Interior, a high officer of the Executive Department of our Government, and the high officer of the Executive Department of our Government, and the chief and head-men of the executive department of the Ute government. They meet in convention, submit mutual propositions, and finally agree to the treaty, or, if you prefer, agreement, set forth in this bill and referred to in its preamble. But this is not all. It is submitted to Congress by the President, the Chief Executive of the United States, and to the "confederated bands of the Ute tribe," (that is the language of the preamble,) by the chiefs and head-men, the chief executive of the Indian nation to that nation.

Now, Mr. President, if that does not constitute a "treaty" I am at a loss to understand what does. And it is to this that I object. It has upon its face and in form and substance every element of a treaty, which involves the exercise of sovereign power by both contracting mas upon its face and in form and substance every element of a treaty, which involves the exercise of sovereign power by both contracting parties—a power which I do not believe the Ute or any other Indian tribe or nation in this country has. But granting they have this power, there is an express inhibition in the act of 1871, as I think was conclusively shown by the honorable Senator from Alabama, [Mr. Morgan,] against its exercise; and it was further shown by that Senator that Congress had the constitutional power to pass that act, and in delay a subspaced as I think a honorable. senator that Congress had the constitutional power to pass that act, and in doing so discharged, as I think, a humane and proper duty toward the Indians. I trust this Congress will take no step backward by recognizing the tribal organization of the Ute Indians in this bill, or by dealing with them in any other capacity than as individuals. I know, Mr. President, the arguments and objections that are urged against this manner of dealing with them: that they are not prepared for the responsibilities of individual action by reason of their pared for the responsibilities of individual action by reason of their savage and untutored nature, their ignorance of our language, their inexperience in the methods and habits and ways of civilized life, with its subordination to law and social order; that if we segregate them and destroy their tribal formations and the influence which can be had over them through their chiefs and head-men, we should have upon us an army of vagrants and vagabonds; that the Indians themselves would be despoiled and robbed by their white neighbor, and that they would be exterminated. But I apprehend that these difficulties are not insurmountable and are not so formidable as they appear. That we should have trouble in endeavoring to enforce obedience to our laws upon individual Indians, I do not pretend to deny: dience to our laws upon individual Indians, I do not pretend to deny; but what I do mean to say is that the advantages to be derived from that mode of dealing with them over the present recognition of their separate tribal organization will fully justify the effort at whatever cost. The test is a very simple one. Let the Indian be given to understand that the process of the sheriff or marshal shall be as effectual for him against a wrong-doer as for a law-abiding citizen against him as a wrong-doer, and the difficulties are overcome. This is the simple solution of the problem. Has not this great Government power enough and justice and honesty enough to apply this test and enforce it? It would be very humiliating to think that it had not.

But it is insisted as a reason for the early passage of this bill that an urgent, immediate necessity or exigency is pressing upon us; that we are threatened with a war on the one hand by the Indians, and on the other by the aggressive hostility and encroachment upon the on the other by the aggressive hostility and encroachment upon the reservation by the white settlers; and that the consummation of the compact between the Secretary of the Interior and the Ute Indians will pacificate matters. Surely, Mr. President, nobody, unless it be the contractors, wants an Indian war. There is not much glory in them for anybody But it seems to me that this great calamity may be averted by a little heroic treatment; and the settlers ought to be, and I have no doubt will be, controlled by an executive order and a few cavalry stationed along the borders of the reservation. This precaution appears to have been effectual heretofore. Why should it not be now? But what assurances or guarantees have we, as was suggested by the Senator from Alabama and other Senators, that the peace thus patched up may not be broken elsewhere; that we may not suggested by the senator from Alabama and other senators, that the peace thus patched up may not be broken elsewhere; that we may not have a repetition of an Indian outbreak wherever these Utes may be located? If they have been guilty of the atrocities with which they stand charged, shall their simple removal from their reservation, with handsome annuities and compensation provided for in this bill, be the price they are to pay for them? If so, I should not place much confidence in a peace thus purchased.

But there seems to be very great uncertainty in the minds of some of the ablest lawyers in the Senate as to our power to punish the criminals, if they should be apprehended. It is not at all settled, according to opinions expressed in this debate, that the Indians may not murder and ravish with impunity or with no greater penalty than a visit to Washington and a removal to some other territory with increased annuities. I give no opinion on these points myself, for I have not examined the law touching them, but I venture to say that if there is no law to punish such crimes, this Congress could not be better employed than providing them.

In my judgment it is high time that this Government was adopting some settled, fundamental, permanent, and, I was about to say, sensible, Indian policy. We are now pursuing substantially the same course toward the Indians that prevailed a half century ago, and they are just as much a menace to the peace of the country as they were then, and the antagonism between the two races is almost as pronounced. Is it not about time, then, that we should apply the principles of practical common sense to this question, and have done with the sentimentality and blunders and crimes which have grown out of our past Indian policy.

with the sentimentality and blunders and crimes which have grown out of our past Indian policy.

Let us try the efficacy of extending over the Indians and their reservations the laws of the respective States and Territories and take them into the body-politic. They are as well prepared for it now as they will ever be under our present system, and our treaty obligations need not be violated in effecting it. The Supreme Court has decided that it is entirely competent for Congress to abrogate or rescind these treaties. The dictates of good sense and the welfare of both races demand it. I do not believe it will result in the extermination of the Indian, but in his elevation and improvement. It is not necessary to deprive him of one acre of his land or one dollar of his property. On the contrary, under the well-recognized principles which govern the relation of guardian and ward we should secure his property in the safest investments, to be held in trust until his disaproperty in the safest investments, to be held in trust until his disabilities for the management of his own affairs had been removed by his progress in civilization and improvement. I do not believe that the white settler of the West would despoil and impoverish his Indian neighbor. The imputation is in my judgment a libel upon the character of the white man and the strength of the Indian. The honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] informs us that not one of the Ute Indians has been killed by a white man; and in a one of the Ote Indian has been kined by a white man; and in a great majority of the cases where the Indian has been thrown upon his own resources he has sustained himself. The most cursory reading of the last annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs must satisfy the most incredulous

These observations suggest another objection to this bill, Mr. President. In addition to what has fallen from the Senator from Alaident. In addition to what has fallen from the Senator from Alabama as to the disregard of its provisions as to the personal or individual rights which have vested in the Indians in their reservation, we take their land practically at our own price; the three-fourths of the Indians no doubt being induced to agree to it by having the price supplemented by a few trinkets or other attractions. We all know how that is accomplished. The price may not be adequate, for the Secretary says that "it is quite possible that one of the sixteen thousand square miles ceded may yield in mineral wealth ten times the sum of money of which we are to pay the interest to these Indians the sum of money of which we are to pay the interest to these Indians in the shape of an annuity." If this be so, why not give the Indians the benefit of this mineral wealth. It is just such treatment as this which has driven the Indians to acts of revenge and desperation, and the best way to escape it in the future is to throw around him where the best way to escape it in the future is to throw around him where he is the protection of equal and just laws, and require obedience to their mandates in return. We have never had any trouble in getting around "treaty stipulations" whenever we wanted his land, and why should we higgle about "treaty stipulations" in securing him in the perpetual enjoyment of his property and conferring upon him the blessings of American citizenship?

No, sir. There is, in my judgment, no difficulty in the way of making this change now, and this Ute trouble presents a fit and proper occasion for the exercise of that power by Congress. If what is said of them is true—and upon this point I express no opinion as to the degree of culpability of either the Indians or their white neighbors—they have broken their treaty obligations and forfeited all claim to any right under its provisions, and we should deal with them as with any others charged with crime; arrest and try them in a court of competent jurisdiction, organized and conducted with all those safecompetent jurisdiction, organized and conducted with all those safeguards which are thrown around the criminal and are intended for the protection of society. If there is no such court and no law for such an emergency, we had better go about providing both. If the criminals are within our jurisdiction the whole power of this Government should be exhausted in bringing them to justice; and if they have fled beyond our jurisdiction, then, I submit, we should demand their return under our extradition treaties with foreign powers. And if upon a fair investigation it should turn out that there was or could have been any possible justification for their outbreak, and that they have been wronged, punish with the same inexorable law the wrongdoer, and let the Indian understand that he shall not be maltreated with impunity. with impunity.

It is in this way that all well-regulated governments deal with their malefactors, tempering always the rigid enforcement of just laws with that mercy which comes of enlightenment and humanity. Any other course bargains away the safety and well-being of society. If there are any treaty obligations or agreements or stipulations in the way of such a course, let us proceed now in this exigency to get them out of the way, once and for all. That we have the right and constitutional power to do so I think need not be seriously argued. These "domestic dependent nations," as they have been styled by the Supreme Court—whatever they mean by it—should be converted into "domestic dependent" citizens—we know what that means. This imperium is imperium that it is the state of the state o tic dependent" citizens—we know what that means. This imperium in imperio which has been such a thorn in the sides of our progress and peace and safety should be placked out by the roots and committed to the common current of American civilization.

Mr. President, the people of Colorado can settle this Ute question better than can the people of New York, or Massachusetts, or Georgia, or South Carolina, or of them all combined. Why not authorize the governor of that State to arrest and punish such of these people as have violated its laws! If he has not the power at hand, the Constitution provides a very simple method for his procuring all the assistance he may require. They have, as I have said, forfeited their right to immunity under their treaties with the General Government, and we must not assume that the distinguished gentleman who exercises we must not assume that the distinguished gentleman who exercises the executive authority of Colorado is going to discharge those duties otherwise than as a humane, enlightened governor, or that the people of that State are going to indulge in the pastime of killing Indians for the love of blood and the gratification of a revengeful spirit. I do not believe they will do so. Nor do I believe that they will despoil and rob the Indians of any vested rights. How can they do so, Mr. President, if they would? The guardian of these Indians is the United States Government. That Government knows the metes and bounds of their twelve thousand agrees of land and can secure it to them or of their twelve thousand acres of land and can secure it to them or for their benefit. It is an area capable in extent at least of accommodating several millions of people, and there are forty-five hundred of the Utes.

There are three classes of people who would probably oppose the solution of the Indian question which I have suggested: those who compose the Indian Bureau proper, the contractors who get rich out of our Indian troubles, and the sentimentalist who would wreck the Government and create a pandemonium for the privilege of promulgating a "barren ideality." This is in no just sense a bureaucratic government. Surely our experience in an attempt to make it one has not been encouraging. The Freedmen's Bureau is not an institution to which an American citizen can point with pride; it brought upon us nothing but disgrace and dishonor and humiliation; and the Indian Bureau has not been a happy success. We had better commit this question, as all other merely race questions, to the custody of those immediately concerned, and in direct contact with the objects. They will settle them much more fairly, justly, and satisfactorily to both races than any enthusiastic theorists in a remote bureau, operating through the incompetent mediums of distant and feeble agencies. The same principles of American civilization and domestic tranquil-lity underlie the social fabrics in all parts of this country, and we must trust to love of liberty and social order to work out the local problems as they arise.

These principles apply as well to the settlement of the Indian question as to all others, and I hope to see them promptly applied and conscientiously administered. It may be proper for me to say in connection with foregoing observations, candor requires that I should say that I have not intended to impute to the present head of the Interior Department any other than the most honorable and conscientious conduct. I believe he has done the very best possible under the circumstances. His administration has been and the administration of any man will be smirched by disagreeable scandals in the management of the Indian Bureau—scandals and wrongs which he has promptly and vigorously rebuked and corrected when brought to his attention. They are incident to, and almost the necessary consequence of, the Indian system. I desire, too, to say that I have the highest respect for the ability, patriotism, and purposes of the honorable Committee on Indian Affairs, from which this bill emanates, and I dissent with great diffidence and related to the conclusions of its indement diffidence and reluctance from the conclusions of its judgment.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I desire to consume but a brief portion of the time of the Senate. The conclusions of the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] it seems to me ought to have been drawn in favor of the pending bill. It seems to me that the pending bill goes beyond any plan ever yet proposed in either House of Congress in furtherance of the views he has so ably expressed in the speech he has just concluded. I have never been enamored of the Indian policy of this Government which has heretofore prevailed, especially that inaugurated under the administration of General Grant, known as the "peace policy." The Indians should, in my judgment, be treated as responsible human beings, and held amenable to law and authority, not humored like children. I believe that the so-called "peace policy" has been more prolific of war and more oner-ous in expense than any other that has ever been pursued by the Government.

Repeated efforts have been made to reverse that policy. At the session of Congress before the last, the House of Representatives sent a well-matured bill to the Senate providing for a transfer of the Indian bureau to the War Department. Some two years before that time, I believe, a bill had been passed in the House, certainly one had been discussed in the Senate, providing for such transfer. The bill to which I allude, which came here from the House since I have been a member of this body, was defeated, as previous efforts had been defeated in the same direction. The policy of the transfer having been defeated, it has seemed to me desirable that some measure be adopted, that some step be initiated, looking to a change in the existing policy. That step is found in the pending bill.

The bill now before the Senate is unlike any other I have known of heretofore before either House of Congress. It proposes to retain of the tribal power and of the tribal relations of the Indians scarcely a shadow, just enough of it to speak of as still remaining, but in substance, in vitality, in all essentials, it remits the Indians to the laws of the States and Territories in which they are located and to the of the States and Territories in which they are located and to the laws of the United States just as citizens stand under those laws. The bill has gone as far in that direction as it is possible to go and leave a vestige of the former Indian policy standing. Their lands are to be taken in severalty, not in a compact body, but in tracts with intervening public lands between. The Indians are to be passed under the laws of the States and Territories wherein their lands are situated and the authority of the courts under those laws. They can uated and the authority of the courts under those laws. They can sue and be sued in the courts of the States and Territories where they live. Estates will descend and vest in accordance with the laws of those States. The authority of the head-men and chiefs will be broken down, because two governing authorities cannot exist together. The laws of the States and Territories will be supreme and that of the chiefs and the head-men will be gone.

What is then to be left of the tribal relation? Is there anything?

The only instrumentality by which the Government of the United States will hold on to its jurisdiction over them is through the provision in the bill which binds the Government to maintain public vision in the bill which binds the Government to maintain public schools among them, and which necessitates the keeping of an agent in order to pay the annuities provided for them. This seems to fill the measure exactly of what the honorable Senator from South Carolina thinks should be done. Yet he proposes to vote against the bill! The honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] says he wants the Government to deal with the Indians as it deals with the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Kentucky and other citizens. This is the longest step in that direction ever yet made by any bill proposed in either House of Congress. It takes the Indian away from the authority of his chief, it breaks down the authority of the tribe, and it substitutes the laws of the United States and the laws of the State government in their stead, and gets him very nearly in a position to be dealt with as the Senator from Kentucky says he wants to see the Indian dealt with.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, I should like to ask him if in order to make this bill a law and the treaty binding upon either party it is not necessary to have the consent of three-fourths of these Indians?

Mr. COKE. Of course. If you will pass the bill and cease to make captious objections, we will get the consent necessary. I do not mean any disrespect to the Senator by the word "captious," but I do say that it does seem to me that gentlemen professing to desire, and no doubt desiring, the objects sought to be obtained by the bill have sought to throw a great many obstructions in the way of its passage. The bill provides that three-fourths of these Indians shall sign this contract before it shall become a contract binding upon them and upon the Government. This is in plain accordance with the treaty passed prior to the act of 1871, which denationalized the Indian ribes, and being a treaty is a part of the supreme law of the land. The bill provides that the consent of three-fourths of the Indians shall be necessary, and their consent will doubtless be obtained if the bill is passed; at least such is my information.

The Senator from South Carolina calls it a treaty. I call it a contract, to be made as a government may contract with a corporation, with an individual, with a company, with a joint-stock association. It is true the Indian tribes were denationalized by the act of 1871, but was their contracting power destroyed? What say the statutes on that subject? What has been the practice of the Government? Has not the Government recognized tribal organizations since then; and if the tribal organization remains discontinuous contractions. and if the tribal organization remains for any purpose, cannot the

In all the years since the passage of the act of 1871, which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] says deprives this tribe of the capacity to make contracts, we find the legislation of Congress recognizing that capacity; we see contracts since that time constantly made with Indian tribes and ratified by Congress, one even with this very Ute tribe. Yet the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from South Carolina claim this contract to be a treaty in solar test that South Carolina claim this contract to be a treaty in order to say that it violates the act of 1871. The act of 1871 simply denationalized the Indian tribes as sovereign treaty-making powers, but left them, the Indian tribes as sovereign treaty-making powers, but left them, as the practice of the Executive Department, as the practice of the Indian Department show, and as the positive legislation of Congress shows, in possession of those attributes which enable them to contract as tribes. If they had not that power, still such a contract is a valid and legal contract upon another ground, and that is that under the treaty of 1868 the lands ceded in this bill were granted them coupled with the condition that they might be alienated to the United States upon the signature to the deed of cession of three-fourths of the Indians of the tribe; and the bill pending before the Senate provides in so many words for that sort of a deed of cession.

Call them what you please, if they are not a tribe, they have the power under the deed of cession as individual persons stripped of any tribal ties whatever to make the contract embodied in the bill.

I have great respect for the ability of the honorable Senator from Alabama, and I have very great respect for him personally. I mean no disrespect to him when I say that it does seem to me that this point is a legal technicality, not rising to the dignity of a legal ques-

I have said, Mr. President, that I have been opposed to the existing policy of the Government with reference to the Indians. Upon the floor of the Senate two years ago I earnestly advocated the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. The measure was defeated. I do not desire to see the administration of Indian affairs continued through the same methods which have brought disgrace upon the Government and ruin upon the Indians for many years past. I want a change in the policy of this Government toward the Indians. I cannot get it by transferring them to the War Department, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] would have done. Then I want it in the mode proposed by this bill, as the only practical mode of obtaining it. This bill, if enacted into law, will give us a change of administration, and the Indians will become almost citizens under the State law. They will be individualized and trained zens under the State laws. They will be individualized, and trained to the duties and obligations of citizens, and will enjoy the protecto the duties and obligations or citizens, and will enjoy the protec-tion of the laws. They may become vagrants, as the honorable Sen-ator from South Carolina says; but anything for a change in the pol-icy which has brought naught but corruption, Indian wars, and most onerous burdens. The Indians may become vagrants; I hope they will not. We have aimed in the draught of the bill to retain the juris-diction of the National Government for certain purposes over them in the hope that the Government will be able to throw around them its protecting arm when they may need it, and help them in their ascent of the steep hill to be climbed before they reach the heights

I trust, Mr. President, that our anticipation of benefits to the Indians may be realized, but if the bill is to be a failure in that respect, if we fail to do anything through the schools that are provided for, if we fail to teach them agriculture, if we fail to teach them the value of laws in their duties and in their obligations, we shall certainly have accomplished one thing by the bill. One thing we shall have accomplished without any sort of question. Sixteen or seventeen thousand square miles of land in Colorado are locked up under the provisions of a treaty which is a part of the supreme law of this land by which we have solemnly guaranteed to these Indians that no white man, except the officers and employés of the Govern-ment of the United States, shall ever, without their consent, intrude upon it. I will read it:

An act to ratify an agreement with certain Ute Indians in Colorado and to make an appropriation for carrying out the same.

ARTICLE V. All the provisions of the treaty of 1868 not altered by this agreement shall continue in force; and the following words, from article II of said treaty, namely: "The United States now solemnly agrees that no persons except those herein authorized to do so, and except such officers, agents, and employés of the Government as may be authorized to enter upon Indian reservations in discharge of duties enjoined by law, shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described in this article, except as herein otherwise provided," are hereby expressly reaffirmed, except so far as they applied to the country herein relinquished.

Sixteen thousand square miles of territory in the State of Colorado are absolutely locked up under that provision of law, to enforce which the Indians have the right to demand all the power of the Government, military as well as civil, upon which on all sides, at every point upon every line the constituents of the honorable Senator from Colorado are crowding in, staking off ranches and mining claims. The Indians, knowing that they were solemnly guaranteed these rights, are standing there with arms in their hands and defiance in their bosoms, waiting for this settlement to see whether or not they are to be protected in their rights thrice guaranteed, because they have

Certainly, if we pass this bill we will have unlocked this Territory and we will have averted an Indian war. There can be no question about that part of it. All else may fail. We may do nothing else, We may fail in everything else, but that certainly will be accomplished if we pass the bill. We will avert an Indian war in Colorado; we will keep faith with these Indians; we will avoid a collision between this Government and the people of Colorado now intruding in defence of the systems law as explained in the treaty I have interest. in defiance of the supreme law, as embodied in the treaty, I have just read, upon this Indian reservation. That we are certain of; that much we know. The rest is conjecture. We have done the best we could. The committee have called to their aid the experience of all the experts in the Indian Department. They have had before them the honorable Secretary of the Interior. They have examined all the reports of agents. They have availed themselves of every avenue and source of information; and by the light of all these experiences they have prepared the bill now pending before the Senate. We may fail in it, however; it may not work well. But, sir, in one respect it will work well. It will save bloodshed in Colorado. It will protect the honor of the Government in its dealings with these Indians. It will save the humble roof of many a frontiersman in the Northwest who otherwise would have the midnight lighted up with the burning of his household and his home.

All this may be worth very little. It is said that it will cost

$4,000,000. The consideration to be paid by the Government for the sixteen thousand square miles of territory is an annuity of $50,000 per annum, which may be capitalized at the end of twenty-five years and paid over in cash. One million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars at 4 per cent. will bring $50,000. If you add to that 4 per cent. interest for twenty-five years it will, with the other amounts appropriated, run it up to some $2,700,000; but that is not a fair way to count it, because the money is presumed to be worth the interest on it. It will cost the Government of the United States $1,250,000 to stop an Indian war. That may cost ten million, or fifteen million, or twenty million dollars, besides women and children and men who may be killed and scalped, and whose cabins and houses and homes the Government is bound to protect and defend may be destroyed.

I want to see the gentleman who will put a few dollars against the precious lives, the blood, and the earnings of years of the constituents of the honorable Senator from Colorado. He will not do it; no gentleman here will do it. Leaving out everything except the question of cost, to say nothing of the solemn guarantee of the Government to these Indians in three solemn treaties, and treaties that are not with denationalized tribes, but treaties that are supreme laws of not with denationalized tribes, but treaties that are supreme laws of this land—to say nothing of these but simply on the question of cost, I ask if Senators are going to vote against this bill? Shall not the Government protect its honor with these Indians? I wish that every member of the Senate and of Congress would read the treaties with these Indians. No government was ever more clearly, more closely bound than ours is to see to it that no man without the consent of these Indians shall go upon the sixteen thousand square miles of territory secured to these Indians, yet intruders are pouring in on it by thousands.

Gentlemen declaim against this bill, and oppose it with all sorts of technical objections, yet fail in every instance to offer any substitute for it, any amendment of any important feature in it, or to suggest in what way it may be improved or amended. The question is one which presses for settlement, and they would defeat this without suggesting any other. The Executive has acted, and has thrown upon Congress the responsibility of accepting his action or substituting some other in its place. The good sense of the Senate will not reject this measure at the instance of those who, although denouncing it, acknowledge its expellered by failing to propose any other.

Mr. President, this bill is one fashioned very much after my own ideas, not meaning that I am the author of it, for it is the joint work of the Interior Department and the committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate. It corresponds very nearly with my ideas of a proper bill, my views being that the Indians should be taken out from their present government and either sent to the War Department and present government and either sent to the War Department or made citizens. It is in the line of a judicious and proper departure from our existing policy with reference to the Indians. It comes as near making them citizens as it is possible to do without leaving them so that a great many or a large proportion of them would have to be put under guardianship under laws of the States and Territories when located.

I prefer, rather than have the State courts encumbered with the burden of taking care of these Indians under guardianship laws upon the idea that they cannot manage their own affairs, to retain in the hands of the General Government a sufficient authority, such as this bill does, to throw around them the mantle of its protection and care. Besides, there should be some authority which should be empowered to give them aid and help them along. While I am unconditionally in favor of remitting these Indians to all the duties and burdens of citizenship, the clause in the bill which retains the twenty-eighth title of the Revised Statutes, pertaining to Indian government, so far as applicable, is in my judgment made necessary by the peculiar condition of these people to which I have referred. Take the bill as a whole, and it is one which, while not all that I could desire, yet is one that I approve. The committee have labored on it earnestly and zealously, and have brought it in as the only measure upon which they could all agree, with the single exception of the Senator from Congrous [Mr. SLATER]. Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.

Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.]

I commend the bill to the attention and the kindly consideration of the Senate, because it is approved by the Executive, by the Interior Department, by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and is the result of the best judgment and the best consideration they have been able to give it. While gentlemen are able to pick flaws, to make objections, to indulge in vague denunciatory generalities, to say this thing and that thing and the other thing about it, without particularizing, without offering a specific amendment to the points in which they allege the measure is deficient—while they do all this I ask the Senate to remember the difficulties under which we labor, to remember the impossibility of providing any measure that shall be perfect on this subject, and to take it simply as a beginning and the best solution we can present of a most difficult question, until some experience of its results shall suggest that which none of the objectors have suggested, some specific mode of amendment.

I will say further that it is the intention of the committee, as was said by my colleague, [Mr. Williams,] to bring in a general bill upon asid by my colleague, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] to bring in a general bill upon this subject, designed to cover the entire Indian question, at as early a day as possible, and present it to the consideration of the Senate, but this is an exceptional case, and the bill now pending possesses the general features of the bill now being considered in committee, so far as they have been considered. Therefore, I ask the Senate to pass this bill to meet an exceptional emergency without regard to the general bill which the committee will bring in hereafter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs tells us that that committee have presented a bill here which has exhausted the intellect of the committee, and that because it has exhausted the intellect of the committee everybody else should submit to and accept the bill as the only thing that can be done. Now, Mr. President, I have great confidence in the chairman of the committee and in the entire committee for that matter; but I know that they did not exhaust themselves on this bill; I know that they did not give this bill a very thorough examination; I know that they felt under constraint to take this bill and pass this bill heaves they allowed themselves to dren into the bill because they allowed themselves to drop into the error of supposing that these people were to be treated with by the United States only with their consent. That is the radical error of this legislation; and if there can be any more serious mistake in legislation than that, I do not know what it can be.

I say they neither exhausted themselves as to the power of Congress over this subject nor as to the condition of facts which would determine whether in equity we ought to assume a power which everybody here now admits we possess; that is, to legislate for these people without their consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Colorado; but I should like to have him point out the authority upon which he bases the statement that we can legislate for these people without their consent.

Mr. TELLER. The department of Government that has that in hand, and whose duty it is to pass upon that question and to define our powers, has determined that very positively in 11 Wallace, where the Senator will find it. That decision never has been overruled; it never has been questioned; it is in the line of the current of opinions for from fifty to seventy-five years. I refer to the Cherokee tobacco case. We by express provision in 1866 declared that certain revenue laws should never be enforced in the Indian Territory; and in violation of that treaty, as they said, we did by act of Congress throw over them those laws, and made them amenable to those laws, and included them in a collection district. They came to the Supreme Court, saying that was a violation of their treaty. It was clearly a violation of the provision. Nobody doubted that. The Supreme Court unanimously passed upon that subject, and said that Congress might annul any passed upon that subject, and said that congress hight annul my treaty that had been made.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand the Senator. I agree that we can abrogate a treaty or violate a treaty; that is to say, we have the physical power to do it.

Mr. TELLER. "Violate" is not the term. When the legislative power of the Government takes hold of a treaty it abrogates the treaty. To "violate" means another thing, an entirely different thing. To "violate" means another thing, an entirely different thing. We do it then by constitutional methods and in law that is always supposed to be right in equity, also when it is done by constitutional methods. The Secretary of the Interior may have violated a treaty when he withheld the money that was due them; somebody may violate it in that way; but Congress does not violate any treaty when it says that that treaty shall be at an end.

Now, it must be admitted that we have the power to do this; and Now, it must be admitted that we have the power to do this; and it was simply a question whether there were any circumstances to justify us in doing it. What were the circumstances; and did the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs exhaust themselves to get at the facts? Did they call anybody before them? Did they inquire of anybody, except those who represent these Indians, as to what the facts were? When I produced here, as I did the first day that I addressed the Senate, the evidence showing that of every single band of these life Linking there were now the large and represent in this dressed the Senate, the evidence showing that of every single band of these Ute Indians there were parts and parcels engaged in this fight, did the committee look into that? Did they inquire into it at all? What did they do? They assumed on an outside statement that the White Rivers were the only Indians engaged in it, while they knew if they had looked up the reports, as I said the other day, that if there were four hundred Indians engaged, there could not have been four hundred White Rivers. There must have been some from other bands, because it would have taken all those Indians, including the old men too old to go to battle, and they had left thirty Indians on the agency, and some up on Bear River. I say that the committee cannot stand here and assert that they have exhausted all effort, and, therefore, we are under obligations to vote for this bill. They do not know to-day who were engaged in that fight except as they have picked it up since this discussion commenced, and they made no effort picked it up since this discussion commenced, and they made no effort to find out.

Did the committee look into the condition of the country where they propose to put these Indians? Did they examine to see whether it was a mineral country or not? When I say it is an unsuitable place for these Indians, I am met by the statement that it is a very suitable place for them. The committee could have found that out. It is a mining country. It could have been proved to this committee in two hours that it was a mining country by the geological experts of the nation who are in the city engaged in Government employ. I have not brought them here; I have not the power. I have not each echised them on the subject, but I know, and I know from the head of the geological department, that every man who knows anything about it would come here and testify that it is a mineral country. Did the committee look into that?

Do they not know, and does not everybody know that the success Did the committee look into the condition of the country where of this enterprise depends largely on the kind of land the Indians are put upon? When I said the other day that the Uintah reservation was a more desirable place, I was told that it was not true. I was told that it was not to desirable as the Grand River country and that it was not a suitable place to put them. All these facts could have been brought to the knowledge of the committee, and the committee could have been prepared and ought to have been prepared (I say it with all due respect) to have settled these questions for the Senate. That I regard as their duty. They are not the simple agents of the Secretary of the Interior to present a bill because he submits it to them; and I am under no more obligation to vote with this committee than I would be if the bill came directly from the Secretary of the Interior to the Senate, if that thing were possible. rior to the Senate, if that thing were possible.

Mr. President-

Mr. President—
Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Before my colleague leaves this branch of the subject, I should like to ask him one question.
Mr. TELLER. Very well.
Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I wish to ask him whether in his opinion the judgment of Ouray himself in regard to a suitable place for the location of these Indians would not be a very safe and sound judgment, whether Ouray is not an intelligent man, and does not know the kind of land these Indians need, and whether his judgment would not be good?

Mr. TELLER. I will answer that by saying that Ouray is an intelligent Indian; he is an Indian of ability, there is no doubt; but that he understands the necessity of putting these men and expects them to go on land for the purpose of doing work, I deny; and I doubt today whether Ouray can comprehend and understand what is intended by this bill, or what is intended by the statement of "land in several terms".

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. If my colleague will allow me to interrupt him one moment further, I will say that Ouray himself lives in a framehouse on a farm, of which eighty acres are under cultivation, and has as good an eye for farming land as any man I know of, and I would trust to his judgment as soon as I would to that of any man I know of as to where would be a good location for farming land. And I wish to say now that Ouray himself selected this land. It was not assigned to him. He took it of his own choice.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that. I understand that Ouray dictates this legislation to us; and that is what I complain of. I complain that the interests of the three hundred thousand people in Colorado are left to this renegade chief. Gentlemen may talk as much as they choose about his ability and his devotion to the whites; he as they choose about his ability and his devotion to the whites; he is an Indian, with an Indian heart and with Indian blood; and he is working for what he thinks is the interest of his tribe. He knows they do not intend, without a struggle that will end in his dethronement from power, to enter upon the walks of civilized life; and he, like lots of other men who are not Indians, is looking for the dollars to come out of this stipend that the Government gives him. I understand that he distrete the legislation. My collegged not tell derstand that he dictates the legislation. My colleague need not tell me that. I knew it from the beginning; and I am here to protest against that kind of legislation.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I merely mentioned that as an evidence that this particular spot selected was a fit place for these Indians to live, and not to show that he dictated terms.

Mr. TELLER. No matter what my colleague introduced it for, nevertheless it shows the fact. The Secretary said before the committee that these Indians would not go to any other place. Whom did he consult? Ouray on the one hand and Captain Jack on the other. Captain Jack and Ouray acting together said they would not go to any other place than this. So I am justified in saying that they dictate this legislation.

But in order that I may not be accused of wanting to put these Indians where they ought not to go, and that I may not be accused, as I know I shall be, of cruelty toward these Indians, and that I may not be criticised, as I have been already, as being bloodthirsty and anxious for war and all that, I want to call the attention of the Senate to a statement made in 1874 by Mr. Powell and Mr. Ingalls, who were appointed a special commission by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to go to this very country to examine a suitable place for the Indians to be located—I speak now of the Uintah reservation—men who are familiar with that whole country, and they say, speaking of the Uintah reservation:

The reservation on the Uintah is well known to one of your commissioners. There is an abundance of good soil, plenty of water, and convenient timber. The climate is good for the growth of smaller grains and vegetables, but not favorable to the raising of corn.

But it is a great deal lower and more favorable to raising corn than the White River.

Good range for cattle is practically unlimited-

That cannot be said of the White River-in fact, there is room enough for all the Indians of Utah.

Perhaps there is no finer valley than the Unitah in the territory of the United States west of the hundredth meridian.

I think I shall be exonerated from any special desire to punish these Indians by putting them on any poor land in the West. I propose that they shall be put in a better place, and I say this committee could have determined that question and could have determined it in two hours if they had seen fit so to do.

I do not desire to detain the Senate by going over what I have said before; but I do want to call attention to another thing. It is said before; but I do want to call attention to another thing. It is said we are confronted with an emergency. What is the emergency? "Why," said one Senator the other day, "that these Indians might get their spring crops in." That is admitted, I believe, all around to-day not to be a pressing emergency. I believe it is generally conceded that they will not do any farming until June; that is about the time they will have to begin up there at all events, and so they will get along very well for a while yet. The other objection is that forty thousand miners are pressing on the flanks of this reservation and are bound to make a lodgment there. I do not disguise that and are bound to make a lodgment there. I do not disguise that truth; I do not deny it. I will admit it, and I presume they will go in there; but they are not citizens of Colorado any more than they are citizens of the States of Senators who sit around me. Most of are citizens of the States of Senators who sit around me. Most of them are not yet voters in Colorado. They have come from every portion of the United States and from the isles of the sea, and they do propose to go in there in spite of law and everything else. They have done it everywhere from Plymouth Rock back, and they will continue to do it, and their presence need not make war if the Government is prepared, as it should be, with its troops to deal with these Indians, whom, I say, ought now to be under the control, not of the Interior Department, but of the War Department.

It was said the other day that I was opposed to negotiations; that I wanted the Utes to be pursued at once before the women were recovered. Mr. President, I never was consulted; I knew nothing about it; but I am always opposed to negotiation with men who have armain their hands and who are in the condition and position of these Indians. I was opposed to negotiation, and I was especially opposed Indians. I was opposed to negotiation, and I was especially opposed Indians. I was opposed to negotiation, and I was especially opposed to it after these women had been surrendered. I denied the right of the Interior Department to say to the Army: "Now stop, and there shall be no punishment for the crimes so committed." I denied it because I knew it was unwise and I knew it was unsafe for us.

The honorable Senator from Texas says that if we shall get this bill we shall have accomplished one thing, we shall have avoided a war. That is what I deny; that is what I say is not correct. I say when you have done this you have inaugurated a war, and a war that will last not simply for 1880, but in all probability for the next fifteen or twenty years, until this people are either removed or annihilated. It is said that this bill maintains the tribal relation to some extent, and in other respects breaks it up, and that it gives to these Indians and in other respects breaks it up, and that it gives to these Indians land in severalty, and that the upshot of the whole thing will be that they will settle down quietly in their cabins, and there will be peace in all our borders. I heard the other day that Indians were here from the West, the Chippewas, clamoring for land in severalty. I say here to-day that there is no portion of the Indians in the United States clamoring for land in severalty. It is not true; it cannot be proven by the facts; and while agents may write from their agencies that the Indians want land in severalty and are asking for it, they are not asking for it at all. They may ask for land upon which to go, but they do not ask for it in severalty, and they do not know what it means. I said the other day that I understood the New York Indians had only recently adopted the principle of land in severalty. I find that the New York Indians to-day are resisting, with an energy equal to that with which they resist everything that they are opposed to, the allotment of land to them in severalty in at least two of those ancient tribes. Every Indian in the Indian country is resisting it, and the Chippewas who are traversing our streets and come here for land in severalty, as who are traversing our streets and come here for land in severalty, as the newspapers say, are being instructed by the Interior Department in the principle of land in severalty in the hope that they will take it.

Mr. VEST. Before the Senator takes his seat, let me say that in his statement that none of the Indians in the Indian Territory are claiming land in severalty he is unquestionably mistaken. The Committee on Territories heard from those at the Quapaw agency, the Peorias and Miamies, that they asked for land in severalty.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I make my statement from the reports of the Government officers on the subject.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I make my statement from the reports of the Government officers on the subject.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I stated the other day that some of the Indians were disposed to take land in severalty, among others the Sioux Indians of Dakota, who were recently a very wild tribe. I made that statement not unadvisedly; but after having carefully looked into and inquired as to the facts, I state now that if the honorable Senator desires to seek for the simple truth in this matter he can find within twenty-four hours that what I said was true, that the Sioux are demanding land in severalty and are taking it from choice.

Mr. TELLER. They have not done it, and they have the opportunity to do it. They need not come here to Washington for that. The Chippewas have a treaty by which they can take land in severalty.

tunity to do it. They need not come here to Washington for that. The Chippewas have a treaty by which they can take land in severalty, and they have been the wards of this Government for more than forty years. Since 1854, if I am not very much mistaken in the date, they could have taken lands in severalty. We have paid out for the Chippewa Indians $9,000,000, and yet they have not taken land in severalty; neither are they likely so to do. I know it is stated in the report that they want land in severalty, that they demand land in severalty. They demand land, but not land in severalty, and there is where the distinction is, and there is where it must be made. They do not demand land in severalty while they are wild Indians. They never have and they never will. If these Chippewas want it they can get it; if the Sioux want it they can get it; but does anybody suppose if they do get it that each Indian becoming the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of land solves this problem and settles this question and makes those men civilized instead of savages? What difference does it make to the people of Colorado whether they settle down and have a fee-simple title to their land, or whether they hold it under the usual title of Indians, by simple occupation? Is it not worse for us that they should be there as fee-simple owners? Is it not a fact, then, that they are then fixed upon us and cannot be taken away and never will be taken away while this land-in-severalty prin-

I will not detain the Senate; I have talked about this subject a couple of times; but this is a matter of importance to us and it is a couple of times; but this is a matter of importance to us and it is a matter of importance to the Indians, and I say with all deference to the Senate that there seems to be a haste as if there was such an emergency that we must settle this matter at once. And what is the great emergency when you come right down to the fact? The fact is undisputed that these men having commenced a war, having fought us and defeated us in battle, have dictated to us the terms, and stand there, not with their traditional tomahawk, but with their improved Winchester rifles, anxious, ready to go on and fight, and it is said because they are anxious to fight we must, therefore, immediately treat, and when we have given them this annuity the whole thing will be settled!

Mr. President, if I believed that, I would compromise the dignity of the nation. The Senator from Kansas says it cannot be done when you deal with Indians. I would do it. I would yield my objections if that would do any good; but with this sentiment active in their hearts, are they going to settle down quietly and let you alone? In six months the war will begin, and we shall have then less preparation than now unless the Government puts troops there and builds a fort; and you have heard what the General of the Army says. He wants $100,000 for forts. But the bill contains no provision for the Army; it contains no provision for troops. There is no guarantee to the citit contains no provision for troops. There is no guarantee to the citizens of Colorado that troops are to be there to protect us against these Indians. I have not the slightest idea, after this farce is enacted, these Indians. I have not the slightest idea, after this farce is enacted, and these men are settled down in a camp and an agency established, that there will be any troops put in the vicinity; and who is to protect our miners who then go into these hills from these aggressive Indians?

Mr. President, we might take time and we might settle this once for all; and the committee ought to have taken time, first, to have known whether the place where they proposed to send the Indians was a practicable place to put them; secondly, whether there was any other place where they could have put them; and if so, they ought to have said, "There is the place for you togo to." But it is not enough for me to know that it is the best thing they could do under the circumstances. I have a right to demand of the committee and of the Senate something more and better than this. of the Senate something more and better than this.

Mr. President, I have not questioned any man's motive in voting for this bill. I have made no imputations of any kind. I concede to every man who votes on this question the right to vote as his judgment dictates, and I demand that right for myself. I do not intend to be dictated to because the committee are here almost unanimous, because the Executive of the nation is here with his suggestion that because the Executive of the nation is here with his suggestion that it is a fair bill, nor because the Secretary of the Interior is here saying that it is the best that can be done. I propose to vote upon this question with reference not simply to my individual interest but to the interest of the people of the State I am attempting in part to represent, the interest of the whole people of the nation, and with reference to a principle that I believe if it is not adopted and adhered to by the nation will continue the disgraceful condition of Indian affairs that we have now all over this country. Whenever you shall say, "By the strong hand of the Government we will quit leaving to these Indians the question as to what we shall do, and we will exercise our judgment on it; we will determine what is right and what is wrong, and you must submit to our power and authority," as we do with all other people in this country, we shall have peeper and not fill then other people in this country, we shall have peace, and not till then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Dawes.]

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

Mr. EATON. The Senator from Missouri giving way, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust that motion will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Connecticut to move an adjournment.

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and fifty-five min-utes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. THURSDAY, April 8, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS. Mr. CLYMER. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. Mr. SCALES and others rose.

Mr. CLYMER. I am appealed to by several gentlemen to allow some other business to come in; but I think this appropriation bill is at present the most important matter before us. The motion of Mr. CLYMER was not agreed to.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBERTSON, for one week; To Mr. KING, for one week

To Mr. Gibson, for one week, on account of the dangerous illness of his brother; and

To Mr. WASHBURN, for ten days, from to-morrow, on account of important business

PUBLIC BUILDING, GREENSBOROUGH, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5075) to erect a public building in the town of Greensborough, North Carolina, and that the bill be considered and passed now. I will state—

Mr. KEIFER. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at nineteen minutes after twelve o'clock. Reports from committees are in order; and the call rests with the Committee on

PENSIONS.

Mr. WHITEAKER, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 400) granting a pension to Jacob Srite, of Georgia, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 428) granting a pension to Margaret A. Spencer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be

Mr. MILES, from the same committee, reported back adversely the following bill and petition; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

Mr. NEAL also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 589) to repeal the charter of the Washington Market Company; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be

SALE OF UNITED STATES PROPERTY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4590) to provide for the sale of certain property owned by the United States in the District of Columbia, with amendments; which were referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES H. TOMPKINS.

Mr. WASHBURN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5703) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. Cox in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] raises the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will address himself to the point

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I regard this point of order as of very great importance. While I will not occupy many moments in attempting to have the Chair understand the precise questions of order which can or ought to be made against this amendment, in my judgment, I shall have to ask the Chair to indulge me for a little

The proposed amendment has just been read. I shall claim under the rule that it is not in order because it, at least for the coming fiscal year, changes existing law. I shall claim also it does not retrench expenditure. I shall claim it was not reported at all, as a matter of fact, and properly considered under our rules, from the Committee on Military Affairs. I shall also claim, assuming I am wrong in that point, that the Committee on Military Affairs have no jurisdiction on the subject-matter of this proposed amendment to the Army appropriation bill.

And now, sir, before I proceed to take these points up and discuss them in detail, in order that I may demonstrate the first point if possible, I ask the Clerk to read section 2002 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2002. No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask the Clerk also to read sections 2004 and 2005, to show the present condition of the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sgc. 2004. All citizens of the United States who are otherwise qualified by law to vote at any election by the people in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision, shall be entitled and allowed to vote at all such elections, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; any constitution, law, custom, usage, or regulation of any State or Territory, or by or under its authority, to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2005. When, under the authority of the constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of any Territory, any act is required to be done as a prerequisite or qualification for voting, and by such constitution or laws persons or officers are charged with the duty of furnishing to citizens an opportunity to perform such prerequisite, or to become qualified to vote, every such person and officer shall give to all citizens of the United States the same and equal opportunity to perform such prerequisite, and to become qualified to vote.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the Clerk read next sections 5298, 5299, and 5528. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KEIFER. Let the Clerk read next sections 5298, 5299, and 5528. The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5298. Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President, to emforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any State or Territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the millitia of any or all the States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, or to suppress such rebellion, in whatever State or Territory thereof the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed, or the execution thereof forcibly obstructed.

Sec. 5299. Whenever insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combinations, or conspiracies in any State so obstructs or hinders the execution of the laws thereof, and of the United States, as to deprive any portion or class of the people of such State of any of the rights, privileges, or immunities, or protection, named in the Constitution and secured by the laws for the protection of such rights, privileges, or immunities, and the constituted anthorities of such State are unable to protect. or, from any cause, fall in or refuse protection of the people in such rights, such facts shall be deemed a denial by such State of the equal protection of the laws to which they are entitled under the Constitution of the United States, and in all such cases, or whenever any such insurrection, violence, unlawful combination, or conspiracy, opposes or obstructs the laws of the United States, or the due execution thereof, or impedes or obstructs the due course of justice under the same, it shall be lawful for the President, and it shall be his duty, to take such measures, by the employment of the militia or the land and naval forces of the United States, or of either, or by other means, as he may deem necessary, for the suppression

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have caused to be read these sections of the United States statutes which are in force, for the purpose of making clear this one point, to wit, that the proposed amendment would change existing law for and during the ensuing fiscal year. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not prepared to concede now that it is within the power of Congress through any sort of legislation to take away from the President of the United States his power under the Constitution to execute the laws of the United States. And six while I state that proposition I doubt forther works. And, sir, while I state that proposition I doubt further very seriously, whether or not by any legislation which we may put upon the statute-books we can take away from the President the power to execute all books we can take away from the President the power to execute an of the laws of the United States which he is sworn when he enters npon the duties of his office to execute. While I say this I am bound to assume that this proposed amendment is offered for the purpose of annulling that presidential power, or, in other words, changing existing law. Under section 2002 of the Revised Statutes we find that the military, naval, and civil officers of the Government are to be punished if they, in any improper way, interfere with elections; but we also find by the clearest sort of implication that it is regarded under our law enimently right and proper indeed absolutely lawful. ander our law eminently right and proper, indeed absolutely lawful, for these military, naval, and civil officers of the Government to keep the peace at the polls under certain conditions. Now, so far as this section can apply at all, it is intended to prohibit the President of the United States from using the military power of this Government to keep the peace at the polls on election days, and to that extent, Mr. Chairman, I hold that it would change existing law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My point of order is that the gentleman is not confining himself to the point made against the amendment, but is making an ad captandum speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point

Mr. KEIFER. With all deference to the Chair, I desire to state that I am proceeding to do that, as I understand it, and I trust that I will not be under the censorship of a man who is used to making ad captandum speeches, for which purpose he takes wide latitude. I am trying to demonstrate as briefly as I can that this amendment is out of order on the ground that it changes existing law, first, because it takes away from the President of the United States the power to nse, when necessary, the military force of the Government to keep the peace at the polls. I might extend it by running over each of the several sections of the statutes which I have caused to be read. But it will be apparent to every person who reads the sections or who has read them and examines this proposed amendment that if it passes all the power expressly given under these several sections to the President of the United States to use the military officers of this Government to execute the laws on certain occasions and to execute the laws of the land where there has been a breach of the peace, or where riot reigns, or where violence is controlling the peaceable ac-tion of the people—I say that this amendment is offered here for the purpose of saying to the President he shall not use these officers or any part of the Army for the purpose of preserving the peace. That is the effect of it.

Now, it is true this amendment does not say that the Army shall not be used for the purpose of preserving the peace at the polls or for the purpose of executing the laws of the United States, the duty of executing which is intrusted to the President of the United States under certain circumstances, but it does say that no money appropriated in this act, referring to the appropriation bill which is supposed to contain all appropriations for the Army—that no money in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence; that is, to feed the soldiers-for the equipment or transportation or the compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State. This amendment, if adopted, would amount to an absolute inhibition on the President in the use of the Army for any of the purposes contemplated under the existing laws to which I have referred.

Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment? Mr. FRYE.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.
Mr. FRYE. I wish to state that the gentleman has inadvertently said that if this amendment is enacted into a law it would take away from the President the power to use the troops for the purposes which he has enumerated. I say the gentleman has inadvertently made this statement. I do not understand he means that. But I understand from a former statement that he means to say it is an attempt to take away this power. I hope no republican, at all events, will admit, even if this amendment does become a law, that it will take away from the President that power.

Mr. McMillin. If the proposed amendment does not change existing law, then why does the gentleman make the point of order

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot qualify every portion of my remarks. I opened by saying that I did not concede that Congress had the right to take away from the President the power to execute the laws of the United States, but I was bound here to treat the proposed amendment as if that was its scope and design—

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order. It is evident that the gentleman from Ohio has prepared an elaborate speech upon this amendment-

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is very much mistaken.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And I make the point of order that he must confine himself to the point made against the proposed amendment, and not enter into a discussion of the merits of the amendment itself.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not expect to convert the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the gentleman has any desire to print his speech on this amendment I have no objection to that, but I make the point of order that he cannot debate the merits of the amendment on the point made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already admonished the gentleman Objecto confine his remarks to the point of order. There a limitation on the debate as to points of order.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Ohio has not in the slightest degree transgressed that limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the Chair to decide whether the gentleman from Ohio is confining himself to the point of order. Mr. KEIFER. I will be obliged to the gentleman from Illinois if

Mr. REIFER. I will be obliged to the genteman from this is he will not listen to my argument to keep still.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a matter for the Chair to decide. It is sometimes very hard to prescribe the precise limits to be observed in an argument of this nature. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed

Mr. KEIFER. I have, Mr. Chairman, concluded for the present and perhaps for all time all I desire to say on the first proposition. I desired to make it clear to the House that this amendment was designed to take from the President all his power in the coming fiscal year to use the troops at the polls to keep the peace. It will hardly be claimed on the other side that the President could use the troops at the polls to keep the peace when he was forbidden by this proposed new section to feed them while there; forbidden to equip them while there; forbidden to transport them there; forbidden to pay them there while they were engaged in this duty, so that it amounts to an absolute prohibition against his right to use them during the coming fiscal year at all to keep the peace at the polls.

When we come to the merits of the proposition, if we should be so unfortunate as ever to do so, then I may perhaps have something further to say. I now submit that the amendment is not in order under paragraph 3 of Rule XXI, a part of which I desire now to read. Perhaps I might as well read it all:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

It already appears the amendment will change existing law. clear that the proposed amendment does not retrench expenditures. All the money, Mr. Chairman—and I beg your careful attention to this—all the money appropriated by this bill will be appropriated and expended whether the amendment becomes a part of the bill or not. If that proposition is disputed I should be very glad to yield to some gentleman who would be able to enlighten me or the Chair on that subject. The amendment does not propose in any feature of it to cut down the expenditures of the Government. It leaves the appropria-tion complete in every respect. It leaves the money to be expended, every dime of it, all the same whether this second section is added to the bill or not. So that we may say with perfect safety that the amendment does not, and will not, if it should become part of the law retrench expenditures law retrench expenditures.

The amendment applies to the proposed appropriation for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881. The whole sum, I repeat, appropriated by the bill if it becomes a law will be expended even though the amendment should become a part of it. The proposed new section does not reduce "the number and salary of the officers of the United States;" nor does it reduce "the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States;" nor does it reduce "the amounts of money covered by the bill." This is necessary under the rule before the amendment could be in order.

Nor is the amendment in order under the proviso of the third par-

Nor is the amendment in order under the proviso of the third paragraph of the rule just read. I call attention specially again to that in order that the Chair may have it fresh in his mind:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment; which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Having already shown that the amendment will not retrench ex-penditures if ruled in order, and if as a part of this bill it is enacted into law, it is scarcely necessary for me to pursue the subject much further. Under this proviso just read, though an amendment may be reported from a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the amendment, still it will not be in order unless it shall re-

Then, if I am right, Mr. Chairman, in the proposition that this amendment does not retrench expenditures, it is quite immaterial whether or not this amendment was reported from the Committee on whether or not this amendment was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs or not; but I further insist, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment within the true meaning of the rule was never reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The rule requires the amendment before it is in order to be "upon the report"—for that is the word—"the report of the committee having jurisdiction," &c. Mr. Chairman, no report has been made from that committee. I wait for a reply from the gentleman who offers this amendment, if he desires to state whether or not there has ever been a report made from the Committee on Military Affairs on this subject.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that every report to this House from any committee must be in writing under the rules.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] is right in his suggestion. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, I listened with a recommendation of the state of the same of the s

Mr. SPARKS rose.
Mr. KEIFER. I will hear the gentleman from Illinois in a moment.
I listened with care to learn—for I wanted to be accurate in any statement I might make—I listened to learn whether or not the gentleman from Illinois came here clothed with the power to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I learned no such thing. I now yield to him to make any statement he desires, even stronger than he made on yesterday.

Mr. SPARKS. Are you through; or do you just want me to answer

Mr. SPARKS. Are you through; or do you just want me to answer a question?

Mr. KEIFER. I am not through.
Mr. SPARKS. I presume the gentleman certainly understood me to report this proposition from the Committee on Military Affairs. I certainly was explicitly instructed by that committee to do so.

Now, the point the gentleman seems to be making—I presume he alludes to that—is whether or not any proposition was sent by this House to that committee, and the committee acted upon any proposition pending before it having come from the House, to wit, a bill to that effect. I state to the gentleman that I do not remember whether there was any such proposition sent to the committee or not by the House. I will assume that there is not any. I will take it that such is the fact; at least that is my understanding. The Committee on Military Affairs considered this subject, and instructed me to report this proposition as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill. I this proposition as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill.

this proposition as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill. I presume that answers the gentleman. Does it?

Mr. FRYE. With the leave of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] a question.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. FRYE. Was the subject-matter of this amendment ever referred by the House to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SPARKS. I have answered that by stating that to my knowledge it was not. I have not sent to the committee-room to ascertain;

but I do not know that any such proposition was ever referred to the ommittee by the House.

Mr. FRYE. Does the gentleman know of any way in which the Committee on Military Affairs could get jurisdiction of a subject which has not been committed to it by the House?

Mr. SPARKS. I will answer that under the rules of the House it could do so by its own volition. If there is any point in that, make it. I will take it for granted that no bill or resolution upon this subject has been offered in the House and referred to that committee. I do not know that to be the fact, but I am willing to assume that to be the fact; I believe that to be so. I could learn, as a matter of course, by sending to my committee-room.

Mr. KEIFER. One thing at least is made clear, if not everything that I have spoken about; that is, that the gentleman never was authorized to make and in fact never did make a report to this House on the subject-matter of this proposed amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. How do I understand the gentleman?

Mr. KEIFER. I will try to state it as plainly as I can. The gentleman himself says that he never in fact and under the rules made any report to this House on the subject-matter of this proposed amend-

Mr. SPARKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he entirely misunderstands me

Mr. KEIFER. I put my own construction on the gentleman's language.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman certainly will allow me to put him right. He does not want to misrepresent me, does he?

Mr. KEIFER. No.

Mr. SPARKS. I will state the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs especially and positively instructed me to report this proposition to the House, and move it as an amendment to this appropriation bill. This identical amendment was acted upon by the commit-tee, and I am instructed to move it as an amendment to this bill. Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman has repeated that two or three times;

but he never undertakes to tell us where his report is, when he made it, under what rule he made it to the Committee of the Whole, or in what morning hour he made it to the House. He leaves it perfectly clear, as I said before, that he never has made such a report.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the gentleman a copy of that report?

Mr. KEIFER. I would be glad to have it read. The gentleman stated yesterday what he has stated to-day. I will read his language. Mr. Sparks. By instruction of the Committee on Military Affairs I offer as an additional section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

That is, he was instructed by that committee, perhaps by only a majority of the members of the committee, to propose an amendment here to the Army appropriation bill. But that committee never authorized him to make a report to the House in favor of such an amendment, and the gentleman will not say so, for he never did in fact make such a report.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman is technical, I think. What I stated is critically correct.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, if it is "critically correct" I am satisfied with Mr. KEIFER. Well, it is "critically correct" I am satisfied with it, if the gentleman is.

Mr. SPARKS. That is so.

Mr. KEIFER. That is, in some sort of way, formally or informally, he got the consent of a majority of the members of the Committee on me got the consent of a majority of the members of the committee on Military Affairs to come in here and offer an amendment to the Army appropriation bill, not to make a report to enlighten this House, not to make a report that would give us the reason for tacking such an important amendment on an appropriation bill. The gentleman still insists that what he stated on yesterday is exactly right.

Now, the second point I make here in this connection is this: I

Now, the second point I make the accommittee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the proposed amendment. That is a tion of the subject-matter of the proposed amendment. part of the requirements of the proviso of the third paragraph of Rule XXI. I repeat that the committee did not have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this proposed amendment.

Pray tell me how it acquired such jurisdiction? I am authorized to state that no bill of this character was ever referred by the House to state that no bill of this character was ever referred by the House to the Committee on Military Affairs; that no measure of this character was ever referred to that committee. In the very nature of things, none could have been so referred. You could not refer a bill of this character to that committee, a bill that was intended to limit the use of money in an appropriation bill; that could not well have got before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now Mr. Chairman this section analyzed amounts to nothing more

Now, Mr. Chairman, this section analyzed amounts to nothing more than a direction as to how money appropriated in this Army appropriation bill shall be used. It has no connection with military affairs at all in that sense. But in other views it is perfectly clear that this committee could not have had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of it, and that the House, obeying its own rules, would never have dreamed of referring such an amendment to that committee. The subject-matter did not belong there. In what way did the committee get jurisdiction of regulating, not military affairs, but the powers of the Chief Executive of this nation in his constitutional duty to execute the laws of the United States? I might stop here and read the last paragraph of section 3, article 2, of the Constitution of the United States, which defines the powers that will be affected by the adoption of this amendment at least for the coming year. I call attention to this, in order that members generally as well as the Chair. Now, Mr. Chairman, this section analyzed amounts to nothing more may bear it in mind. In speaking of the powers of President, the Constitution declares:

He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

His oath of office requires him to faithfully execute the laws.

Here is an attempt by an amendment to take from the President his constitutional power to execute the laws. This committee had not jurisdiction of a subject-matter of that kind. When and in what manner was the subject-matter of this amendment referred? I have made that point perfectly clear already. Under the new rules the subject-matter of the amendment could not have been referred, as I have stated, to the Committee on Military Affairs. I read from Rule XI:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the pre-ceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

10. To the military establishment and the public defense, other than the appropriations for its support: to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It is thus made clear under the rule that this committee had not jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this amendment, and the terms of the rule suggest an express exception of such a measure, because this amendment refers to the mode of applying money already ap-

In conclusion, I wish to say that the amendment if adopted—
Mr. McLANE. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me a moment?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.
Mr. McLANE. I ask pardon of my friend from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] for offering what I conceive to be a conclusive answer to the question addressed by the gentleman from Ohio to the gentleman from Illinois. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to inquire whether the gentleman from Illinois had moved this amendment as a report from a tleman from Illinois had moved this amendment as a report from a committee. The reply of the gentleman from Illinois was to call attention to the amendment. It is urged that this amendment is no report from a committee in the sense of the rules. The rules require a written report to accompany any bill, resolution, or petition reported by a committee. But the gentleman from Illinois introduced no bill, resolution, or petition. He did what he was authorized to do by the twenty, first rule, which has no relation at all to the rule requiring a resolution, or petition. He did what he was authorized to do by the twenty-first rule, which has no relation at all to the rule requiring a report in writing to accompany a bill, resolution, or petition reported from a committee. The new rules of the House, it is true, require that a committee reporting a bill, resolution, or petition shall accompany it with a report in writing; but that requirement of the rules has no reference to an amendment which the twenty-first rule expressly authorizes a committee to move to an appropriation bill. There are two distinct rules—one requiring a report in writing to accompany a bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I would understand that technically any action of

Mr. KEIFER. I yielded to the gentleman from Maryland for a suggestion only.

Mr. McLANE. I am addressing myself to the gentleman from

Mr. SPARKS. But right here I would like to interject the remark,

Mr. SPARKS. But right here I would like to interject the remark, of course with the leave of the gentleman from Ohio—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Ohio that he had ten minutes to explain his point of order, and he has taken forty. The Chair has not, however, interrupted him, but he desires to say that on a point of order in Committee of the Whole there should be a limitation upon discussion, and the limit, in the opinion of the Chair, ought to be five minutes.

Mr. CONGER. Not by any rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a discretion on the subject. He has allowed the centleman to speak forty minutes instead of ten. He has allowed the gentleman to speak forty minutes instead of ten. He will proceed.

Mr. SPARKS. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will get through very soon.

Mr. McLane. My inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio is whether he recognizes the distinction I have pointed out.

Mr. SPARKS. I will attend to that matter. Let the gentleman

Mr. KEIFER. I am unable to understand the meaning of language if the twenty-first rule does not require a report. I read again:

Provided. That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment.

That means a report because it says so. I cannot dwell longer on that, and will conclude.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I beg your attention further to this: that the amendment if adopted would have the effect to regulate the subject-matter of elections as well as the matter of the presidential power to enforce the laws and put down violence and disorder. Section 2002, already read, which is specially aimed at, is part of the criminal and not a part of the military laws of the United States. It is the section not a part of the military laws of the United States. It is the section making improper interference on the part of military, naval, or civil officers of the United States in elections a crime. It is the section of the United States statutes which recognizes the right of the President, Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, to keep the peace at the polls when there is a breach of it. This section is found in the statutes under the title "The elective franchise." It is the first section whether title in the Partical States. I supposit this first section under that title in the Revised Statutes. I submit this amendment refers more to the manner of regulating elections, more to the manner of amending in some form or other, peculiar as it may be, the criminal statutes of the United States. It refers also to the manner of using appropriated money. It does not retrench expenditure. It could not come from the Committee on Military Affairs, because that committee has no jurisdiction over it. Indeed, in every possible view, committee has no jurisdiction over it. Indeed, in every possible view, it must or at least ought to be ruled out of order.

I need not say a word, Mr. Chairman, on the subject of the great impropriety and the very bad policy of this character of legislation.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I am not certain that it is not a waste of the time of this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to say anything in reply to the gentleman from Ohio on this point of order. Such points as he has made against the amendment being in order under the rules are, in my judgment, purely technical. His first point is this: Has the Committee on Military Affairs reported the proposition before the House in conformity to the rules of the House? Of course I do not understand that gentleman as doubting that the committee have considered and passed upon this subject ing that the committee have considered and passed upon this subject and instructed me to report it to the House. I do not understand the gentleman from Ohio to doubt that.

Mr. KEIFER. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's state-

Mr. SPARKS. I do not understand the gentleman from Ohio in what he has said to doubt that the Committee on Military Affairs have acted on this matter and instructed me to report to the House have acted on this matter and the track and the track that the amendment now pending.

Mr. KEIFER. I agree that the gentleman stated the exact truth last night and to-day when he said he was instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer this amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. Such was my understanding of the gentleman's po-

Mr. KEIFER. But beyond that it did not go.
Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. SPARKS. In a moment. I will not go beyond the instructions of the committee. Gentlemen can safely rely on that. I will now hear the gentleman's colleague.

Mr. GARFIELD. We are of course discussing the technical language of the rule. I ask the gentleman whether he has ever before reported in any form this proposition to the House?

guage of the rule. I ask the gentleman whether he has ever before reported, in any form, this proposition to the House?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, that is it.

Mr. GARFIELD. He has offered this amendment to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; but has he ever reported, even orally, this proposition to the House from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SPARKS. Do not make a speech; you have stated your point, now let me answer it. I was instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, which, as I have already stated, considered and adopted this identical proposition, to report it as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill. The Committee on Appropriations, when it reports the Army or other general appropriation bills, refers them under the rules to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The House was in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering that Army appropriation bill. The instruction of the committee, therefore, that the amendment should be moved to the Army appropriation bill went to the effect that it should be moved to the appropriation bill, where, under the rules, that bill was being considered by the House. There can be no dispute about that, certainly. It becomes the duty of the person having an amendment in charge ordered by a committee to follow the bill to which it is moved to its legitimate position under the rules and to use all proper means to secure its presentation and its adoption. This has been done in this case, and no more. I be-

At all events whether it answers it or not that is just what has been done in this instance. An instruction from a committee to move an amendment to a certain appropriation bill necessarily presupposes that the opportunity occurs to do so, and in this case the only opportunity to carry out the instruction of the committee that could under our rules occur, for me to move the amendment, was when the House was in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having the Army appropriation bill under consideration. The point made by the gentleman in this respect is, as it seems to me, an extremely technical one; I think my statement completely answers it

Another technical objection is made to this amendment. It is insisted that a formal report should be made to the House on the subject. But has not that been done? The House, when it is brought in, is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this Army appropriation bill under the instruction of the committee at the time, stating that it was by its instruc-tion. I moved that amendment at the only time and place when it

Does the gentleman insist that a formal written report shall accompany it? Well, there is no such report. Now, if that be not Does the gentleman insist that a formal written report shall accompany it? Well, there is no such report. Now, if that be not purely technical, but is really a substantial, then the proposition is open to that objection, for there is no written report accompanying it. But I insist that in this regard I have done only as every other gentleman representing a committee in presenting such matters to the House does. The Post-Office Committee and all the other committees under like circumstances do this thing precisely in this way, and it has never before been questioned as incompetent so far as I

Now, let us corse to the next point: Has the Committee on Military Affairs jurisdiction of this subject-matter; or, in other words, has it the power to move such an amendment as this to the Army appropri-

the power to move such an amendment as this to the Army appropriation bill, nothing from the House having been referred to that committee in the way of bill or resolution; for though I do not remember, yet I presume that no bill or resolution on the subject has been referred to it. But there was, of course, referred to that committee the President's annual message, which involves all Army affairs.

But, aside from this, has not the Committee on Military Affairs, like all other committees of this House, original jurisdiction, if you please, and therefore the power to report bills covering this entire subject? Has it not clearly this power, even without anything being sent to it by the House? I insist that it has that power, and that its frequent exercise is a part of its ordinary duty. That it can do and frequently does this of its own volition is certainly unquestionable, and I am surprised that anybody should question it. Now, if it can do that, it can certainly move an amendment to a pending bill of a similar character. character

Mr. KEIFER. Before going beyond that point, I desire to ask what portion of the President's message deals with the subject of limiting upon the Army appropriation bill the application of any portion of the money appropriated for the use of the Army?

Mr. SPARKS. I do not think that is material here, and I do not desire to lead into a discussion upon anything foreign to the subject directly beforeus. However, I will say that that message has as a part of it the report of the Secretary of War which covers all of the operations of the Army and everything that pertains to the regulation, equipment, movement of troops, field operations, &c.; and the message is referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in order that the condition of the Army be known to it for its information, so that it can offer suitable legislation to the House in regard to any and all things pertaining to it. Now, under the rule has the committee the power to do this? I will read that part of the rule applicable here:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench ex-

The first point in this clause of the rule to which I call attention is whether or not, as tested by it, this amendment is or is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill. I presume gentlemen will hardly question that it is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and will waive discussion on that and pass to the next inquiry, does the amendment retrench expenditures? And with a few words upon that point I propose to leave the subject. In my judgment the amendment clearly does this, and in that view comes within the express terms of this rule. If we say by law that no part of the money appropriated for the Army shall be used for a certain purpose, does not that trible off that postion of the express for the appropriate of the Army shall be used for a certain purpose, does not that strike off that portion of the expense for the support of the Army that should or would be expended in this way? And to that extent does not it retrench expenditures by lessening the amount? I think it cannot be seriously doubted that it does. What are the facts. Here is a sum of money appropriated for a particular service. propose to limit that service.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question

Mr. SPARKS. I say that we propose to limit that service, and to that extent we certainly retrench expenditures.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask if it is not that the limitation is upon the manner of expending the money and not upon the amount of money at all?

Mr. SPARKS. Ido not say that it is shown as to any sum of money saved by it, but that it is a limitation on the amount to be expended by limiting or lessening the service, and by saying that no part of this money here appropriated shall be expended for a particular purpose; which purpose is clearly set forth in the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAGE. I would like him to answer my question first.
Mr. SPARKS. I have answered you.
Mr. PAGE. Have you answered my question?
Mr. SPARKS. I have endeavored to do so.

Mr. SPAKKS. I have endeavored to do so.

Mr. PAGE. That, I suppose, is the best answer you can give.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether this is a provision which affects the use of the Army at all, and whether it is not rather a provision which only affects the payment of the Army, the payment for its transportation and the payment for its equipment; whether it affects the right of the President to use the Army in any way, or his conduct in relation to it; and whether it is not a simple major varying a locking to the president of the payment of the president of the president simple money provision looking to the use of the appropriation, and whether as such it should not have come from the Finance Committee of the House, and not from the Military Committee.

Mr. SPARKS. Well, that is a fair question and it will afford me pleasure to answer it.

Mr. ROBESON. That is the point which is in my mind, and to which I would like the gentleman to give an answer.

Mr. SPARKS. The language of the amendment proposed is:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Mr. ROBESON. Now, is that a limitation upon the use of the rmy

Mr. SPARKS. Not entirely.

Mr. ROBESON. Then does it come within the purview of the Military Committee of this House, or is that a subject that the Military Committee has no control over? Is it not rather one that under the rules belongs to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SPARKS. It does seem to me that there can be no subject for doubt that there is a connection or combination of both—a limitation seems to the American Research of the American Research.

doubt that there is a connection or combination of both—a limitation as to the use of the Army, as also reduction of expenses. It is provided that no money shall be used for a particular purpose. What purpose? For the "subsistence" of the Army and for the "equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of it" when used for a particular purpose specified in the amendment. Of course it covers both. It mainly strikes at the money appropriated, but also has a prohibition against the use of the troops for a specified purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him if he holds the Committee on Military Affairs has anything to do with money in connection with the Army or the regulation of money paid to the Army?

paid to the Army?
Mr. SPARKS. I think so, most clearly.

Mr. GARFIELD. How?
Mr. SPARKS. If you please, in the stated case with which we are

Mr. SPARKS. If you please, in the stated case with which we are now dealing a fair answer to that question is apparent.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Illinois said a moment ago that in the distribution of the President's message all that related to military affairs was referred to this committee. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. FIELD] has just called my attention to the fact that in the distribution of the President's message all that related to appropriations was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Now, this is a resulting of appropriations and executiving in the President's message and propriations. this is a regulation of appropriations, and everything in the President's message relating to appropriations has, by a resolution of the House as well as by the rules of the House, been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. How then did the Committee on Military Affairs ever get jurisdiction to offer an amendment relating wholly to the use of money?

Mr. SPARKS. The amendment does not "wholly relate to money; but, as stated in the amendment itself, the money is to be applied for the use of the Army in transportation, equipment, subsistence, compensation, &c., and all of these are subject-matters purely within the control of the Committee on Military Affairs, and nowhere else.

Mr. FIELD rose

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the centleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SPARKS. Yes, sir.
Mr. FIELD. The exact terms of the resolution distributing the various parts of the President's message were these:

That so much as refers to appropriations and expenditures be referred to the committee on Appropriations.

That so much as relates to military affairs be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, does not this amendment relate to appropriations and expenditures?

Mr. SPARKS. I have already referred to that point, and have also distinctly stated that, also, aside from the submissions that may be made to it from any source whatever, according to my view of it, the Committee on Military Affairs of itself has original jurisdiction of this subject, and that it is its business specially. What other business has it? It is its special business to control military affairs so far as legislation or maturing legislation is concerned. The use of the Army, everything connected with the Army, comes for this purpose within its jurisdiction necessarily.

Mr. CALKINS obtained the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

a moment;
Mr. CALKINS. I will, at the close of my remarks.
Mr. BURROWS. I desire to have a ruling of a former Speaker read, and should like to have it read now.
Mr. CALKINS. I will yield for that purpose.
Mr. BURROWS. On the question of jurisdiction, I ask the Clerk to read from the volume of the Journal which I send to the desk a ruling of Speaker Cobb, who certainly will be deemed good authority on the other side of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Andrew Johnson, from the Committee on Public Expenditures, reported a bill, which was read for information by its title, as follows: "A bill to provide a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain for every man who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, or any widow who is the mother of a minor child or children, who may become permanent occupants and cultivators of the soil."

Mr. Vinton objected to the reception of the bill on the ground that the subject-matter of the bill had not been referred to the committee which had reported it by the House, either by resolution, or by the rules, or otherwise.

The Speaker sustained the objection raised by Mr. Vinton, and decided that the said bill was not in order from the Committee on Public Expenditures.

From this decision of the Chair Mr. Andrew Johnson appealed.

The question was stated: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was not received.—Journal House of Representatives, February 21, 1859.

Mr. CALKINS. On the discussion of the question of order, and

Mr. CALKINS. On the discussion of the question of order, and inasmuch as the rule has been changed recently, and no decision, so far as I am aware, has been made by the Speaker of the House or the Chairman of any Committee of the Whole under the new rule, I de-Chairman of any Committee of the whole under the new rule, I desire, in the first place, to point out the difference between the old rule and the present rule; and for that purpose, that my remarks may be somewhat connected, I will ask the Clerk now to read the old rule, No. 120, at page 132 of the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

120. No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

read down to the new proposition that was ingrafted upon Rule 120 by the Forty-fourth Congress. The new rule, Mr. Chairman, which was recently adopted, reads as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The two rules down to that point are precisely the same, and the rule limits the Committee on Appropriations and each member of this committee to these measures. I will ask the Clerk to read the residue of Rule 120, which was the amendment put on it by the Forty-fourth

The Clerk read as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. CALKINS. Now it will be observed that the latter clause of this Rule 120 consists of three distinct propositions, namely: neither the Committee on Appropriations nor any member of the committee the Committee on Appropriations nor any member of the committee shall offer an amendment to any appropriation bill that changes existing law, (that is the first proposition,) except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, (that is the second proposition,) shall retrench expenditure, (that is the third proposition.) And that provision of the rule is a limitation on the Committee on Appropriations as a committee and each member of this committee acting in tions as a committee and each member of this committee acting in his individual capacity.

The pivotal point of that rule is that such amendment must retrench expenditure. If the Committee on Appropriations report a clause changing existing law, or any member of the Committee of the Whole offers an amendment changing existing law, it is not of itself in order, even if it be germane to the subject-matter of the bill, unless it retrenches expenditure. Now, I desire to read the last clause of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, mark the difference between the new rule and the old rule, because that difference is marked and apparent. This new rule limits the right of any member of this committee to offer an amendment, or of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting a bill changing existing law, even when the provision is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, to "the reduction of the number and salaries of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduc-tion of amounts of money covered by the bill."

That is a limitation going further than the old rule went; a limitation not only upon the Committee on Appropriations, but upon each member of this Committee of the Whole. There are three distinct limitations on the committee and upon individual members to offer amendments as a matter of right, namely: First, a reduction of the number or salaries of officers; second, a reduction of the compensation of any other person paid out of the Treasury of the United States; and, third, a reduction of the amount of money covered by the bill; that is, by striking out a larger sum and inserting a smaller sum. These are the three limitations imposed by the new rule.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] offered under instructions of his committee, does not fall within the purview of either of the three exceptions contained in the new rule which I have read. If it is in order at all it must be in order under the proviso attached to the new rule, which is:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench

Now, I take it that, although parliamentary law is arbitrary and stands upon no basis of logic, the rule in relation to the construction of statutes, when it is the same as parliamentary law, ought to have some persuasive power, at least in the determination of questions which are similar. That is to say, where the reason is the same the rule ought to be the same.

I am glad that I am now addressing a person who believes generally in strict construction. I do not myself believe that constitutional provisions should always receive a strict construction. But in regard to this matter it is a well-known rule of law that all provisos must receive a strict construction. I read from page 118 of Potter's Dwar-

ris on Statutes:

The office of a proviso generally is either to except something from the enacting clause, to restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of it, as extending to cases not intended by the legislature to be brought within its purview.

That is clearly the office of this proviso. Now, in regard to the construction of a proviso, I read from the same page:

A proviso in a statute is to be strictly construed; it takes no case out of the acting clause which is not clearly within the terms of the proviso.

Now let me call the attention of the Chair to this amendment. First let me analyze it. The amendment is:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Now, what is the gravamen of that amendment? It is an amendment restricting the use of the money appropriated in the bill. Now, is that amendment in order under any clause of the rule, except under the proviso? It was certainly brought here by the gentleman from Illinois with the understanding on his part and on the part of his committee at least, that it was in order under that proviso, if in order at all. But that proviso expressly states that the committee which reports an amendment must first have charge of the subject-matter of the amendment. Has the Committee on Military Affairs charge of the subject-matter of appropriating money for the use of the Army? To determine that it may be necessary to look at the rules of the House which charge that committee with special duties. That rule, which has already been read, expressly excludes from that committee the subject of the appropriation of money for the use of the Army. That subject by the express terms of the rule is referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If that be so, and this amendment, if it refers to anything, refers simply and solely to the use of the money appropriated for the Army, then it is not a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. And though that committee may authorize one of its members to report an amendment of this kind, it does not bring it within the rule, and it could not be held to be in order thereunder.

Now, one other observation and I will leave this matter. It will be observed that under this rule an amendment may not be obnoxious to either of the first three propositions nor to all of them, and yet the amendment will not be in order unless upon its face it retrenches expenditures.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to ask the Chair if there is to be any limit to the debate on this point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the limitation of debate upon points of order is within the discretion of the Chair. This being the first interpretation of a new rule, the Chair has allowed a large latitude of debate. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he thinks it is his duty to decide the matter promptly. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Calkins] will pro-

Mr. CALKINS. I was about to remark that three things named in the rule may concur in favor of a proposed amendment, and yet it the rule may concur in favor or a proposed amendment, and yet it will not be in order unless it also retrenches expenditures. First, as to changing existing law; this amendment does this as I have shown. Next, the amendment must be germane to the subject-matter of the bill. Whether this is true or not in the present case, I submit without further comment. In the next place the proposition must be reported from a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Now, all these circumstances may concur and yet the amendment is not in order unless it retrenches expenditures.

I do not care to go over what has been said by gentlemen who have preceded me. I submit, however, that upon the face of this amendment, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, every dollar appropriated by the bill can be expended without a violation of this proviso, whether the proviso be made a part of the bill or not; and applying the well-known rule that provisos should be construed strictly, I ask the Chair and I ask the House how this proposition can be in order as an amendment when it is clearly shown that it is neither within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs nor does it upon its face retrench expenditures.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would not obtrude upon the Committee of the Whole any remarks on this subject, considering the great experience of the Chairman and his knowledge of the rules, except that we are proposing to give a construction which shall apply to this new rule in its application to the business of the House.

I take it that in construing rules we will do so as a court would construe a law, with reference to the object or intent of the provision. What is the object of this rule? To what does it relate primarily and winds? It relates to avendments, and as it relates to avendments. mainly? It relates to amendments; and as it relates to amendments, we should consider it as it is to be applied in the admission of amend-

It is true that a committee, under the rules which permit it to make reports of business to the House, has not jurisdiction of a subject matter unless it is referred to it. The rules covering that point, however, have another object than the rule here; that is, in relation to bringing the business of committees before the House. The third clause of the twenty-first rule (I hope I may be excused for referring to this leavement again) provides: language again) provides:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter.

This language is merely what we had in the former rule. But there

That it shall be in order further to amend-

Not further to make a report, but-

It shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, the main point is the right to amend. Under the rules as they existed heretofore a member of this House could offer an amendment subject to the condition of the rule. But in framing the new rule, it was the purpose of the House to enlarge the provision as it relates to the action of committees, so that a committee may upon a vote of a majority of its members propose an amendment which an individual member of the House cannot propose. That is the object of this proviso—to enable any committee of this House having general charge of the business being acted on, to offer an amendment which cannot be offered by an individual member.

Then, has the Military Committee the general consideration of bills

Then, has the Military Committee the general consideration of bills providing for an army and for the government and control of that army? Is not this the original jurisdiction of that committee as contemplated by the House? Without repeating the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, it relates to the management and direction of the operations of the Army in a particular respect. Being an amendment relating to that which is under control of the Military Committee, it comes within the proviso of this rule which allows the Committee to offer an amendment that no individual member would be permitted to offer, an amendment limiting and restricting the control of the Army to the extent defined in the proposed amendment.

A number of points which have been presented seem to me so forcign to the subject that I will not occupy time by referring to them. I only desired to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that we are to construe a rule as a court would construe a provision of law—are to construe a rule as a court would construe a provision of law—with reference to the object had in view in its establishment.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, in construing the third clause of Rule XXI we must be governed in a great degree by the construction which has been placed upon the old rule by former occupants of the which has been placed upon the old rule by former occupants of the chair. As I understand, in this third clause of Rule XXI we have preserved almost in totidem verbis the language of the old rule. I need not read again the language of the present rule; but to show the similarity, I cite the provision of our former Rule 120:

No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

In construing the new rule, the Chair, I assume, will be governed in a large degree by the adjudications upon the corresponding provision of the old rule.

The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, as I understand it, proposes to indicate there shall not be an expenditure of the amount appropriated by this bill introduced by the Committee on Appropriations except for a single purpose. And, Mr. Chairman, it would be very remarkable if the House, whose duty it is under the Constitution to make appropriations every two years for the support of the Army, had not the power to say how that money should be expended.

We have adopted under the Constitution the principle as a rule which everys in England on this subject. From her laws and her

We have adopted under the Constitution the principle as a rule which governs in England on this subject. From her laws and her history we learn all the lessons with reference to gnarding the liberties of the people as against any power, whether it be that created by itself, the Army or the Navy, or any other. In England they can only make appropriation for the support of the army for one year; and in England they never allow a dollar appropriated for the support of the army in India to be expended anywhere else. So, too, under our system of laws, existing by analogy precisely as the House of Commons exists under the English constitution, we ought not to allow a dollar to be expended except as the House directs. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I had occasion to say in the Forty-fourth Congress, and afterward to repeat it in the Forty-fifth Congress, that every single appropriation ought to be itemized which is made for the support of the Army or Navy. You can only make an appropriation for two years; and the Army itself exists and lives only by the legislation of the representatives of the people, and cannot exist for a single moment without it.

It has been said, Mr. Chairman, in the Forty-fourth Congress, when we defeated the Army bill because we attached to it the very amendment now offered by the gentleman from Illinois, or in substance the same amendment, it was said the Army could live on hope; that there were patriotic citizens who would support it in spite of the fact that the representatives of the people had not agreed it should be done. If it can exist for one day, or six months, it may exist for any number of years. I would not cut down one single necessary appropriation to maintain it in all its efficiency on the Indian frontier or upon the Texas border or wherever it is necessary to be maintained; but to say that the House has not the power to say the appropriation made for which governs in England on this subject. From her laws and her

Texas border or wherever it is necessary to be maintained; but to say that the House has not the power to say the appropriation made for the maintenance and support of the Army shall not be expended in this way or that way, is to deprive the House, which is the immediate representative of the people, of the power to say what shall be appropriated for the Army and how it shall be used.

I say, therefore, under this proviso of the third clause of Rule XXI, that the indication on the part of the House denying appropriation that the indication on the part of the House denying appropriation in a certain quarter is a retrenchment of expenditure. You appropriate a certain amount, and you declare how it shall not be used. To say the House does not possess this power is to say the immediate representatives of the people have not the right to say, when making appropriations for the support of the Army, how that money shall be used and how it shall not be used and in what method it shall be used and how it shall not be used and in what method it shall be used for the purpose of maintaining the interest and honor of the Government wherever the flag floats under which that Army fights.

To say, therefore, that the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, which has this question in charge, has not the right to offer an amendment under this proviso is to limit the power of the House in such way as no chairman and no Speaker can decide, unless he wants to say, as the sentiment has been uttered on this floor, that it is the duty of the House to make appropriations, and not the power of the House to indicate how those appropriations shall be used. The Army is the army of the people, created by the people, made by the people, paid for by the people; and they have a right to indicate where it shall be used and how it shall be used, and in what method and manner the appropriations shall be expended for its use.

I, therefore, say, Mr. Chairman, under this proviso to the third clause of Rule XXI, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois comes not only within the spirit, but within the letter of the rule as it now exists. To deny that power to the House is to say that the appropriations which you make may be expended contrary to the the appropriations which you make may be expended contrary to the expressed will of the people as indicated by their representatives.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a single point which has been hinted at, but which, I think, has not been made very clear. The trouble with the objections to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Military Committee seems to be rather an embarrassment of riches than otherwise. I do seems to be rather an embarrassment of riches than otherwise. I do not purpose to go over any of the points which I think have been made clear, but there is one to which I wish to call the particular attention of the Chair, not only in its bearing on this, but upon all other cases which are to come hereafter.

The proviso states in express terms that the amendment shall not be made except upon the report of the committee charged with the business. Now, the point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Chair is the expression "upon the report of the committee." The House in framing its rules used just the language which I have quoted. It did not declare that an amendment should be ordered upon a statement of the chairman that it was by the advice of the Committee on Military Affairs, but that it should be made "upon the report of the Committee" on Military Affairs.

Military Affairs, but that it should be made "upon the report of the Committee" on Military Affairs.

And it used language when it said "report"—

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED. Not now. After I have made my point I will answer any question. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, when the House used the word "report" of the committee, it used language the meaning of which is technically and perfectly well understood by everybody. Now, what is the report of a committee? It is a formal transaction made to the House. No committee in this world ever reported to another committee. It is always a report to the House itself, and therefore it cannot be possible that the rule can be interpreted to mean a report made to a Committee of the Whole? Now, at what time can a report be made to the House?

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. REED. I cannot yield to the gentleman now. After I have concluded I will be glad to answer any question.

Mr. HOOKER. If you are right about it this bill is not properly before the committee, because as I understand it there is no report accompanying it.

Mr. REED. Under the second clause of the twenty-fourth rule it is provided that there shall be a morning hour for reports from comis provided that there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed, and therefore the House when it inserted the word "report" into this rule contemplated a report which was to be made to the House, (as expressly defined in the words of the rule,) to be printed and for the deliberation of the House. And the reason and sense of things correspond with this interpretation, because the object of this House is to provide well-considered legislation. Now, legislation is not well considered simply because a committee has sat upon it; but the House itself, by having the report made to it and printed, and considering it in the House, will tend to produce well-considered and valuable legislation and not otherwise.

Now, the object of the amendment which we made to the old rule

Now, the object of the amendment which we made to the old rule was to limit the power of the House, and to prevent ill-considered legislation from getting before the House; and therefore I insist that the House having used in these rules well-known words—words of technical import and meaning—it is bound by those words, and that the Chairman of this committee has no right to admit an amendment except upon a report of a committee, and that report must be made in the morning hour, and must be printed, and must be before the House for its consideration at the time when it is offered in the Committee of the Whole.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri to ask his ques-

Mr. BLAND. My question is, that this being an amendment to the bill that has been reported—suppose, in other words, that this amendment originated in the Military Committee, and originated there, say, ment originated in the Military Committee, and originated there, say, six weeks ago, and that the House, during all of that time, suspended the rules, as it has frequently done before to prevent reports of committees being made—how could this amendment be reported to the House? My point is, that if there is no call of committees, say, for six weeks—and that may happen often—and there is no chance or opportunity given to the committee to report to the House its amendment, I wish to ask the gentleman if in his judgment that would prevent a simple amendment being offered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. REED. I say it would, because if the House was to determine for six weeks by suspension of the rules that it would decline to receive a report from the Military Committee, that might be taken as a pretty strong indication that the House did not want the committee to make a report to it, and that it did not want to hear anything from the committee. That, I take it, would be a pretty strong hint to the the committee. That, I take it, would be a pretty strong hint to the committee. Now I will hear the question of the gentleman frow Mis-

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to ask, if your theory is correct that the bill is to be accompanied by a formal report, how this present bill is before the committee for consideration, if, as I understand to be the case, there is no report accompanying it?

case, there is no report accompanying it?

Mr. REED. There is a report.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly there is a report, No. 621.

Mr. HOOKER. Where is it?

Mr. REED. Of course there is a report. Now, I very earnestly ask the attention of the Chair to this point. I make it because I believe it is of importance to the House that the interpretation I have suggested shall be given to the rule by the Chairman. I regard it as a matter of great importance for the right conduct of the business before the House that it should have proper consideration in the commatter or great importance for the right conduct of the business before the House that it should have proper consideration in the committee before it is brought up here for discussion and action. The great trouble heretofore has been that amendments on appropriation bills, as a general thing, are presented to the House without warning or any previous information, and that produces largely the difficulty under which we labor in the consideration of such amendments. I think the rule was meant in good faith to prevent such practices as the loading down of appropriation bills with amendments which we have no opportunity to discuss and with legislation we have no time nave no opportunity to discuss and with regime such construction to the consider. I appeal to the Chairman to give such construction to the rule as will remedy this wrong and prevent such objectionable practices as I have referred to.

Mr. Mills. Mr. Chairman, in disposing of this question of order we must analyze the different provisions contained in the third clause of the twenty-first rule. The first clause of the rule has reference to appropriations contained in the bill, or offered by amendment to the bill not in pursuance of pre-existing law. This amendment is not embraced under that clause. The second clause of this rule prohibits any amendment to an appropriation bill that changes existing law. That is the second general proposition.

The exception to the second general proposition is that an amendment may be adopted to a general appropriation bill changing existing law, provided it has two qualities: the first is that it must be germane to the subject-matter of the bill; the second is that it shall

Now, looking at this amendment that is offered to this bill, we in quire—does it possess these two requisites? If it does not, then it cannot be admitted as an amendment to the bill. Is it germane? I will not discuss that question. But does it reduce expenditures? It was ruled by Mr. Speaker Kerr, the first time that rule was construed at all after it was made, that the amendment must affirmatively show upon its face the retrenchment. It must not be left to speculation as to whether something might not be saved under the administration of the amendment; but it must affirmatively appear upon the face of the amendment that there is a reduction in the expenditures of the Government.

Looking to these plain principles of construction and to the precedents, it cannot be contended that this amendment is legitimate. It dents, it cannot be contended that this amendment is legitimate. It does not cover the two points of being germane and reducing expenditures—that is, it does not cover them both. It is a very serious question whether the amendment is at all germane to the bill, but unquestionably the fact does not appear upon the face of the amendment that it reduces the expenditures one dollar.

I make these remarks because it is essential in my judgment that we adhere to the line of precedents established in the construction of the rules, no matter what side may be benefited thereby.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order. Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the indulgence of the Chair for a moment. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. GARFIELD. I think it is exceedingly important on this first construction to be given to the new rule that the Chair should get and GARFIELD. Ithink it is exceedingly important on this first construction to be given to the new rule that the Chair should get all the shades of judgment from the different points of views that bear upon it, so that we may have once for all a settlement of the construction of this rule, not for this case merely, but for all cases that may come up. As upon the decision of the Chair or the decision of the House at this time will rest our future practice under this new rule it is invocated in making this decision the Chair should take new rule it is important in making this decision the Chair should take into account that all the old rulings are in large measure dispensed with and are indeed of but little value in the construction of this rule.

Before this discussion began I had paid but little special attention to the language of this rule as applied to this case, but in the study I have given it this morning I have very deliberately and decidedly come to the conclusion that the strict and proper enforcement of this rule, as the gentleman from Texas says, rules this amendment out. Now, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the first clause which relates to amendments offered by individuals. There are two clauses, one that relates to the amendments offered by individuals, the other to the amendments offered by committees; and they are entirely distinct. The amendments that may be made by individuals the Chair will see in the language just preceding the proviso; and that is very markedly different from the language of the old rule. The old rule says that if the amendment was germane and retrenched expenditures it should be in order. This rule does not say that if it is germane and retrenches expenditures it shall be in order; but it goes on to limit in what way it must retrench expenditures in order to make it so clear that no chairman can possibly be deceived. It must retrench expenditures in several ways that it may be in order here.

And what are the ways?

It must retrench expenditures first by reducing "the number and salary of the officers of the United States." Now, this amendment reduces no number of officers and reduces no salary; so it does not come under that clause. It cannot come under that clause. In order to do so it must reduce expenditures by the reduction of the number and salaries of the officers of the United States. Now there is another way:

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

There is nothing in this amendment that reduces the compensation of any person that is paid out of the Treasury. It does not touch anybody's compensation, it does not touch any officer's salary, and it does not reduce the number of officers. Now, is there any other way? There is. Third:

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This amendment does not reduce the amounts in the bill. The word "money," so far as amounts is concerned, is not named in this amendment.

amendment.

This amendment neither cuts down the number of officers, the salary of officers, the compensation of any person, nor the amounts in the bill. And these are the only forms in which an amendment can so retrench expenditures as to be in order when offered by an individual member. I have therefore exhausted the category of all the several ways by which an amendment offered by an individual can be made in order by retrenching expenditures; for it must do it in one of the three precise ways pointed out in the rule.

Therefore no man can claim that this amendment is in order as being effected by the individual who precented it. If it is in order as being offered by the individual who presented it. If it is in order at all, it gets itself in order by virtue of the proviso and by virtue of its and, to gets his in order by virtue of the provise and by virtue of its being reported by the committee. Well, now, to that last clause I address myself for a moment. Under the provise there need not be a retrenchment in these three specific ways. There may be a retrenchment in a more general way, in an unnamed way. If it is in reality manifestly and evidently a retrenchment, then it can come in even mannestry and evidently a retrenement, then it can come in even here, if it comes in by the power of a proper committee. I omit all reference to the word "report," which has been so fully discussed by my friend from Maine; and I call attention only to that single feature on which the power of the Military Committee is supposed to be on which the power of the Military Committee is supposed to be based in presenting these amendments.

And I make my first premise on that subject in this, which I think every parliamentarian in this House will agree to: no committee of this House has any jurisdiction over any subject whatever unless it has been committed to that committee by the House in one of two ways. First, by the general order of the House expressed in the rule; second, by the special order of the House referring a special subject to that committee.

We are more restricted now than we were eight weeks ago on that subject, because eight weeks ago our rules were vague as to what subjects went to the different committees. But now we have a rule absolutely precise and definite. One clause of that rule tells what the Committee on Military Affairs may have. It says they may have jurisdiction over the affairs of the Army, except such as relate to appropriations for the Army. It says by a pregnant negative that they shall not have jurisdiction of matters touching appropriations for the Army. There, then, is the language of the House, expressed in its rule, excluding the Committee on Military Affairs from taking up or reporting upon subjects relating to appropriations for the Army.

Now, what has been referred to that committee by the special order of the House? In the distribution of the President's message and accompanying documents there have been referred to that committee all matters therein relating to military affairs. Does that include appropriations? In order that it may not, another resolution in the same batch of resolutions refers to the Committee on Appropriations all matters contained in the President's message and documents touching appropriations. But it does not stop there; it goes further than appropriations. It uses another word; it expressly refers to the Committee on Appropriations all matters touching "expenditures."

Now, therefore, the two topics from which the Committee on Military Affairs are excluded, first by the rule, and second by the special order of the House, are appropriations for and expenditures of the Army. These two things the Committee on Military Affairs are the House? In the distribution of the President's message and accom-absolutely excluded from considering, both by the general order of the House in its rule, and also by the special order of the House in the distribution of the President's message.

Now, what is this amendment? I ask the attention of members to it for a moment. It will be found on page 38 of this morning's RECORD. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] is not an amendment that regulates or limits any use of the Army whatever. In its terms it does not pretend to be a limitation of the Army or of the movements of the Army. of the Army or of the movements of the Army. It does not relate to the organization of the Army, nor to the uses of the Army even.

Mr. ROBESON. And the gentleman who introduced it admits

Mr. GARFIELD. And the gentleman who introduced it admits it. Mr. SPARKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Mr. GARFIELD. If he does not, then I take it back; I thought

Mr. SPARKS. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman; he interrupted me. Allow me to say that I stated distinctly, as I remember, and if I did not I made a mistake, that while the gist, the gravamen of this amendment touched appropriations, yet it was connected with the use of the Army, which is the business of the Committee on Military Affairs. And further in this connection; this is the order in the rule in relation to the Committee on Military Affairs:

And the military establishment and the public defense, other than the appropriations for its support: to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That covers everything except-

Mr. GARFIELD. Everything other than appropriations.
Mr. SPARKS. Allow me to conclude. Everything except what by clause 3 of that rule is referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government: to the Committee on Appropriations.

Everything else connected with the Army is committed by that rule to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I stated, or I meant to do so, that while the appropriation of money was a part of the amendment, yet the control of the Army was another part.

Mr. GARFIELD. No matter whether the gentleman admitted it or not. The language of this amendment is confined solely to the limitation of pay, of the money appropriated, the use of this appropriation. It says that the money herein appropriated shall not be applied to pay for feeding and transporting the Army when it is to do certain things. But it does not follow that some other appropriation may not be used for that. It does not declare that the Army shall not do these things. For all this clause amounts to, the Army may go on and do the very things referred to; only this clause will not pay the Army out of this appropriation the money for doing those things. That is all.

This amendment relates wholly to the uses of this money, and not This amendment relates wholly to the uses of this money, and not to any law regulating the movements of the Army. This amendment is no regulation of the Army, no military regulation. It is a limitation upon the use of the money here appropriated; that is all. It does not retrench one dollar, and does not pretend to. It does not reduce the number of officers of the Army, and does not pretend to. It does not reduce the salaries of the officers, and it does not pretend to. It does not restrict the payment of a single dollar to any man or officer entitled to that dollar. Therefore in its origin and in its character it is a limitation upon appropriations—an appropriation busiacter it is a limitation upon appropriations—an appropriation business. The Committee on Appropriations might have introduced it under the rule, but not the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMAHON. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. McMAHON. If this amendment is purely an act of appropriation, why would it not be in order for any member of the House to move by amendment to designate the direction which that money shall take?

Mr. GARFIELD. Because when a member of the House offers it upon his individual motion then it would come under the first clause of the rule, and in order to be in order it must reduce salaries, or or the rule, and in order to be in order it must reduce salaries, or reduce the number of officers, or reduce the amount of money proposed to be appropriated; this amendment does not do either. I say that under the rule the Committee on Appropriations could have made a report bringing in this proposition, and it would have been in order.

Mr. SPARKS. And only that committee, does the gentleman say?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not believe the Committee on Military Afficirs had convenient to many the committee on Military Afficirs had convenient to many the committee on Military Afficirs had convenient to many the convenience of the committee on Military Afficirs had convenient to many the convenience of the convenie fairs had any more right to report such a provision as this than the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SPARKS. Nor any other committee, except the Committee on Appropriations; is that your proposition?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is my view. Now, Mr. Chairman, all I ask of the Chair in this matter is to make a ruling in strict conformity to the letter of the rule—a ruling which shall be our guide and safeguard in all the entanglements that may arise hereafter. If the ruling should now be made broad and general, we shall find a conflict among committees all through our legislation. We shall find one committee undertaking to usure the functions of another, to get in among committees all through our legislation. We shall find one committee undertaking to usurp the functions of another, to get in its way. For the sake of good order, good legislation, and the proper regard which one committee should pay to another, we ought to construe this rule strictly. On this point I concur with the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is sorry that his mind is somewhat preoccupied by having decided similar questions upon the former and similar Rule 120. In the view of the Chair that rule has not been substantially changed by the new rule.

In the opinion of the Chair, any individual member has the right of offering the pending amendment, and, a fortiori, a committee under the provise of the new rule (Rule XXI, third clause) may do so.

The Chair is unwilling, where there is doubt, to make a decision which would take a novel question of this importance from the dewhich would take a novel question of this importance from the decision of the Committee of the Whole. On all doubtful points of order, according to its experience in the chair, it seems wise to allow the Committee of the Whole to decide, for is not the majority of the committee or House then responsible? Nay, the majority can now overrule the present decision. It can do it upon an appeal.

If the Chair were in doubt he would be bound by any previous analogous decision. A decision upon a question closely analogous to the first section of the second closely analogous to this was made in the first session of the present Congress. The ques-[Mr. Sparks.] It was in the form of an additional section to the Army appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the amendment which was then offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 2002 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"No military or naval officer or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States."

And that section 5528 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:
"Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repelarmed enemies of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years."

The CHAIRMAN. Thereupon, on this the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] raised a point of order. What was it? Was it similar to the point here? He held that the clauses of the amendment involved new legislation not germane to the bill; that it was not in the interest of economy. He contended that the amendment did not upon its face or in any manner tend to retrench expenditures. His question of order was elaborately discussed. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole decided it. The Clerk will read a portion of his decision.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course that was under the old rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated. It was a decision made at the last session of this Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised upon the pending section is this: that it changes existing law, that it is not germane to the pending bill, and that it does not retrench expenditures. Rule 120 provides that no proposition in an appropriation bill, or an amendment thereto, which changes existing law, shall be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures. That the pending section changes existing law appears on its face. That it is germane to the pending bill there can scarcely be a doubt. It relates to the duties of the Army, or the uses to which it may be put. The object of the bill is to provide a support for the Army. A kindred subject to that would be the kind of service the Army is expected to perform. The duties to be performed are closely allied to the matter of Army support. "Germane" does not mean synonymous, but something "near akin," "closely allied," or relevant to that the section is germane to the pending bill.

But the most serious question involved is this: Does the section retrench expenditures! In considering this question the Chair will take into view the Constitution of the United States, the acts of Congress, the provisions of the pending bill, the parliamentary rules and practices of the House, and any official documents of which a court might take judicial cognizance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at that time went farther. He held that he would look to estimates and appropriations. He would see where money had been expended in the use of the Army at the polls to control or influence elections: If he could draw the conclusion from authentic public documents; that the amendment was not obnoxious to the point of order as to retrenchment, he would so rule. He did so rule; as the Chair now rules. He held, furthermore, that—

If it were lawful to use troops as policemen in cities, as sheriffs and constables for serving civil processes, as guards for State prisons, or as messengers for carrying the mails or the transportation of merchandise for private individuals, would not such enlarged duties greatly increase the expense of supporting the Army? As the enlarging of the duties of the Army would necessarily increase the expenses of supporting it, so will the restricting of the uses to which it may be put reduce such expenses. In so far, then, as the services which may be required of the Army, or any part thereof, are restricted by the pending amendment the expense necessarily attending such service is reduced, and to that extent the pending provision does retrench expenditures.

Precisely the serve rescenting, and with heavier force, applies to the Precisely the same reasoning, and with heavier force, applies to the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Illinois, from the Committee on Military Affairs. This amendment provides—

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States—

In what case? What emergency? For what object? Whyto be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Therefore, the Chair, disregarding technical objections and criticisms, holds that any amendatory provision, by which the Army is relieved from additional duty, is in the line of retrenchment. How can it be otherwise? Outside of mere dialectics and refinements, do we not come to this conclusion? Looking at the matter plainly—judging expenses from documents, as well as the prima facie suggestion of the amendment itself—must there not be a saving to the Treasury of the United States, and to the people of this country, by forbidding the use of the Army in an expensive and abnormal presence and relation at the polls?

Mr. CONGER. The provision in the former case expressly prohibited the use of the Army in those cases where expenditures might arise. This proposition does not in any manner prohibit it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will further state, in reply to a suggestion about the strict construction of the proviso in the new rule, that under the rule itself, without the proviso, the amendment is in order. Under the proviso it is beyond controversy. Observe the proorder. Under the proviso it is beyond controversy. Observe the pro-

Provided. That it shall be in order further to amend such a bill upon the report of a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment.

It matters little how the Military Affairs Committee received its authority to report. If under the rules, then "the military establishment and the public defense" (Rule XI) is within their function. If on the reference of the President's message, is it not comprehensive—"That so much as relates to military affairs be referred," &c.? Is a reference required for a committee to report a mere amendment to an reference required for a committee to report a mere amendment to an appropriation bill? If so, and to conserve the largest liberty of amendment and debate to the Committee of the Whole, the Chair regards no action of the House more general than that which refers kindred matters to the appropriate committee. What else can be the reason or meaning of a reference than to give jurisdiction? All references of all matters pertaining to the military establishment are referred to the Military Committee. Can any one say that the direction of the resolutions of the resolutions of the resolutions of the resolutions of the resolutions. tion of the people, through their representatives, as to the use of the Army, is not pertinent to the military establishment?

Is it said that the use of the word "report" in the proviso to the new Rule XXI is used in a technical and limited sense? The Chair regards such an interpretation as very irrational, evanescent, and remote. The word "report" in such a connection does not mean a written report accompanying a bill-a bill to the House itself; never to reach this committee. Surely that cannot be a sound construction.

Members of a committee often rise here and say: "I am authorized,
Mr. Chairman, by my committee to report the following amendment."

He does not make a formal written report; nobody expects it, though the amendment, as this one, may be in writing.

In this proviso "report" is used in a common and general, not a limited, technical, sense. For twenty years or more that language has been the familiar language of members of the House in offering amendments from committees. Gentlemen all know that well. The RECORD is full of such statements.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the Chair have the goodness to point out under which of these clauses this would be in order by an individual?

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the Chair will go on with his decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Ohio say?

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the Chair be good enough to point out under which of the clauses referred to the proviso would be in order if offered by an individual.

offered by an individual.

Mr. HOOKER. I insist that the Chairman shall be permitted to proceed with his decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make his decision in his own way, with all respect to the gentleman from Ohio. He has listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio on this subject.

The Chair would hold that this amendment is not obnoxious to the point of order. It is germane. It, of course, changes existing law, but it retrenches, and the spirit and letter of the old and new rule requires the amendment to be received.

If there were doubt, the Chair would not take the question from the committee; and, on all these questions connected with the ex-penditure of money and the conservation of the ballot, he will en-deavor to give to the majority of the committee the power to pass upon them so as to direct the manner of the payment of the people's money. He will not construe strictly or otherwise any rule which would deny the debate and the amendment characteristic of, and indispensable to, the Committee of the Whole.

Therefore, he thinks this amendment in order.

However, if any member will take an appeal from this decision in order to have the judgment of the committee on the question—

Mr. CONGER. I rise to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In an analogous case under the former rule, to which the Chair has adverted, the same rule substantially, and vindicated as such in the debate on the rules this session, there was an appeal taken by the gentleman from Michigan.

The committee divided. The tellers reported there were—ayes 125, noes 107. The Chair, believing in the analogy of the two cases and in the force of precedent, cannot but respect the reasoning and precedent established in the present Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to ask whether the present rules do not specifically deny an appeal from the decision of the Chair in not specifically deny an appeal from the decision of the Chair in committee.

Mr. CONGER. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point, Mr. Chairman, that an appeal does not lie from the decision of the Chair in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I ask whether the Chair does decide under the rule that an appeal does lie from the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine that point.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. One point of order is already pending.

Mr. CONGER. I insist on my right to take an appeal from the Air. CONGER. I misst on my right to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will look at the rules on the pending point. The rule may have been changed. Will the gentleman from Georgia who has made the point of order give his attention and his authority for his point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. Has it not been the uniform ruling that an appeal does not lie from the decision of the Chair in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? And the Chair profession of the committee of the committee of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee? prefers to appoint tellers, as it concerns his own decision, and names Mr. SPARKS and Mr. CONGER.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 92. So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The question recurred on Mr. Sparks's amendment.

Mr. CONGER. The time has come now, under the arrangement,

Mr. CONGER. The time has come now, under the arrangement, when general debate on this amendment will be in order.

Mr. McMILLIN. No general debate can be had unless there is a change made by order of the House.

Mr. CONGER. There was a distinct understanding on this side that general debate should be permitted on this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Distinctly understood and agreed to by the whole House.

Mr. McMILLIN. It was distinctly objected to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the RECORD read. The Speaker informs the Chair there was some arrangement made.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is proposed, as the Chair understands, that there shall be general debate for one-half hour on the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, but that the right to have general debate upon the amendment which is proposed to be offered by the Committee on Military Affairs shall be re-Served.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How long †
Mr. GARFIELD. That can be fixed hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition †
Mr. SIMONTON. Unless the time for general debate on the amendment is limited, I object.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is what I had reference to.

Mr. CLYMER. As I chanced to have charge of the bill at that time, I beg leave to say what my recollection is of the fact.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The RECORD shows that.
Mr. CLYMER. It is true we went into Committee of the Whole without any agreement as to the length of time to be consumed by general debate. I had endeavored to have it fixed, but there was objection. We went into committee without its being limited. I occupied the floor possibly for ten minutes, as the length of my remarks in the RECORD will show. Then I said:

If no one now desires to address the committee upon this bill generally, if necessary I will move that the committee now rise in order to terminate general debate, so that we may proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

My object being to go into the House and offer to terminate it because I had been engaged in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not necessary unless there be objection. If there is no objection, the committee will now proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection.

We then proceeded to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. Possibly technically this would close the general debate; but I must say in frankness there was evidently an understanding in all parts of the House when we came to what is known as the political riders we should determine then when the general debate should

Mr. PAGE. I ask to have read the RECORD, on page 38, which refers to this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send to the Clerk's desk the part he wishes to have read.

Mr. PAGE. On page 38, under the head of "order of business." Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if in any conversation with the gentlemen on the other side there was any assurance on his part that he would consent to general debate, provided there was legislation of this character proposed upon the bill?

Mr. CLYMER. I will say in response to the gentleman from Geor-

Mr. CLYMER. I will answer immediately. I will say

Mr. PAGE. Let the RECORD to which I refer be read.

Mr. WILSON. Did not the gentleman from Pennsylvania say that if a rider was proposed to the bill debate might be extended for Mr. CLYMER. Yes, sir; I so stated.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, the gentleman agreed to that.
Mr. PAGE. I would like to have the Clerk read that portion of the RECORD to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLYMER. Before the House agrees to a recess or an adjournment, I desire if possible to have some understanding with regard to any general debate to be had upon the proposition offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] as an additional section to the Army appropriation bill now pending in Committee of the whole.

Mr. Page. I shall object to any understanding at all now.

Mr. Clymer. Although I shall not insist upon it in the present condition of affairs. I will say that I do not believe any general debate can be had.

Mr. Keifer. Are you opposed to general debate?

Mr. Clymer. I have not said so; when I do, gentlemen will hear it. My purpose in rising now is to endeavor to get some understanding or agreement.

Mr. Reed. It seems to me that this is not the proper time to make any agreement about debate. Such agreement should be made only when it is determined whether the proposition is in order or not.

Mr. Clymer. We might fix some time when the vote is to be taken on the bill, for that would be a great convenience to members.

Mr. Corger. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. Clymer. Now I desire in reponse to the question of the gen-

Mr. CLYMER. Now I desire in reponse to the question of the gentleman from Georgia to state that while I cannot recollect the names of any individual members on the other side of the House to whom I gave assurance that I would be willing to allow debate on such a proposition as this, yet that I did so I have the most distinct recollection.

Mr. HAYES. It will be found on page 35 of the RECORD of the day before yesterday in the gentleman's own words.

Mr. CLYMER. Let the Clerk read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAWLEY. But we are seeking unanimous consent now to limit debate upon all the provisions of the bill, and it may be well to have this matter clearly under-all the provisions of the bill, and it may be well to have this stood.

Mr. CLYMER. I trust my friend from Connecticut will agree to my proposition that if there be in committee any amendment proposed in the nature of what I have called a political rider, upon that question there shall be general debate, the extent of which shall be fixed hereafter.

Mr. HAWLEY. But, Mr. Speaker, how shall we know that until we have entered upon the five-minute debate upon the bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. If we reserve that right, and it is understood now in the unanimous consent that when a question arises of that character, that right being reserved, we enter upon general debate, that, I think, will be the best settlement of the question.

Mr. CONGER. Notwithstanding the fact that we have entered upon the five-minute debate?

Mr. Clymer. Notwithstanding that. Mr. Conger. Then I do not object to limiting the time to half an hour.

Mr. CLYMER. At the time I made this assertion the political rider had not been offered, and I did this in view of its being offered, without, however, having any authority from the committee in the matter. Since that time the new section has been offered, and by the direction of the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, as it comes the direction of the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, as it comes from that committee and is under the control of the chairman of that committee rather than myself, it seems to me that perhaps it would be proper that he should make the arrangement regarding the general debate on this subject.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to ask a question before the gentleman from Pennsylvania sits down.

Mr. SPARKS. Have I the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. When the question in regard to the probable presentment of this amendment was pending on Tuesday last, there was much confusion in the discussion with respect to the propriety of any, or if any what, length of time should be occupied in general debate much confusion in the discussion with respect to the propriety of any, or if any what, length of time should be occupied in general debate upon it. I tried at that time, I remember, to make myself heard, and got in perhaps a few words. I know that I positively objected to extending time for general debate, although I think it is not in the RECORD; I distinctly objected to general debate upon this subject, and think some other gentlemen around me did the same. I also remember stating at the time that if I had the amendment in my hand that I would not get in the information of sandarous who made that I would read it for the information of gentlemen who were inquiring as to its import. I believe that statement appears in the RECORD. At the time that statement was made I also tried to get information as to whether the member of the Committee on Appropriaformation as to whether the member of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of the bill would have charge of it after the amendment came in from the Committee on Military Affairs, or whether it would devolve on me. And I am not now advised on that subject. If, however, it does devolve upon me, or any other controlling part in regard to it, I desire to say that I am personally opposed to opening the question up again to general debate after it has been once closed by the order of the House. This subject, however, in my judgment, is one that devolves upon no single man. And I can speak for myself only when I say that I prefer to have no general debate. The amendment was offered when the House was in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, and it seems to me now that it ought to be discussed under that rule and have it disposed of without opening it up to an exciting, extended debate, in order that we out opening it up to an exciting, extended debate, in order that we may get through with the matter and go on with some other business that is pending before the House and which the country demands shall be attended to by us.

I think, sir, that there has been discussion enough on this question heretofore in the extra session of this Congress, and in the last session of the Congress prior to it, and that it is needless now to have any further extended or general discussion of it.

Now, if I am regarded as having charge of this matter—I do not know that to be so, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania having charge of the bill indicates that as his view of it—then I desire to say the sooner it can be disposed of satisfactorily will be best for all concerned in that it will facilitate the business of the House

Mr. CLYMER. I have stated that so far as this amendment is concerned the time fixed for general debate ought to be arranged by the gentleman having control of the amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. Of course I have nothing to do with your bill except simply so far as the amendment is concerned; and whether or not smiply so har as the amendment is concerned; and whether or not my relations to it give me any special rights or privileges in the conduct of this matter I do not know; neither is it material. This matter, I repeat, has been heretofore elaborately discussed formonths, and there is no good reason why that discussion should be now renewed and repeated.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is the gentleman from Illinois opposed to general

Mr. SPARKS. There is all around me a manifest disposition to end this matter and I am in hearty accord with that disposition. Let the debate go on under the five-minute rule and end there. But gentlemen will not find me anywhere or under any circumstances disposed to be factious about it.

Mr. FRYE was recognized. Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to say a single word? Mr. FRYE.

single word?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. I want to say simply this: I do not know if I care to say a word upon this question, nor do I know anybody that does: But if the opposite side of the House wants to discuss the question, I do not see why it should not be done.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say it was distinctly understood by a majority of gentlemen on this floor, and by all on this side of the House, yesterday, that it was agreed practically that general debate should be allowed. When objection was made the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] in charge of the bill, in my hearing—it may not have been in that of the reporter—said: "Oh, very well, we will attend to it when the time comes," meaning "we will vote for it." Now, the republican side of this House, as I understand it; intend to have general debate on this amendment.

intend to have general debate on this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this same amendment was debated for nearly three months during the extra session.

Nothing has occurred that requires any further discussion upon it.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is mistaken. There was no general

Mr. BAYNE. In egentieman is mistaken. There was no general debate upon it at all.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it not the fact that when this amendment was discussed in the House all the speeches were made in advocacy of it; while no gentleman who was opposed to it was allowed to say a word; except the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keifer,] who made a few remarks ?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Nine-tenths of those on the other side of the House voted to put this amendment on the appropriation bill as a rider. I can see no occasion for general debate on it. I bill as a rider. I can see no occasion for general decade of the object.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it in order in Committee of the Whole to discuss whether there shall be general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No: 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I propose, Mr. Speaker, that in Committee of the Whole we enter upon general debate upon the amendment to the Army appropriation bill now pending. I would offer to limit the time if I were able to do so. I desire as a member of the sub-committee that prepared this Army appropriation bill to speak upon the amendment briefly and to yield part of my time to another gentleman. An agreement that there should be general debate upon this amendment was as distinctly made as ever was made in the House or as can be made unless by a contract signed and sealed.

Mr. SPARKS. With whom?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will read from the RECORD, and that will show it; but I know it without reading. A part of it has been already read:

it; but I know it without reading. A part of it has been already read:

Mr. HAWLEY. I agree with the gentleman, my colleague on the committee, in some of his remarks. I have the honor of being a member of the sub-committee which framed this bill. So far as the bill proper is concerned, I do not see why the House need to spend two hours of time, unless there be some minor items to be introduced under the five-minute debate which would give rise to some discussion. But I am given to understand, through the public prints and through gossip in the House, that the Committee on Military Affairs has sundry amendments of a political nature which they propose to offer to the bill. If so, I think it will be quite as well it should be known now, and these amendments be read to the House. Let them be proposed now and considered in any general debate that we may have. The Speaker pro tempore. That cannot be done in committee; the bill is not now in the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. But we are seeking unanimous consent now to limit debate upon all the provisions of the bill, and it may be well to have this matter clearly understood.

Then said Mr. CLYMER:

I trust my friend from Connecticut will agree to my proposition that if there be in committee any amendment proposed in the nature of what I have called a political rider, upon that question there shall be general debate, the extent of which shall be fixed hereafter.

That was a very fair proposition. I said:

But, Mr. Speaker, how shall we know that, until we have entered upon the five-minute debate upon the bill !

I did not wish to be foreclosed from having general debate upon the political rider that was expected to come in. Therefore I made that suggestion. Then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Garfield] said:

If we reserve that right, and it is understood now in the unanimous consent that when a question arises of that character, that right being reserved, we enter upon general debate, that, I think, will be the best settlement of the question.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] inquired:

Notwithstanding the fact that we have entered upon the five-minute debate?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] answered:

Notwithstanding that.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] remarked:

Then I do not object to limiting the time to half an hour.

That is, for the primary, general debate. If that be not a fair understanding, words cannot make it.

Mr. ROBESON. Was not the action of the House limiting general debate to half an hour founded upon that understanding?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; it was based upon that understanding. I should have stood here from that time till this upon the question of allowing general debate upon this rider if it had not been for that

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] is rec-

Mr. HAWLEY. I cannot understand the readiness of gentlemen to run away from this battle-field. You seek to run away from this battle-field. What is the matter with you?

Mr. SPARKS. Have I the floor, or does the gentleman from Connecticut have it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Connecticut had concluded and recognized the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had stopped but had not got through.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know the extent to which members on this

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know the extent to which members on this side agreed to allow general debate on this proposition. I do know, however, that at the time this amendment was spoken of as likely to be offered by me, I proposed to give the substance of the amendment, and that I then and there stated that I should object to any general and that I then and there stated that I should object to any general debate upon it. Now, I want to say—

Mr. HAWLEY. Here is the RECORD.
Mr. SPARKS. Hold on; I am stating this for myself and will make my position plain before I get through. If the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] understood his side all to agree, and also understood that a part of this side agreed, to having general debate, I do not object. But I say that for myself I stated to the House (I do not know that it got into the RECORD) that I objected to general debate. And thus objecting, I know there could not have been unanimous consent to it—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not in charge of the bill.

Mr. SPARKS. No, I was not; and I do not at this moment know that I have any special charge of it now. This amendment comes here through me by instructions from the committee of which I am chairman; and that is my whole connection with it. And I might, sir, just as well here add that this amendment is not broad enough and does not go to the extent that makes it by any means an important question to me. And I will state on this subject—

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. SPARKS. I have not done. Unless the gentleman wants to ask

Mr. SPARKS. I have not done. Unless the gentleman wants to ask a question—
Mr. HAWLEY. I will ask a question.
Mr. SPARKS. Very well.
Mr. HAWLEY. I will ask the gentleman if the language which I have read from the RECORD does not imply that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] my colleague on the sub-committee and on the Committee on Appropriations, and myself distinctly proposed, and it was so understood between us, with the assent also of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that when the political amendment came up there should be general debate on it, and that nothing then done should bar the possibility of that general debate?
Mr. SPARKS. That is a speech rather than a question. But I will

Mr. SPARKS. That is a speech rather than a question. But I will state to the gentleman that if any agreement was made binding upon anybody I have nothing to say or to do with it. I stated (whether it

mr. HAWLEY. Here is the RECORD.

Mr. SPARKS. Do not interrupt me. I then stated (whether it got into the RECORD or not) that I should object to general debate on the amendment, so far as I was concerned.

The gentleman has said something about somebody running away from debate. Why, this modest, mild little amendment of mine is one that the gentleman himself voted for during this Congress. It is one that my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] voted for. It is one that my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] voted for.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As a rider.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As a rider.

Mr. SPARKS. As a rider on an appropriation bill. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Atkins] voted for it. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] voted for it. Now, as these republicans all voted for it, and as these democratic friends of mine also voted for it, is it fair to call this amendment a political rider? I can show by the RECORD which I now hold in my hand that the great majority of this House on both sides have supported this identical amendment. It also passed the Senate, was approved by the republican President, and became a law.

Mr. KEIFER. I want the gentleman to except some of us. He says that we all voted for it.

Mr. SPARKS. No; I did not so state, for I know that the gentleman from Ohio, now before me, [Mr. Keifer,] voted against it; and I myself was paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] and did not vote for it; but these other gentlemen did.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is hardly fair to the country and to Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is hardly fair to the country and to the business of this House to get up a long angry discussion here about what some gentlemen choose to call a "political rider." In fact it is not just to call this amendment a "political rider" at all. Because both sides of this House, democrats and republicans, with great unanimity, at the extra session, as is well known, supported by their recorded votes identically this thing. It is a mild, modest, in offensive amendment, that we have about all of us sanctioned once, one that the Senate has concurred in passing, and that the President has sanctioned. And it is one which I hope the House will now again sanction, and that we will then go on with the other pressing and important business before us.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPARKS. One word mere. Having said this much, I now submit to the gentlemen on the other side of the House that if I have any power in this matter they will find me now, as always, disposed to yield to and sanction any reasonable request they have to make. How much time do gentlemen desire to discuss this amendment?

Mr. GARFIELD. A few weeks ago—

Mr. SPARKS. I am asking a question now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not ask the gentleman to yield to me; I want to take the floor in my own time.

Mr. SPARKS. I am asking how much time these gentlemen want.
Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make one remark. I wish to state that I watched the discussion the other day, and I concur with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that there was an understanding that this matter in regard to debate upon this amendment was to be settled hereafter.

Mr. COOK. I certainly understood, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] does, that there was to be general debate allowed on this amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. That was my understanding; and I want to make the further remark that I think that is the shortest way of settling the matter.

Mr. SPARKS. Whatever the understanding or agreement was with other gentlemen, I made no agreement, but specially objected to doing so. That is all I pretend to say. But I want now to say that I am not only willing but hope a reasonable time will be allowed to gentlemen on the other side to discuss this amendment. Enough to satisfy any ordinary ambition. Enough for them to get fully on the record on this subject. But I do hope that no member on this side record on this subject. But I do hope that no member on this side of the House will want to take up time in discussing it.

Mr. COOK, (in his seat.) And if he does, take him out and shoot him.

Mr. SPARKS. And when gentlemen on the other side get through their discussion, I hope we will vote upon the amendment and end it.

And to expedite it, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. COOK] says, if any man on this side of the House does propose to discuss it, we will have him "shot on the spot." [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. That is the usual manner in which you dispose of people who discuss political questions. [Laughter.]

people who discuss political questions. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The bill is pending in Committee of the Whole;

and there is no proposition now pending in the House.

Mr. CLYMER. I will make the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for general debate

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania move to put a limitation as to general debate?

Mr. CLYMER. That is a subject for discussion.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the motion be that when the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on this bill it be for general de-

Mr. SPARKS. We want simply to fix some limit of time.
Mr. GARFIELD. That can be fixed hereafter.
Mr. ATKINS. I move that all general discussion in Committee of the Whole on this bill be limited to four hours.
Mr. CONGER. There has been no general debate on the pending

The SPEAKER. This is a proposition to allow general debate, with limitation as to its length.

Mr. CONGER. And the House cannot close it until there has been general debate under the rule.

The SPEAKER. If true, that would only involve the necessity of the committee rising; and the Chair thought the proposition for a limitation could be entertained now.

Mr. CONGER. We desire to let the general debate go on until the House may feel disposed to close it. That is the quickest and most direct way of meeting this proposition.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Michigan does not speak with his usual accuracy when he says that there has been no general debate. There was general debate, which was engaged in by the gentleman in charge of the bill, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. REED. I suggest that when we go into Committee of the Whole for general debate, it is very possible four hours will not be required, unless some "shooting" be done on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the rule applies in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] because this bill has been under general debate in the Committee of manner suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] because this bill has been under general debate in the Committee of the Whole House. The Chair, therefore, as a safe mode of reaching a result satisfactory to all, entertains the motion to limit debate.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a question of order. Is not the next thing in order the putting of my motion to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the proposition; but the gentleman from Michigan made a suggestion that it was not within the power of the House to limit general debate until the House had again gone into Committee of the Whole on the subject. The Chair in reply states that this bill has already been considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and there has been general debate. general debate.

Mr. CONGER. But, Mr. Speaker, if we have any rights under the arrangement which was made, then this is a new proposition, entirely different from the other on which there was general debate.

The SPEAKER. Strictly speaking, this is simply an amendment to the bill.

to the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I claim that by the understanding we have the right to general debate on this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes fully that there was an understanding there should be general debate.

Mr. CONGER. That being the understanding, there has been no general debate on this proposition. We were to have independent general debate on it; and I ask that we may have it without limit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.] on the ground that the bill having been already considered in Committee of the Whole, and general debate having been had thereon, the House now has the right to limit debate under existing condition of the facts in the case.

Mr. CONGER. Then, of course, it has the right to cut off all general debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, according to the understanding heretofore alluded to. Upon this bill, in the opinion of the Chair, all the requirements of the rule as to discussion and limitations thereon have been complied with. The rule to which the gentleman from Michigan refers applies more particularly to the five-minute debate; as to general debate, all the requirements of the rule have been met; and there having been general debate upon the bill, it is now competent for the House to fix a limit upon the general debate to be allowed in the committee on the amendment pending.

bate to be allowed in the committee on the amendment pending.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. General debate having been closed, how can we, without a change of the rules, extend the time for general debate?

The SPEAKER. Because it was the understanding.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It may have been the understanding among some members; it was not the understanding of the House.

The SPEAKER. If the House does not think there was any understanding, it can vote down the proposition for general debate; but the Chair proposes to give the House the opportunity to determine the question.

Mr. SIMONTON. I desire to say that it required unanimous consent to agree to the proposition for general debate. When the proposition was stated from the Chair, I said very distinctly, as the RECORD shows, that "unless time for general debate on the amendment is limited, I object." There was no general consent that there should be unlimited debate upon this amendment when reached. We have gone into Committee of the Whole; we have had general debate; we have gone into this debate under the five-minute rule; we have reached this amendment, and there we are under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has allowed the motion fixing a limitation in exact harmony with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SIMONTON. If gentlemen agree to limitation, I am ready for it. I objected at the time, because there was no limitation upon the general debate.

The SPEAKER. The motion is, that when the House resolves itself again into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union all general debate on the amendment and remaining portion of the bill shall be limited to four hours.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 5621) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommodation of the revenue officers and the United States courts and their officers, in Charleston, West Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, &c., to the triennial committee of Knights Templar at Chicago; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City, Nebraska.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 5621) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommodation of the revenue officers and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

Mr. ROBINSON, for ten days;

Mr. Houk, for ten days;
Mr. Muller, until Tuesday next;
Mr. Scales, for ten days, to attend court as a witness;
Mr. Steele, for two days;

Mr. NEAL, for ten days from to-morrow; and

Mr. KENNA, for one week.

AUSTIN P. PROCTOR.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5704) for the relief of Austin P. Proctor, of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS BY SEA

Mr. DEUSTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5705) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.
Then, on motion of Mr. BROWNE, (at four o'clock and thirty-seven minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the president of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company, for an appropriation for the payment of the claim of said company against the Government—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BAKER: The petition of H. D. Hathaway and 30 others, citizens of DeKalb County, Indiana, late soldiers in the war for the suppression of the rebellion, for the equalization of bounties—to the

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 9, 1880.

Prayer by Rev. T. S. WYNKOOP, of the city of Washington. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communica-tion from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from W. W. Godding, M. D., superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane, relative to a probable deficiency of $11,638.89 in the ap-propriation for current expenses of the hospital for the present fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Co-lumbia and ordered to be printed.

year; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Adjutant-General of the Army, forwarding plans and estimates for the construction of a permanent building at Columbus Barracks, Ohio, for use as a chapel and school; which, on motion of Mr. COCKRELL, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and an

of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, and an accompanying report of Colonel J. H. Simpson, Corps of Engineers, upon a survey made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of the Mississippi River opposite the mouth of the Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KERNAN presented a memorial of the Seneca Nation of Indians, Mr. KERNAN presented a memorial of the Seneca Nation of Indians, anthenticated by the tribe, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3573) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians to grant title of lands for cemetery purposes on the Allegany reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of J. F. Folsom and 85 other citizens of Knox County, in the State of Nebraska, where the Santee Indians reside, asking that they be allotted lands in severalty; also a like petition of 32 other citizens of the same county, and another from the same number of citizens of that county, all praying for the same the same number of citizens of that county, all praying for the same object. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of Mrs. Ann Fletcher, mother Mr. GROOME presented the petition of Mrs. Ann Fletcher, mother of Edward Fletcher, late private Company B, Fifty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for the passage of a bill granting her a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the petition of Henrietta Walcott Johnson, M. D., of Orange, Essex County, New Jersey, praying for the removal of her political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER. I present resolutions passed by the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, South Carolina, approving the preamble and resolutions of the New York Chamber of Commerce, in which Congress is requested, in addition to the present annual volumes of Commercial Relations, which is a standard work of great value, to make provision for the weekly and monthly publications of the consular reports and their distribution to at least the leading commercial help of the United States. cial bodies of the United States. I am somewhat at a loss to know whether the memorial should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations or the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WHYTE. I will state to the Senator from South Carolina that the Committee on Printing had that subject under consideration and found it more appropriate that it should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it was reported back and so referred.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 5621) to provide for a building suitable for a postoffice for the accommodation of the revenue officers, and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia; and A joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) providing for payment of wages to employés in the Government Printing Office for legal holidays.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, it was Ordered. That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government at Cleveland, Ohio, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GROOME. A few days ago the bill (S. No. 1585) for the relief of John Stewart was referred to the Committee on Pensions. It relates to a balance of unpaid bounty, and the Committee on Pensions think it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. I am therefore directed to report back the bill and ask that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 163) to restore Assistant Paymaster Nicholas H. Stavey to the active from the retired list of the Navy, reported it without amendment.

TERRITORIAL JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on Territories have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5048) relating to justices of the peace in the Territories, and have directed me to report it back with the recommendation that it pass. Accompanying it is a written re-ort.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed.

Mr. GARLAND. The Delegates from all the Territories have made a request that the bill be acted upon immediately, and I ask for its present consideration. It will not take fifteen minutes.

The bill was read at length, and by unanimous consent considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that when from any cause there shall be a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace in any of the Territories of the United States, it shall be lawful to fill made vacancy by appointment or election, in such manner as has been such vacancy by appointment or election, in such manner as has been or may be provided by the governor and Legislative Assembly of such Territory; but the appointee, or person elected to fill such vacancy, shall hold office only until his successor shall be regularly elected and qualified as provided by law.

Mr. GARLAND. There is a report which will explain the whole

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. The Chief Clerk read the following report this day submitted by Mr. GARLAND:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 5048, wing had the same under consideration, report as follows:
Upon an examination of the Revised Statutes of the United States we find that section 1856 provides that "justices of the peace and all general officers of the militia in the several Territories shall be elected by the people, in such manner as the respective Legislatures may provide;" and section 1857 provides that "all township, district, and county officers, except justices of the peace and general officers of the militia, shall be appointed or elected in such manner as may be provided by the governor and Legislative Assembly of each Territory." &c. From these two sections it appears that while all county officers, except justices of the peace and officers of the militia, may be elected or appointed in the manner provided by the governor and Legislative Assembly, yet justices of the peace must be elected and cannot be appointed, and the question arises as to whether a vacancy arising in the office of justice of the peace can be filled by appointment instead of by election.

Under section 1857 the governor and Legislative Assembly of a Territory may provide that county officers, with the exception aforesaid, may be appointed instead of elected; and also that all vacancies which may occur in such county offices may be filled by appointment. It seems to be deubtful whether, as the law now stands, the governor and Legislative Assembly car provide for filling vacancies in the office of justice of the peace by appointment, although we are informed that in all the Territories such a law exists. In one Territory we are informed that two out of the three justices of the supreme court have held that the territorial statute providing that vacancies in the office of justice of the peace shall be filled by appointment of the board of county commissioners was invalid, as being in violation of the two sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States above quoted. To require that a vacancies in the office of an inferior grade, must be filled only by election while more important offices can be filled by appointment seems an anomaly, and must evidently have been an oversight or mistake made in co

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PADUCAH, KENTUCKY.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 5622) to provide for the construction of a public building at the

No. 5622) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Paducah, State of Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I ask that it be considered at this time.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make a response to the inquiry made yesterday morning by the Senator from New York, [Mr. Conkling,] whom I am sorry not to see in his seat at the present time, in relation to the amount of appropriations that have been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I desire to say that they have been exceedingly moderate, and it is the purpose of the committee to keep them so. So far all the appropriations that have yet been acted upon by the committee amount to $1,036,500. Upon a consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury it is supposed that we may with propriety report something more beyond this sum. I could give if necessary the particular places where buildings have been proposed, and I think there would not be any criticism made upon any one of the reports of the committee save that alluded to by the Senator from New York yesterday. The whole amount is $1,036,500. $1,036,500.

$1,036,500.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that the amount for the present Congress?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; for the present Congress. In Indiana, $9,500;
Colorado, $75,000; Florida, $75,000; Rhode Island, $125,000; Alabama, $40,000; West Virginia, $75,000; District of Columbia, $117,000, (a bill that we have not yet acted on, but I hope we may within a very short time, as it is very much needed indeed for enlarging the City Hall for the accommodation of the courts here;) Virginia, $75,000; Ohio, for Toledo, $75,000; Paducah, the bill reported this morning, $50,000; for Cleveland, Ohio, $150,000.

Mr. INGALLS. Are these sums for new buildings?

Mr. MORRILL. Mainly for new buildings, but in part it is for an enlargement of old ones.

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senate to allow this bill to be considered this morning. The reason is that the Kentucky Legislature have to con-morning. The reason is that the Kentucky Legislature have to consent to give the ground before the building can be constructed. I hope there will be no objection to the bill. That Legislature adjourns in a few days, and unless we can pass the bill now the work will be in a few days, and unless we can pass the bill how the work will be delayed two years.

I desire to say that I shall be compelled to be absent all next week, and I ask that the bill may be considered now.

Mr. McPHERSON. Has this bill just been reported this morning?

Mr. McPHERSON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection carries it over.

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdrawn by the Senator. I think

Mr. BECK. The objection is withdrawn by the Senator. I think the bill will not take long.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 14, after the word "made," to

So that no expenditures shall be made or authorized for the purchase of a site and the full completion of said building beyond the sum herein appropriated, upon plans to be previously approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 17, after the word "building," to insert:

Which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON ROCKY MOUNTAIN LOCUST.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation, and without amendment, the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, for the printing of 10,000 copies of the second report of the United States entomological commission on the Rocky Mountain locust and other injurious insects; and as that is a very important subject, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed with necessary illustrations at the Government Printing Office, 10,000 copies of the second report of the United States entomological commission on the Rocky Mountain locust and other injurious insects; 5,000 copies for the use of the House, 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the REPORT ON ZOOLOGY.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed also by the Committee on Printing to report back, with a favorable recommendation and with amend ments, the Senate concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 copies of the report on zoology, volume 14 of the final reports of the United States Geological Survey; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the reso-

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were, in line 8, to strike out "3,000" and insert "2,800," and, in line 10, to strike out "1,000" and insert "1,200;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, with the necessary illustrations, 5,000 copies of the report on zoology, volume 14 of the final reports of the United States Geological Survey of the Territories by F. V. Hayden; 2,800 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,200 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of the Interior.

The amendment of the Interior.

The amendments were agreed to. The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

COMMITTEE ON EXCISE REVENUES.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a resolution reported by me from the Committee on Finance about three weeks ago proposing to create a joint committee of two mem-bers of the Senate Committee on Finance and of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House for the purpose of taking into consideration alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamptax on cigars and all forms of tobacco that are subjected to stamps. The object is, that as there is an alleged loss of revenue, and a very great one, at this time by the non-payment of stamp duties on cigars made, a sub-committee, as it may be called, composed of members of the House Ways and Means Committee and of the Senate Committee the House Ways and Means Committee and of the Senate Committee on Finance may have before them and hear the various claims for methods of preventing these alleged losses. I believe it is a matter of practical interest to the revenue. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. It is on the Calendar at page 2.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Delaware if he expects that the resolution will require to be discussed or explained?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think it will be discussed at all. It is a mere formal matter. It will not take a minute and a half to pass it. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that it be reported. Nobody knows, except from the statement of the chairman of the Finance Committee, what it is.

Mr. BAYARD. The resolution is on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. The resolution is on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, reported by Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, February 24, 1880:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That a joint committee, consisting of two members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, be appointed by the respective presiding officers, to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on eigars and other articles subject to excise duties, what remedy can be provided by law, and with power to recommend such measures as they may deem proper by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPORT ON BEET SUGAR.

Mr. WHYTE. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the printing of 20,000 copies of the report upon beet sugar and the manufacture of sugar from beets, prepared by Hon. William G. Le Duc, Commissioner of Agriculture, have instructed me to report it back, with a favorable recommendation, together with two amendments which they recommend to be adopted. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report upon beet sugar and the manufacture of sugar from beets, prepared by Hon. William G. Le Duc, Commissioner of Agriculture, and transmitted by the President from the Department of Agriculture February —, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives. Of this number, 15,200 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 3,800 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the gentleman who reported the resolution if he knows anything about the character of this report. The manufacture of sugar from beets in this country is a very new enterprise. Before we order a publication in regard to it we ought to have some assurance that the book has been prepared by gentlemen acquainted with the matter. We should do harm by by gentlemen acquainted with the matter. We should do harm by sending out a book unless it has been prepared by persons having information and knowledge on the subject. Besides the expense of the matter, we should do an actual injury to a young and interesting business in this country unless we are confident that the work which we are to publish, and to which by our publication we give some authority, is a work that has been carefully prepared. Ido not know anything about the knowledge of the parties who have done the work, but we ought to be careful in this matter, I think.

We have in my State an enterprise of this kind for the manufacture

We have in my State an enterprise of this kind for the manufacture of sugar from beets, and it is an interest in which we feel great concern. We do not want our people misled by the publication under the authority of Congress of works upon that subject which are not authoritative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir; but I want information.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir; but I want information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to state, so that the Senate may understand, that this work is prepared by Commissioner Le Duc. Will anybody question for amoment his entire capacity to prepare such a work?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I asked the question of the Senator, as upon the knowledge of the gentlemen preparing the work in my estimation.

the knowledge of the gentlemen preparing the work in my estimation depends the value of the book. I have never learned that Mr. Le Duc is so well informed upon all subjects that he can write books about the ravages of the cotton-worm, the diseases of swine, and every-about the ravages of the cotton-worm, the diseases of swine, and everything else, including the manufacture of sugar from beets.

Mr. ALLISON. And sorghum.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have some better authority.

Mr. WHYTE. I thought if there were any two subjects in the world about which he knew everything, they were sugar and tea.

[Laughter.] I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the

will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in line 9 to strike out "fifteen" and insert "fourteen" before "thousand;" so as to read: "of this number fourteen thousand two hundred copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives;" and in line 10 to strike out "three" and insert "four" before "thousand;" so as to read: "four thousand eight hundred copies for the use of the Senate."

The amendments were agreed to.
The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

EULOGIES ON REPRESENTATIVE ALFRED M. LAY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the printing of 2,000 copies of the memorial addresses on the life and services of Hon. Alfred M. Lay, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in; as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That 2,000 copies, in book form, suitably bound, of the memorial addresses on the life and character of Hon. Alfred M. Lay, late a member of the House of Representatives, be printed; 500 for the use of the Senate and 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

REPORT ON ECLIPSE OF 1878.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to a concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Naval Observatory on the eclipse of 1878, (1879 in the original resolution,) to report it back, and recommend concurrence in the amendments of the House; and I ask for present consideration. eration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives, which were, in line 4, to strike out "1879" and insert "1878;" in lines 4 and 5, to strike out "1,500" and insert "1,000," and, in line 6, to strike out "2,500" and insert "3,000;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Naval Observatory on the eclipse of 1878; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Naval Observatory

The amendments were concurred in.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1879.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the printing of 300,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1879, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration. I call the attention of my economical friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. Davis, of West Virginia,] to the amendments of the Committee on Printing.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1879; 220,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 50,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The resolution was reported by the Committee on Printing with

The first amendment was, in line 2, to strike out "three" and insert "two" before "hundred;" so as to read, "two hundred thousand

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.
Mr. ANTHONY. We have reduced the number from 300,000 to 200,000 copies. The House sent us the resolution for printing 300,000 copies. The committee recommend that the number be reduced to 200,000. The publication, as the resolution came from the House, would cost $130,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. To publish 300,000 copies?
Mr. ANTHONY. To publish 300,000 copies.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How much would it cost to publish

Mr. DAVIS, or West Virginia. How much would it cost to publish 200,000 copies?

Mr. ANTHONY. There will be a proportional reduction by diminishing the number. The cost of composition is very small. The expense is nearly all in press-work and paper and illustrations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask the Senator what has been the usual number?

Mr. ANTHONY. The usual number has been as many as the Sen-

Mr. ANTHONY. The usual number has been as many as the Senate could swallow.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How many has that been?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think 300,000 copies.

Mr. PADDOCK. Of the last two reports 300,000 copies each were published. This is the most important of all the reports.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think when providing for printing the last report we amended the resolution by printing 200,000 or 300,000 copies of the reports of previous years, owing to the strenuous exertions of my economical friend from West Virginia.

We are constantly complained of for the extravagance of the public printing. Congress makes meager appropriations for printing, issues large orders upon the Printing Office, and then complains of the Public Printer for making a deficiency. We have appropriated $400,000 for the deficiency in printing this year, and here we propose to take out $130,000, about one-third of it, in a single publication.

I have no expectation that the amendment of the committee will prevail, but in the interest of economy we felt it to be our duty to offer it, and I feel it to be my duty to support it.

offer it, and I feel it to be my duty to support it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. From the appearance of my friend from Rhode Island and the manner in which he puts his questions, I think the motion to reduce was presented by him in order to have a little fun this morning. I am sure the Committee on Printing do not intend what they have reported to the Senate. If so, they have forgotten that a moment ago they wanted to renew some report that had been made about the moon or about the moon or stars or something else, which perhaps will cost as much as 100,000 copies of these agricultural reports.

Mr. President, almost every morning I listen to the Senator bringing in some report to print something new, something that no one ever heard of before. But let me say to the Senator that nothing he could do would perhaps advance the interests of this country more than to aid agriculture. It is a well-known fact that almost every country on the globe spends perhaps twenty times as much in the fos-tering of agriculture as the United States. I believe about $200,000 is the entire amount we spend for that purpose, while Russia, our greatest agricultural rival in almost all the cereals, last year or the year before last spent $14,000,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. In printing?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, sir; in the fostering of agriculture; and the Senator knows that this printing is almost the only form in which our Government aids agriculture. I hope the report of the committee will not be agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator says that I have just reported a resolution for the printing of a report about something in the moon. He refers to the observations of the eclipse of 1878, one of the most He refers to the observations of the eclipse of 1878, one of the most extraordinary and, to science, useful natural phenomena that has occurred in many years. The observations are for the safety of navigation, for the security of ships, and for the salvation of life. Congress appropriated $8,000 to take the observations, which are entirely useless unless the report of the observations is printed, and the cost of that printing will be about $5,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It will be recollected by the Senate that perhaps a handful of people are interested in the report the Senator has just referred to, while half the people of the country are interested in agriculture, and those who are not directly interested in it are dependent upon it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Every man who sails the ocean, every man who has anything brought to him in a ship, is interested in this. The whole navigation of the country and of the world is interested in it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am not objecting to what the Senator asks, but the Senator is objecting to giving information to the agriculturists of this country. I do not object to what he proposes in the other matter, but I say again that but a handful of people are interested in it compared to those who are interested in agriculture.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island whether or not the report of the chemist of the Agricultural Department, in relation to making sugar from sorghum-cane, is contained in this report?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know what is contained in this report; I have not seen it; but we have just ordered a large edition of a report on the production of beet sugar this morning.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. But the report upon beet sugar is not as impor-Mr. KIRKWOOD. But the report upon beet sugar is not as important as the report upon the manufacture of sugar from sorghum-cane. We are importing every year many millions of dollars' worth of sugar. The chemist of the Agricultural Department says, rightfully or wrongfully I am sure I do not know, he very earnestly believes that he has demonstrated our power to produce unlimited quantities of sugar in the United States from sorghum-cane. If that be true, the fact that it can be done and the methods by which it may be done should be spread as broadcast as possible through our country. If we can save forty or fifty millions of dollars a year that we now spend for sugar raised abroad by making it from the Chinese sugar-cane at home, the cost of printing three hundred thousand copies of this report will be very well spent.

very well spent.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that might be put into a separate report.

I have great confidence in the chemist of the Agricultural Department, Professor Collier, a very competent and able man. I have great faith in the truth of his theory, and in his development of it. I think that of the report upon the production of sorghum I should be in favor of a large edition.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am anxious that should be done. I know the report has been withheld; I have tried to get it to send to my own State, so that this spring our people before corn-planting time might be ready to go on with the enterprise in the direction pointed out by the chemist; but I have been met all the time on application to him and to General Le Duc, the head of the Department, by the statement that there was no money to print the report. I was glad when I heard the resolution brought in this morning, and I suppose that, of course, this report becomes part of the general report of the Commissions.

sioner of Agriculture.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] can answer that question.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understand that there is a very full and elaborate report on this subject contained in the general report of the Commissioner. In other respects it is, perhaps, equally important. It is by far the most important report from that Department.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have but a single further remark to make. If the conclusion of the chemist is true, and that shall prove to be a success, the establishment of the Department of Agriculture will prove to be the best investment that this Government has made for a long time.

Mr. PADDOCK. Considering these facts in connection with the fact that during the two years preceding this we published the same number of this report, it seems to me that it would be a very improper thing to cut down the number at this time. Certainly, upon the score of economy, we need not dwell quite so particularly at this time, because the country is in a more prosperous state than it was during the two preceding years when this large number was published before, and we are undoubtedly better able this year to publish the same number than we were before. Therefore I should say that it was practicing economy in the wrong direction and at the wrong time.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope this amendment will not prevail. This is about the only thing we can do for the farming community in the way of legislation; and, as has already been said, about one-half of all the business men of this country are farmers, and from them has to come everything that we all depend upon for a living. If we can do a little by way of circulating documents to give information (and this one, I understand, is very full of valuable information for farmers) it will be a thing that will be appreciated by them. While I do not object to the printing of the document that has been alluded to by the Senator from Rhode Island on behalf of the Printing Committee, I would not look at the expense of printing this report to save the money for that purpose or for any other. I hope that this amendment will not prevail, but that the resolution will be passed as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WINDOM. I only rise to say that I am very glad to hear the Senator from Rhode Island inform the Senate that he does not expect his amendment to pass. I hope the Senate will not disappoint him. I think that to commence our economy upon the agriculturists of the country is a very bad place to begin it. I hope it will not be done to-day. Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope this amendment will not prevail. This be done to-day

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to reduce the number to "two hundred thousand."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was stated to be, in line 5, to strike out "two hundred and twenty" and insert "one hundred and thirty;" so as to read:

One hundred and thirty thousand copies for the use of the members of the House

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The remaining amendments are amendments providing for distributing the two hundred thousand.

Mr. ALLISON. They ought to be rejected, of course.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is the number in the amended resolution for the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Forty thousand for the use of the members of the Senate" is the amendment. The original resolution

Mr. ANTHONY. The subsequent amendments fall of course with the main amendment. They were merely adapting the distribution to the reduction of the whole number proposed by the first amend-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I understand the Senate proposes to pass the resolution as it came from the House with 300,000, and the proper distribution accordingly.

Mr. WHYTE. The committee reported these amendments to conform the distribution to the reduction reported. This new distribution the committee recommended on the theory that the number would be reduced from 300,000 to 200,000. Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the reading of the original resolution as it came from the House.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution of the House of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The distribution appears to be very

Mr. ANTHONY. I have an amendment to alter the distribution when these pending amendments are rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the amendments reported by the committee, which the Senator from Rhode Island suggests should fall because the amendment reducing the total number to 200,000 was not agreed to. If there be no objection, it will be considered that these amendments are rejected. The Chair hears no considered that these amendments are rejected. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, having given Senators who are devoted to agriculture an opportunity to air their patriotism, I suppose that if we are to print this large number the Senate wants some proportion of the "swag." The original resolution gives the House 220,000 copies and the Senate 50,000. I move to amend by substituting 195,000 for 220,000 for the House, and 75,000 instead of 50,000 for the Senate, leaving the 30,000 for the Commissioner untouched.

Mr. BIAINE. Make it 76,000 for the Senate, and that will be exactly 1,000 arises.

actly 1,000 apiece. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. ANTHONY. At the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, I will modify the amendment so as to read "194,000 for the House and 76,000 for the Senate," leaving the 30,000 for the Commissioner.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator from Rhode Island would give the House the whole of them.

Mr. EATON. Let me suggest that 30,000 is a greater number than is necessary for the Commissioner.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, I think the Commissioner makes the best distribution, because he has many correspondents who have no other compensation than a copy of this work.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Commissioner furnishes all the agricultural societies of the country. He has lists, and sends one copy out regularly to each society.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Senator from Rhode Island will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5 it is proposed to strike out "220,000" and insert "194,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 strike out "50" and insert "76," so as to read, "76,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. That will allow a thousand copies to each Senator. The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McPHERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1611) to incorporate the National American Humane Association; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROLLINS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1612) to relieve from taxation certain property in the District of Columbia actually held and used for charitable and benevolent purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1613) to establish post-routes in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. McPHERSON, it was Ordered. That the papers in the case of Sallie A. Palmer be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. INGALLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SAWYER'S IMPROVED CANISTER.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate what has been the action of his Department in adopting Sawyer's improved canister, and his opinion as to the justice of compensating said Sawyer for his invention.

MUTILATION OF A WEST POINT CADET.

Mr. LOGAN. I submit the following resolution for present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate any facts that may be in his possession in reference to the recent mutilation of one of the cadets at West Point.

Mr. EATON. I think that had better go over. There is already an examination as I understand going on in regard to that outrage.

Mr. LOGAN. This is not an investigation; it is merely a call for

Mr. EATON. We shall be very apt to get it when the examination is through.

Mr. LOGAN. I see from reports that are going through the country that it has been at least suggested that this cadet mutilated himself. Now, that is so strange, it strikes me as being so extraordinary, that I should like the Senate to have some information on the subject. Without giving any opinion in regard to it, I only ask that the Secretary of War furnish the Senate with information; and then whatever information is received can be referred to some committee. Afterward, if the committee shall deem proper to ask the Senate to inquire further into the matter, the proper steps will have to be taken. That is the only object I have. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to inquire whether the Senator from Connecticut objects to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EATON. I merely made a suggestion to the Senator from Illi-nois that he had better wait until information came from the proper

Mr. CONKLING. What is the proper source?
Mr. EATON. We know the Secretary of War has not got it yet. We know that at this time there is an examination going on by the authorities at West Point; and therefore it struck me that we had better wait awhile before we ask the Secretary of War for informa-tion which we know now that he does not possess—that he has not

Mr. LOGAN. The Secretary of War is the proper source—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois will please suspend. This discussion is out of order until it is ascertained whether the Senate gives unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to the present consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I rose to suggest to the Senator who offered the resolution whether it would not be well to incorporate in it "so far as may be made public without injustice." If there has been communicated from the Superintendent of the Military Academy or from any quarter information reflecting on the character of this cadet or of any other cadet as mere matter of suspicion, it ought not to be spread before the Senate and before the country prior to an investigation being made. I suggest, therefore, that the resolution should say "so far as, without injustice, in his judgment, the information may be made public."

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that, because that is usual in inquiring of the Department for information. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will hear me I do not think it is usual to address to the head of a Department such a discretion as that. My recollection is that a resolution containing that is always addressed to the President; and is in the form of a request if not incompatible with the public interest in his judgment to furnish the information. But to address the Secretary of War and then leave him to determine whether he chooses to answer, I think the Senator will agree with me on reflection has never been customary. I do not see myself any objection to the resolution as the Senator proposes it; but if he does, it seems to me the better way would be to change it and address it to the President and request him, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate this infor-

Mr. MAXEY. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that it is possible this call may be premature. General Schofield, commanding the department at West Point, has, we learn, ordered a court of inquiry, and that is the usual and ordinary method of investigating a question of this kind. Doubtless that court will fairly and fully investigate the circumstances, and we shall then have an official report, not a mere newspaper report, of all the facts and circumstances so far as they are ascertained by that court; and when that report is received by the Department the Senate can take such action as may be proper.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. HOAR. I do not see any objection in a proper case, although it be not usual—because such proper cases do not often arise—to allowing the head of a Department to withhold facts which, in his judgment, it would be improper to make known. Here is a case of a secret crime of the most gross and odious description, and the authors of it are not yet discovered. Measures are in progress for their discovery. Now, why require every possible fact, or suspicion, or suggestion which may have been communicated through the head of the Department at West Point to the authorities here, to be made public? I do not understand the Senator from Illinois comtemplates for a moment that there shall be made public things that merely raise suspicion about an individual which further examination may show not to be well founded. In regard to this young man the fact of a suspicion against him ought not to be spread abroad unnecessarily. For that reason it has occurred to me that there can be no harm in excepting from the direction such facts as the Secretary may be of opinion justice requires to be withheld from the public.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I did not move an amendment; I only made a sug-

Mr. LOGAN. I have no desire except to get proper information. I am willing to change the resolution and direct it to the President and make the addendum as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, so as to put it in this form: "That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public service;" and then there can be no objection to it.

I wish to say to the Senator from Texas [Mr. Maxey] that the fact that a court of inquiry has been ordered by the commandant at West. Point is unimportant so far as this resolution is concerned. This resolution will not take away from that court any of its qualifications or powers, but will only give us the facts as they are obtained here at the proper Department. I do not know; I am giving no opinion about this matter; but I desire that the Senate may be informed of the facts with a view that if the necessity should arise the Senate may then take such action as they deem proper, if they should deem any action proper at all, for the purpose of making an inquiry in reference to this case.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will give my reasons. A court of inquiry is a legal body acting by authority of law, authorized by law to send for books and persons and papers, to summon witnesses, to make an examination and report; and I to summon witheses, to make an examination and report, and it thought we should get a more satisfactory report of this matter from a court which the law authorizes to make a report. I do not want to interfere in the slightest degree with a full investigation; I only want a reliable report from a legal body, as I think that is.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senate will observe that the only way we shall get the report of the court of inquiry is through a resolution; and this resolution, because that court has been convened, will not by any means prevent us getting the information, nor will it hasten the information; it only paves the way for us to receive the information. I offer the resolution because of the extraordinary character of the dispatches which I have seen. Without reflecting upon any officer or anybody, I must say that these dispatches are extraordinary. The accusation against an individual that he would cut off his own ears is something I have never understood before, except in one instance. I remember once defending a man before a court for mayhem. He was accused of biting off the nose of another party, and I undertook to prove to the jury that the man bit off his own nose, but I did not succeed. [Laughter.] This is the only instance I have ever heard of since that where a man was accused of mutilating himself in this way; and on account of that fact, I desire the information, and that is the

I hope the resolution will pass, because it will not impede any court of inquiry or prevent any action.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rise to ask the adoption of the resolution, not for the purpose of objecting to it. I have for many years looked with wonder upon all graduates from West Point. I have looked upon them as spared monuments of a system of brutality and barbarism, and the wonder is that they have passed through it and are alive in our midst. I have known for years of young men, not colored young men but white young men, who have been driven away from that place of national education by a system of conduct on the part of their fellow-students so disgraceful that I will not attempt its description. I will not attempt its description. tion. I will support any proposition for an investigation. I will assist as far as in my power to create public opinion against such practices, and to humanize and civilize, if not possibly Christianize, West Point. This ought to be done, or the Military Academy ought to be abolished. If this unspeakable and infernal outrage of which we read in the last few days has been perpetrated, there is no length to which this Government ought not to go for the purpose of correcting such abuses, even to the extent of abolishing the institution. If it is impossible to conduct the institution upon civilized and humane principles, it ought to go down. I have attended institutions of learning in my earlier days, and so have other Senators about me. I know that it is possible for young men in large numbers to be assembled together and pursue their studies and yet treat each other as gentlemen. I know that is possible from my own experience. But it seems to me there must be something in this seminary of war on the Hudson River that inspires young men, after their arrival, with a taste for brutality and blood that is perfectly amazing. Whether it is because they are being educated to war with their kind, I do not know. Whether it is the fault of the management there I cannot know. Whether it is the fault of the management there I cannot say. But if there is any sentiment in my heart that is stronger than another it is that of abhorrence for the violence and outrage which have the stronger than another it is that of abhorrence for the violence and outrage which have so long and so often characterized the conduct of the students of West Point.

of West Point.

I take no stock in the idea that this young man cut his own ears. It is absurd, ridiculous. Such a report is part of that system which I have denounced. I favor the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not suppose there is a man living who would be more in favor of the most thorough and complete and searching investigation into this alleged outrage than myself. If the reports in the newspapers be true, it is not only brutal, but it is contemptible and cowardly. There is no courage, there is no bravery in such an act as that. It is absolute cowardice, if the reports be true. The point that I was making and the only suggestion that I made to the act as that. It is absolute cowardice, if the reports be true. The point that I was making, and the only suggestion that I made to the Senator from Illinois, was that Congress has created by law a court for the purpose of making inquiry into matters like this. The court of inquiry has the power to make inquiry into all the facts and circumstances; and when the report of the court of inquiry is made, it is simply reported through the proper channels to the Secretary of War. When that report comes, then we shall have from the Secretary of War something tangible, something definite, instead of wild, floating rumors. That is all there is in it. If we can expedite that, as a matter of course I have no objection in the world, because I desire it understood that I am in favor of investigating this thing to the very bottom, but I believe the law has provided a channel through which we must start in that direction, and that channel I have pointed out.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I hope this resolution will pass, because I want to see the most thorough investigation made and in every possible way.

Just one word in answer to what the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has said in reference to hazing at West Point. After an experience of four years there I can bear witness to the fact that the cadets are no more addicted to that habit than students in other colleges, and cruelties have never to my knowledge been perpetrated to any extent except in an indiscreet, certainly not in a premeditated, way. I have never known but one cadet to be harmed in my life. I never heard of an instance of this kind before, and I am sure I am very anxious as a graduate of that institution to have it investigated, not only by a court of inquiry of which the Senator from Texas speaks, but he compared the court of the co but by every possible means that we can adopt. I shall therefore favor this resolution.

I have felt bound to say that much in answer to the Senator from Indiana, because I did not want it to go abroad from so high a source as that that West Point was worse than other institutions, because it is not. I think this habit of hazing on the part of students at the colleges in the United States ought to be stopped; it is a very bad habit; and we as promoters of the public good and makers of the public laws ought to do everything in our power to stop it.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I indorse every word that the Senator from Indiana has uttered. For three or four days the newspapers have been laden with reports as to the mutilation of this young man at West Point. Now, a theory is being advanced that this young man have been laden with reports as to the mutilation of this young man at West Point. Now, a theory is being advanced that this young man has mutilated himself. If he did, the country ought to know it, and he should be promptly expelled from the institution. But it is asking entirely too much of me when I am called upon to believe that young Whittaker, or any other man under similar circumstances, would thus mutilate himself. To use a very significant cant phrase, this theory is entirely "too thin." We have for several days been engaged very industrially and desired the statement to be him. is entirely "too thin." We have for several days been engaged very industriously, and legitimately, I think, in an attempt to pass a bill which will more effectually civilize and Christianize the Indians. I think the Senate would do well if it would devote a little time to the civilization of West Point. For six or seven years scandalous stories have emanated from that institution relative to the treatment rehave emanated from that institution relative to the treatment received by young men sent there. I know one instance in which a young man voluntarily abandoned the institution because he was unwilling to be subjected to the outrages that obtained therein.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Burnside] says that West Point is not worse than other institutions. I hope it is not; but I fear that West Point has retrograded in some respects, in administration at least, since the Senator left it.

I once said to a young colored man who asked me for my influence to secure him an appointment at this institution, that if he were my enemy, and I desired to inflict a severe punishment upon him, I would send him to West Point. But in cases of this sort it makes no difference whether the cadet is white or colored, and I have not for a moment stopped to consider that phase of the question, and I am glad to see that the Senator from Indiana has not done so. We support this resolution upon higher grounds, and rest it upon considerations of humanity and the good order and efficiency necessary to the administration of this important public trust. The Senate ought to know all the facts in the case, and if any of the parties who belong to the corps of which this young man is a member, or if other persons not connected with the institution are the criminals, the country should know it, and the guilty parties should be promptly and ade-

I do not propose to institute a comparison between this and other institutions of learning as to their methods of administration; I do not know that there are other institutions as vicious in the direction not know that there are other institutions as vicious in the direction under discussion as West Point; but I do know that we are more directly connected with the control of this, a Government and national institution, than of any other of similar character in the country, and that public opinion holds us responsible for the conduct of its affairs. It is hard to conceive that such excesses as have sometimes occurred at West Point, in the matter of hazing and other irregularities and personal indignities, could happen in a military institute with its exact and stringent discipline, unless there was a vice somewhere in the methods of governing the institution, and I believe this investigation will have a healthy influence upon the officers charged with the administration and control of West Point.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not think this case ought to be confounded, as the Senator from Indiana seems to confound it, with the ordinary cases of hazing which has existed, as we all know, in all our ordinary cases of hazing which has existed, as we all know, in all our large colleges, and which has existed in West Point in the past. That brutal system came so us by lawful inheritance from the English schools. I suppose there are few illustrations of savage brutality to be found in the practices of civilized nations greater than those furnished by the brutalities practiced in former generations, and in some respects at present, by English boys upon one another in their great public schools. That occurs in the first year, not in the third year, in our colleges. The good sense of our young men, the efforts of interests the fact that occurs are respectively. structors, the fact that boys now enter college at a more advanced age than formerly, are largely curing that abuse in many institutions of education, but the treatment of the colored pupils at West Point stands by itself alone. The colored boys who have entered West Point have been subjected to a course of treatment there which, if it cannot be put a stop to, ought to result in the abolition of the institution itself and the resorting to some other method of educating officers for the service of the Republic.

Now, as a rule, the young men at West Point abstain from outrages of the character which have been alluded to by the Senator from Indiana; but, as a rule, they have indulged until very recently, and perhaps do still indulge, in a course of conduct more cruel than any physical brutality such as has been described. The colored boy who enters West Point, unless the practice of that institution has changed within a year or two is in as complete a solitude from the time he within a year or two, is in as complete a solitude, from the time he enters until his graduation, as Robinson Crusoe was on his desolate island. Everything which the discipline of the institution demands from one soldier to another next him in the ranks is scrupulously performed; but the boy is left absolutely without an associate; nobody speaks to him; nobody calls upon him at his room; nobody affords any sympathy to him in sickness or in sorrow. When he enters the recitation or the examination room and takes his seat on a bench, that bench is left vacant. Who would not rather have his son fight his way through a dozen such attempts at hazing as have been described than spend four years of his life, of the sensitive period of growing boyhood, in such a solitude as that i

I suppose that centuries ago, when the pride of rank and of caste existed among the civilized countries of Europe, something like that existed among the civilized countries of Europe, something like that might have happened in the case of a boy of poor and humble origin who had gone into a university which had been appropriated to the children of the rich; but the manly feeling of boyhood and the example and instruction of the men in charge of the institutions, the teachers, have long since cured all that, and I suppose any English or American boy would consider it the basest thing he could do to treat in that way any other boy on account of humbleness or poverty of origin; but I am afraid the instructors at West Point have not succeeded, and I am not quite sure that many of them have tried to impress on the classes there that the basest thing they can do is to treat a young colored youth as a person to be exiled from all the sympathies and associations of humanity on account of the color of his skin; and this American Republic, with its four million colored citiskin; and this American Republic, with its four million colored citi-zens equal before the constitution and the law, will grind that institution to powder unless this abuse is cured.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

REFERENCE OF A MESSAGE.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move that the message of the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of January 29, 1880, information in relation to the awards of the mixed commission organized under the treaty of April 25, 1866, between the United States and Venezuela, be referred to the Com mittee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the considera-tion of the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement sub-mitted by the confederated bands of the Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. Dawes, to insert, in section 1, line 14, after the words "to wit," the following:

Provided, That the President may in his discretion appropriate an amount thereof, not exceeding $10,000, for the education, in schools established beyond the limits of the land selected, of such youths of both sexes as in his judgment may be best qualified to make proficiency in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their self-support, and.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I shall make no apology for occupying the time of the Senate in briefly discussing the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Any measure which involves the political and social existence of a people deserves the earnest consideration of both the statesman and the philanthropist. There is nothing political and nothing sectional involved in this piece of legislation, and yet I venture to say that upon no question ever brought before the American Senate has there been so much cheap philanthropy and cheap rhetoric as upon the so-called Indian problem. The woodland tales of Cooper, the unerring rifle of Deerslayer, the heroism of the Huron chief, and Longfellow's sweet song of Hiawatha and "the shining water," have so enchanted the eastern press and pulpit that they profess to believe that the people on the border are principally occupied in first robbing the Indians and then murdering them.

Sir, I do not complain; it is a part of the selfishness of human nature for those "to jest at scars who never felt a wound." The last three generations in New England have had no Indian war, and they view this question by the light of the domestic lamp, not by that of the burning home. With us in the West it is a living, practical, real question. It comes to us by day and is with us by night; and it is time that this Government should meet and grapple with the greatest question that has ever come before it in the present century, and end it. I say, sir, that the northern press and pulpit are filled with gush and sentimentalism on this Indian question. I have before me a pamphlet issued in the State of Massachusetts, over the signature of Governor Long of that State, upon the Ponca question and the Indian problem generally, and in that report the whole result of this great question is summed by the committee appointed by the governor as Removal of tribes unlawfully; permitted encroachments of settlers upon the lands belonging to the Indians; violation of solemn treaties; non-payment of funds belonging to the Indians; neglect in providing schools, as promised; starving the Indians; holding whole tribes responsible for the crimes of a few; threatening them with war, and starving innocent women and children, if the guilty persons will not give themselves up to be hung; in fact, all the abominable, atrocious, and revolting crimes that a stronger power can perpetrate upon a weaker one.

I have read this pamphlet, emanating from that great State, from one end to the other, and in it is not one syllable, not one single expression that does not condemn the white race upon this continent, and declare the Indians in every instance the innocent party. And, sir, not content with this they quote with approbation a slander upon the Congress of the United States, and send it to the country charging us with malignity and hostility to the entire Indian race. Let me read:

It is to be regretted that a more favorable sentiment toward the Indian Department does not prevail in Congress. But as Congress is the outgrowth of public sentiment, we must infer that public sentiment demands, or it would not sustain, their unfavorable action. So long as the Indian question remains without advocates other than those in the pulpit or in the Indian service, we have little to hope for in the way of favorable action or friendly sentiment in Congress. The moralist, the philanthropist, and Christian may cordially unite in their sentiments of friendship for these degraded wards of the nation; the missionary societies may drain their contribution-boxes, and their missionaries themselves may prosecute their self-sacrificing labor in vain, while the politician in the halls of Congress carries his dislike for the unfortunate Indian into the treatment of the Government having charge of this unprofitable matter.

If this hostility exists in the hells of Congress where is it seen.

If this hostility exists in the halls of Congress, where is it seen; where is it felt? Look at the bill now pending before the Senate of the United States; the principal objection made to it by its opponents is that it suffers the guilty to escape. I charge here to-day that the Ute Indians deliberately for months before prepared for this outbreak of hostilities, and burned the grass between the Union Pacific Railroad and their reservation to prevent the advance of troops, and before they murdered the agent and the agency employés three packages of Winchester rifles had been secured by them. General Merritt reports that from one Indian engaged in the White River massacre was captured the enormous amount of twelve thousand rounds of fixed ammunition. And yet these Indians to-day are to receive from the bounty of 'he Government increased annuities and to be removed to a more favorable reservation. This is the hostility of the Government! This is what New England denounces as the savage feeling of the western people and their representatives to these unfortunate wards of the nation!

Sir, I say in all kindness these gentlemen should read the history of their own fathers; they should read of that first raid on Indian territory made by the so-called Pilgrim Fathers, when they came to the shores of New England uninvited and unexpected. They resolved "first, that the earth with the fullness thereof belongs to the saints, and, second, that we are the saints." Sir, if they propose now to carry out their philanthropy as they proclaim it from the lecture-rooms of Boston, in the name of justice let it be carried to the full extent. If we propose to do complete justice, let us give back this continent to its original owners, or let us impanel a jury of nations and assess the damages and pay them to lineal descendants of the people we have wronged.

I hardly think either political party will adopt such an issue in the coming campaign, for not even the ex-President, before whom, as we have heard in this Chamber, an entire continent uncovered, could successfully carry this debt through the nominating convention.

Mr. President, this is not a question for namby-pamby sentiment nor for lecture-room gush. It is a practical, real question worthy of the earnest consideration of practical and sensible men. What is to be the fate of the three hundred thousand, the remnant of the people who once owned this vast domain? According to the report of Mr. Walker, former Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and much the most intelligent incumbent of that office, there are to-day, or were a few years ago, a little over three hundred thousand Indians within the jurisdiction of the United States, one hundred and twenty-five thousand half-civilized, ninety-eight thousand completely civilized, and seventy-eight thousand wholly barbarous. We have, then, these three classes of this unfortunate race with whom to deal, and the question before the country now is, not as to the wrongs done their fathers, not as to the history of outrages which have been committed, but what shall be done with this people.

When the sentimentalists of New England desire to go back and moralize on the condition of the past, let them read the history of other nations and content themselves with their abstractions, for they are but abstractions at best. I say it in no unkindness and with no desire to put any badge of inferiority on the Indian race, but in all animated nature the rule prevails of the survival of the fittest; in all history it has been so and will be so to the end. The very volume on the pulpits of the East, when preacher and congregation gush in sentimentality over the wrongs of the Indian, contains that wonderful history of the forty years' pilgrimage by the chosen people of God, in which, under His immediate direction, they seized territory after territory and exterminated the inhabitants, smiting them hip and thigh, even to the destruction of men, women, and children. It has been so and will be so unto the end of time. The superior race, under the expansive force of civilization, will push aside the inferior. The Roman people had dominion over the then known world; but they fell before the superior force of the nations of the north. The Norman overcame the Saxon, who had before that driven out the Celts and the Picts, and when our fathers landed upon this continent the wave of civilization commenced rolling westward until it struck the shores of the Pacific Ocean. As well cope with the silent but irresistible forces of nature as with the expansion that comes from the superiority of blood and of race.

Mr. President, without extended résumé of the Indian question and its history, I propose to notice hurriedly the action of the Congress of the United States since the formation of the Government.

During the revolutionary war, very naturally and properly dreading the scalping-knife and the tomahawk of the savage, when invoked to the assistance of our British adversaries notwithstanding the appeals of Lord Chatham and other great statesmen, our fathers sought the friendship and attempted in every way to conciliate the Indian tribes then occupying the territory west of the Alleghanies, and extending from the great lakes of the North to the Gulf of Mexico on the south. We find in the annals of the Continental Congress an appropriation of forty thousand pounds sterling to purchase goods with the view to open and maintain an amicable trade with the Indian tribes. We find a resolution inviting the Indian tribes to send their youth to Dartmouth and Princeton and other colleges then existing in the Colonies. When the war of the Revolution had terminated, when Independence had been declared, and the fundamental articles of association came to be agreed upon, the policy in regard to the Indian tribes was materially and essentially altered.

In the Federal Constitution there is inserted a clause which remains to this day:

The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

It required no decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to show that these Indian tribes were not foreign nations and were not States. When the Supreme Court afterward, in the case of the Cherokee Nation against The State of Georgia, decided that under the judiciary clause and under the treaty clause of the Constitution the Cherokee Nation was not a State and was not a foreign nation, they simply followed out the irresistible construction of the original clause placed in the Federal Constitution. "The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce" with three classes of nationalities, or rather with three sorts of organizations; first "with foreign nations." If Indian tribes had been included within "foreign nations," then "Indian tribes" would not have afterward been mentioned by the framers of the Constitution. First "with foreign nations," next "among the several States," and if they had been included in the term "States" they would not have afterward been mentioned in this clause; but to show that they were included in neither, to show that they occupied a position widely different, to show that they were not States, that they were not foreign nations, that they were, to use the language of the Supreme Court, dependent provinces, wards of the nation, they added to the other two clauses "with the Indian tribes;" so as to make the clause read:

That clause has been construed by the Supreme Court, and it shows, with great deference to that august tribunal, how the judiciary become imbued with the necessities and interests and prejudices of the people; and while they may be perfectly pure—and I make no charge as to the purity of the Supreme Court of the United States in any regard—while they may be perfectly pure and learned in the law, they still, like all men, partake of the prejudices, feelings, and passions and interests of the age. In construing this clause of the Constitution, the Supreme Court of the United States says, 1 McLean, page 254, in the case of The United States vs. Cisna:

Commerce with foreign nations and among the several States can mean nothing more than intercourse with those nations and among those States for the purposes of trade, be the object of the trade what it may; and this intercourse must include all the means by which it can be carried on, whether by the free navigation of the waters of the several States or by a passage overland through the several States, when such passage becomes necessary to the commercial intercourse between the States.

This clause in the Constitution applied also to the Indian tribes; but construing that part of the clause in regard to Indian tribes or nations, the same court says:

Under the power to regulate commerce for the Indian tribes Congress has power to prohibit all intercourse with them except under license.

In 1790, a year after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, in my judgment, the great mistake was instituted and has been since perfected under which we have come to our present position, with the status of the Indian unknown and undefined, and all the evils of an erroneous system pressing upon us. We have attempted to civilize the Indian, and yet have excluded him from civilization. We have put around him all the barriers which law and force could put about any people. We have excluded him from contact with civilization and Christianity; we have placed him under the power of corrupt agents, or else under the power of men who know nothing of the Indian and nothing of the necessities of his practical life. This poor mundered man Meeker lost his life heaves he know nothing of poor murdered man, Meeker, lost his life because he knew nothing of the Indian character. He was a partner at one time in the enterprise which established the town of Greeley on the plains, and went West, his heart swelling with philanthropy. He went with the Bible and the doctrine of the New Testament to a people in whose hearts rankled malice, vindictiveness, and death to every white man, and who sited mance, vindictiveness, and death to every white man, and who can be restrained only by force and by fear.

Sir, the last recorded syllable from Meeker was an epitome of the history of all this terrible Indian war. A few weeks before his death he was assaulted by Johnson, one of the Indian chiefs. He was beaten, mangled, and but for the interference of the whites at the agency, his death would then have occurred instead of a few weeks after. Carried to his bed, he then reviewed his life. He looked back when all that he had dear. He had left the situ of New York he upon all that he had done. He had left the city of New York; he had left his employment on the New York Tribune, and gone as a large-hearted but mistaken man into a country for which he was not fitted, gone to a people whom he did not understand, gone with the best intentions, and under the mistaken notion that the Indians could be controlled by absolute kindness without the application of force at all. When he undertook to make their children attend school; when he tried to teach them the arts of agricultural life, they turned upon him like a tiger upon his keeper and destroyed him. Here is what he said to a citizen of Kansas City, Colonel Steele, a gentleman whom I know very well.

I came to this agency in the full belief that I could civilize these Utes, that I could teach them to work and become self-supporting—

Ah, sir, that is the dream of the philanthropist; that is the dream of the lecturer at the lyceum; that is the pathetic appeal of the preacher in the pulpit of the East—that I could teach them to work and here.

preacher in the pulpit of the East—that I could teach them to work and become self-supporting. I thought that I could etaalblish schools and interest both Indians and their children in learning. I have given my best efforts to this end, always treating them kindly, but firmly. They have eaten at my table, and received continued kindness from my wife and daughter, and all the employés about the agency. Their complaints have been heard patiently, and all reasonable requests have been granted them, and now, the man for whom I have done the most, for whom I have built the only Indian house on the reservation, and who has frequently eaten at my table, has turned on me without the slightest provocation, and would have killed me but for the white laborers who got me away. No Indian raised his hand to prevent the outrage, and those who had received continued kindness from myself and family stood around and laughed at the brutal assault. They are an unreliable and treacherous race.

He found it out on the eye of death. His death was the most hor-

He found it out on the eve of death. His death was the most horrible known, even in uncivilized warfare—butchered in the presence of his wife and daughter—when he knew that the same hands that were then reeking in his blood would tear from that wife and daughter the jewel that makes womanhood and life alone desirable. Sir, I have frequently thought that the great mistake made by such men as Meeker, made by men who go among the Indians with the best motives, is that they know nothing about the Indian character. They do not appreciate the fact that the motives which apply to the white race apply not to them. They do not understand in a state such as the Indians occupy on the plains that you might as well carry the Bible to the wild beasts in the jungles of Africa, you might as well preach to a hyena as undertake to teach them that the doctrine of the New Testament is the code given by God to man under which he must live

From 1790, after the adoption of the Constitution of 1789, which, I say, was the commencement of this system of non-intercourse with the Indians, falsely called the Indian intercourse laws, by which we shut them up, put them under an agent, prohibited them from trade, took away from them all individual responsibility, merged their existence in the tribal relation—from that time down to this we have succeeded most admirably in perfecting a system, false in theory, ruinous in practice, which can have only one solution—the utter extermination of the Indian race—I say deliberately, the extinction of the Indian race from the face of this continent.

the Indian race from the face of this continent.

I approve most cordially that sentiment of General Grant given in his first message to the American people, when he said that the extermination of any race by the people of the United States would bring down upon us justly the execration of all christendom. It is an idea too horrible to contemplate; it is an idea which no intelligent and civilized human being can for a moment contemplate without a shudder. What must we do? We must abandon this system inaugurated in 1789 and perfected in legislation down to 1871.

I shall not detain the Senate at any unnecessary length, but the history of this legislation is instructive and interesting. On the 22d of July, 1790, an act was passed by Congress establishing a line between the Indian country and that of the whites, no trade with the Indians except by license, no sale of lands to be valid unless ratified by the Government; merchandise, if found without license in the Indians except by license, no sale of lands to be valid unless ratified by the Government; merchandise, if found without license in the Indian country, to be forfeited absolutely to the Government. The Indian country, then being west of Cleveland and extending from the great lakes of the North to the Gulf on the south, was hermetically closed to civilization except by communication with the British on the north or the Spaniards on the south.

November 19, 1794, the English were permitted to trade with the Indian tribes and in August 1705.

November 19, 1794, the English were permitted to trade with the Indian tribes, and in August, 1795, a treaty was made at Greenville with the tribes of the Northwest, which prohibited trade with all except citizens of the United States. The English finding then that the great and valuable fur trade of the Northwest was to be taken from them, and a monopoly put into the hands of American merchants, complained, and the result was that the Government of the United States, May 4, 1796, added an explanatory article to the treaty of 1794, which again gave English subjects the right to trade with the Indian tribes.

April 19, 1796, the President of the United States was authorized to establish trading posts, and the Government furnished $150,000, to carry on, as the act expressed it, "a liberal trade with the Indians." A clause was added in 1806 that the agent should sell all goods sent to him by the Government, but he was prohibited from taking in ex-to him by the Government, but he was prohibited from taking in ex-

to him by the Government, but he was prohibited from taking in exchange anything but furs and peltries.

April 29, 1816, Congress again, after the close of the war of 1812 in which the Indians sided with the British, prohibited all trading by Indians except with American citizens. On March 3, 1847, all executory contracts for the payment of money or for goods made with the Indians were declared to be absolutely void.

All these provisions, which erected a Chinese wall around the Indians of the United States excluding them from all correct with the dians of the United States, excluding them from all contact with the white race, excluding them from all civilization—all these provisions were incorporated in what are called the Indian intercourse laws of 1834, and those laws to-day remain on the statute-book unrepealed. Out of three hundred and eighty treaties—I have examined them all—made by the Indians with the United States there is but one solitary treaty in all of them that gives the Indians the right to go off their reservations and have any contact with the white people of this country, and that is the Cherokee and Chickasaw treaty of 1866 which gave to those two tribes the right to carry their products out of the Indian Territory and sell them to the citizens of the adjoining States:

In three hundred and eighty treaties we have specially refused to the Indian the right to individual commerce and individual responsibility; we have made him a child; we have kept him a ward yet we hold up our hands in holy horror at the idea that he has not further advanced in civilization and become self-supporting. The whole system is vicious and wrong. It is alien to the spirit of our institutions; it is false to all the ideas which go to make up the happiness and the material prosperity of the human race. And in addition to that we have allowed these Indians to hold their land in common under a superstition of their own; for, as they told the Committee on Territories in the consideration of the Oklahoma bill, they believed that the earth was their mother, and they did not propose to scar her bosom with boundary lines. That is the Indian idea in regard to the tenure of land; and for that reason they told us then they proposed to hold their lands for all time to come in common; thus destroying the idea of home, of individual possession, and making them nomadic to the end of time. No kind of civilization can exist in a nomadic state of society.

The progress of industry, of the arts, of science and literature, goes with the idea of home. The Christian religion teaches us that heaven is to all its believers at last a home, and the sweetest ballad in the English language, that which touches the traveler above all others by sea and land, is "Home, Sweet Home." The old English law says it is the poor man's castle. And yet these Indians have no home. We move them from reservation to reservation. They know that they need not work and accumulate the comforts that make home desirable. They know that in a few years they will be taken away from it by the strong arm of the Government and carried off to other and distant reservations. They are nomads by the force of law. We have made them wanderers on the face of the earth; we have done away with the charms of domestic life; we have said to them, "You need not protect wife or children; you need not build up around you the comforts of the domestic hearth, because you do not own it; it belongs to your tribe, and not to you."

Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss at any great length the political status of the Indian now before the law. I am very well, aware that learned gentlemen, whose opinions I should antagonize with the greatest diffidence, hold that under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution the Indian now is a citizen of the United States. I modestly disagree with them. I have great regard for the opinions of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. Morgan,] who has expressed that view openly in the Senate. I do not believe that the fourteenth amendment has made the Indian a citizen of the United States. I wish it had.

In my judgment, citizenship, tenure of lands in severalty, smaller reservations, turning over the wild blanket Indians to the War Department, is the solution of the Indian problem, and there can be no other. Whether a citizen or not, whether he has around him the ægis of American citizenship or not, one thing is unquestionable: the Indian, if not a citizen, if he is simply a denizen, if he is simply a ward of the nation, is still under the jurisdiction of the United States and in some degree amenable to its laws. We have established over the Indian Territory the jurisdiction of the district court for the western district of Arkansas. A statute which has been read here provides that upon Indian reservations crimes against a white man shall be punished as in those places, arsenals, dock-yards, and forts, under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States Government. He is then partially under the protection of the law, amenable to it; and yet most remarkable—and I call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact—most remarkable in this Christian and civilized land, where the telephone whispers from one State to another, here where we have seized the lightning from heaven and chained it for commercial purposes, here with the broad light and blaze of a civilization such as the patriarchs of old never dreamed of, in this country, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and the present status of the law, any Indian tribe may erect again the stake upon a reservation, may take an Indian prisoner, torture him to death, put fagots around him, put blazing splinters in his flesh, may tomahawk him, and the arm of this Government can never touch one single man engaged in that cruel process!

The law now in the United States of America under the decision of

The law now in the United States of America under the decision of the Supreme Court is such that you cannot arrest an Indian for any crime perpetrated against another Indian upon a reservation. He is to be tried according to the traditions and usages of his tribe, and not according to your law. If these Utes had seized an Arapahoe, had seized a Cheyenne or a Sioux, and, upon their reservation in the mountains, driven a stake and put him to death according to their usages, there is no law in this country that could have rescued the Indian or brought the criminals to justice. I assert this as a lawyer from my place in the Senate, and I say it is a burning shame upon the civilization of this age and upon our so-called philanthropy and justice. We call these people our wards; we say that we are responsible for their condition; we say that we propose to civilize and Christianize them, and yet our jurisprudence is such that they can do as they please to one another and we cannot interfere. I do not propose to make a statement like this without reading the decision of the Supreme Court which establishes the fact. In ninety-fourth United States Reports the Supreme Court decided as follows:

These Indian tribes are semi-independent tribes whom our Government has always recognized as exempt from our laws, whether within or without the limits of an organized State or Territory, and in regard to their domestic government left to their own rules and traditions; in whom we have recognized the capacity to make treaties and with whom the government, State and National, deal, with a few exceptions, only in their tribal or national character, not as individuals.

If that be law—and it is unquestionably—there is no statute of the United States under which any Indian is amenable for his conduct with regard to another Indian. Even among the civilized tribes of the Indian Territory to-day, as to all offenses committed by one Indian against another, whether he belongs to the same tribe or not, they are amenable alone to their own traditions, to their own usages. No law of the United States can enter and effect their arrest.

Mr. President, I shall support the bill now before the Senate, not because it goes as far as I would have the legislation of Congress go in regard to this race, but because it tends in that direction which I believe can alone bring these people to civilization and solve this great question. As I have intimated in the few remarks I have made, I believe that tenure in severalty is the first great step to settling the Indian question now before the country. I believe until the tribal relations are dissolved, until the Indian is taught his individual responsibility, until he is taught to look to the Government of the United States for protection and for punishment, there can be no solution of this terrible problem. So long as he looks to his chieftain and not to the Government, so long as he clings to the traditions and superstitions of barbarism, just so long you may treat, you may beg, you may threaten, and it falls upon deaf and unwilling ears. Sir, Ispeak of what I know when I declare that every western man who has seen the Indians and mixed with them will testify that the wild blanket Indian of the plains knows no law except superior force and superior authority. All that he cares for is the pleasure of the chase and of war. The chase has disappeared with the destruction of the buffalo. He is fed now by the Government, and what is the result? They go to the agencies, receive the bounty of the Government, and the young braves then leave the old women and men and children under the protection of the United States flag, spring upon their horses, and gallop off with long-range rifles, purchased with the goods issued by the Government, to join some chieftain then upon the war-path. They are called upon the plains "dog-warriors," the most savage, the most relentless, the most bloody of all the organizations that have been known in western warfare.

Some Senator spoke here of attacking Indians like attacking a bumble-bees' nest. He never tried it. Sir, they are the finest cavalrymen that were ever mounted upon horses, and the most fearless, not excepting the Mamelukes who swept and circled like eagles around the serried columns of Nanoleon at the foot of the Pyramids.

cepting the Mamelukes who swept and circled like eagles around the serried columns of Napoleon at the foot of the Pyramids.

The Sioux, the Arapahoes, the Comanches, the Cheyennes, I assert here to-day are warriors worthy any foeman's steel in any country and in any clime. These warriors lived once by the chase and live now by war. They are armed to-day with long-range rifles, purchased with the proceeds of the blankets and the bacon issued to them by the Interior Department of the United States. So soon as they are armed, so soon as they receive this fixed ammunition, I repeat, they go upon the war-path until the next distribution day, when they come back to the agency and provide themselves again with the munitions of war.

Mr. President, force is the only argument to the savages of the plains. I speak now of the seventy-eight thousand who are barbarians, who are in open hostility to the Government, who have no land, who are roaming from north to south, who are not inside of reservations, for they have none, but roam over the whole extensive plains of the Northwest, and make war not only for pastime but for livelihood.

A few days since, while on a visit to my State, I conversed with Governor Fletcher, president of the commission appointed a few years since to visit the Indians of the plains. He related to me an interview he had with Sitting Bull, the father of the present chief. He said that he traveled three hundred miles with him, and that Sitting Bull told him the great trouble with his young men and with the Indians of his tribe was that they could not realize the power of the United States Government. He said, through his interpreter: "We see a troop of cavalry, or we see a company of infantry, and my braves believe that the whole military force of the Government. When I was called to Washington lately" (using my own language, but expressing his idea) "I promised my young men that I would take a willow stick and cut a notch for every lodge of the white men, and bring it back and show them. Before I got to Omaha the stick was notched clear through on both sides and I threw it away. When I went back and they asked me for the notches I told them if I should ent every willow wand upon the Missouri River and notch them to show the lodges of the white people, there were so many that these willow wands would have been exhausted," and one young brave immediately rose in the council, with a look of incredulity and contempt: "Ah," said he, "Sitting Bull has seen the Great Father; he has got a fine gun and a medal."

They do not believe, they do not realize the power of the Government. They have seen, as I said, only a small portion of our military force, and the result is they go on the war-path incredulous as to the consequences, believing that the Government is not able to enforce its demands, much less its threats.

I have said that I would support this bill because it takes one step in the right direction; it gives these Indians a tenure of their lands in severalty. It does away with that iniquitous system which is antagonistic to all ideas of civilization, the tenure of land in commen. While I would defer with the greatest pleasure to the opinion and the wishes of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] until he offers me something better, until he produces before the Senate some measure which goes further than the bill now under consideration, I am compelled by the sentiments and opinions I hold upon this question to vote in favor of this measure. I recognize the fact, as does my friend from South Carolina, that sooner or later this Gordian knot must be cut, and cut effectually. I know that this is simply a first step in that direction. I am not willing as a Senator of the United States to take upon myself the responsibility of an Indian war which in horror, in devastation, may exceed any of the terrible atrocities that these people have perpetrated in the past.

The Ute Indians are a warlike and savage race. They have shown

The Ute Indians are a warlike and savage race. They have shown by the White River massacre what they can do if organized and determined to resist to the last man. What is an Indian war, Mr. President? It is the greatest horror, the greatest misfortune, the most terrible calamity that can come upon the border States. Any amount of money, any amount of expenditures, compared with the loss of lives and the terrible atrocities that are committed would be nothing.

The commission of 1868, upon which was John B. Henderson, formerly a Senator from my State, (I believe General Sherman was president of the commission, and General Augur served on it,) made a report in regard to the Cheyenne war of 1864, and I read briefly from it:

You will not be astonished that a war ensued which cost the Government $30,000,000, and carried conflagration and death to the border settlements. During the spring and summer of 1865 no less than eight thousand troops were withdrawn from the effective force engaged in suppressing the rebellion to meet this Indian war. The result of the year's campaign satisfied all reasonable men that war with Indians was useless and expensive. Fifteen or twenty Indians had been killed, at an expense of more than a million dollars apiece, while hundreds of our soldiers had lost their lives; many of our border settlers had been butchered, and much property destroyed.

Thirty million dollars expended and twenty Indians killed! Sir, to-day the war with the Utes would be raging if it had not been that winter put an end to it, and nothing else. They had prepared for war. They had burned the grass between the railroads and their reservation; they had purchased three cases of Winchester rifles; they had hundreds of thousands of rounds of fixed ammunition for long-range guns; but the White River massacre brought down upon them swift vengeance.

Thornburgh advanced and was first attacked by them. They massacred Lieutenant Weir and a companion with him three or four days after the White River massacre. These Indians were prepared for war, and but for the fact that the grass was gone, that their ponies were unable to stand the campaign, and they were compelled to give were unable to stand the campaign, and they were compelled to give up the idea of hostilities until spring, they would to-day be engaged in a hand-to-hand struggle with the soldiers of the United States.

Are we to take the chance of a war like that? Are we to say to the civilized world that while we may prevent this by adopting an expedient, while we may avert it even temporarily, we are willing to take the responsibility of saying, "Let the war come; let it be precipitated; let the people of Colorado, with the soldiers of the United States, go into the Ute country and exterminate these four thousand savages, the innocent and the guilty—for some of them are innocent—wipe them from the face of the earth and add another langel to the military glory of the United States?"

Sir, I have my opinions, and I have expressed them in regard to the treatment of the Indians. I repeat again, I would put the seventy-eight thousand blanket Indians of the plains under the War Department of the Indians of the plains under the War Department of the Indians of the plains under the War Department of the Indians of the plains under the War Department of the Indians of the plains under the War Department of the Indians of the plains under the War Department of the Indians of the plains under the War Department of the Indians of eight mousand blanket indians of the phans under the war Department. I would take their ponies and guns away from them. They need neither the one nor the other. They need not their guns, because the game has gone. They need not their ponies, because they are not fit for agriculture; they are war ponies, intended for a campaign and not for the purposes of the farm. I would put these Indians under the War Department, and as soon as they showed evidence of even semi-civilization I would put them upon agricultural reservations and keep them there.

Mr. MORGAN. Would the honorable Senator submit an act of Congress to those Indians, it becoming a law only upon their consent, or would he undertake to legislate in the outset for them without con-

Mr. VEST. My choice would be, and has always been, to legislate for them directly; but no such measure is proposed here, and I am prepared to give up my long-cherished opinion, not to say prejudice, rather than take the responsibility of plunging the border States into a strife which I know would inevitably ensue.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say that my objection to this measure is that all its provisions, except the selection of the commissioners and their salaries, depends entirely upon the consent of the Indians, and that the act cannot become operative in any respect whatsoever until three-fourths of those Indians have consented that it shall become a law.

Mr. VEST. That is a provision in the treaty between the Government and the Utes, as I understand, and the committee have kept inside of it. Let me say that I accept the result of the report of the committee the more cheerfully because I appreciate the difficulty of treating with this Indian question. I have had some experience in the last few months in attempting to frame a bill under the instructions of the Legislature of my State in regard to the Oklahoma Territory. I have been slandered, traduced, vilified in every direction, accused of attempting to violate treaties, while I know that my sincere desire has been to be just to the Indians and to save for them a portion of the vast inheritance which they once owned.

We are told that every step taken by the Congress of the United States is against the Indians. Such pamphlets as I have read here are sedulously distributed through the country, stating that the Congress of the United States is inimical to the Indians, that we propose to strike them down and take from them their land and despoil them of all their possessions. The Committee on Indian Affairs, like the Committee on Territories, have labored earnestly, faithfully, consci-Mr. VEST. That is a provision in the treaty between the Govern-

Committee on Territories, have labored earnestly, faithfully, conscientiously to keep inside of the treaties and at the same time relieve the country from a terrible Indian war, in which there is much expendthe country from a terrible Indian war, in which there is much expenditure of blood and treasure and no glory to be gained for the armies of a great nation. I accept the result of their deliberations because nothing else is offered to me. I am not willing to give my vote that the Indians shall stay there until the people of Colorado, justly imbittered by the atrocities they have committed, shall have gone upon that reservation, assisted by the troops of the United States, and killed these Indians or driven them into the fastnesses of the mountains, and a miserable remnant shall be carried off to some unknown reservation, a standing monument to the imbecility of legislation on the part of the National Congress.

I know and feel, I repeat, that the question at some time or other

I know and feel, I repeat, that the question at some time or other must receive an heroic solution. I know that the Gordian knot must be cut by the legislation of the Congress of the United States, but I am not prepared now, until a general bill shall be introduced, until the deliberation is had which this great question demands and deserves at the hands of the representatives of the people, to say to the people of Colorado and to the Ute Indians: "Take this issue and people of Colorado and to the Ute Indians: "Take this issue and fight it out; fight it out until this tribe is exterminated, until the national Treasury is almost depleted; until the Indians are driven back into the fastnesses of the mountains with their wives and children around them." A great nation of fifty millions of people, with military prestige as the first among the nations of the earth, can afford to say to these miserable savages, "We will not exterminate you, because it would derogate from our national character."

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what we are going to do if these Ute Indians refuse to ratify the bill and the

Mr. VEST. If they refuse it, then I should be in favor of trying some other alternative to avert a war, to prevent hostilities, and I should continue to try some expedient until a peaceful solution of this question was arrived at. I declare here to-day, most solemnly, that I know of no calamity that can befall the people of the West, and expenielly, the results of Colorado, greater than a war of exterand especially the people of Colorado, greater than a war of exterand especially the people of Colorado, greater than a war of extermination with these Ute Indians or any other tribe. There is no glory to be gained. We have come out of a great war among ourselves, establishing beyond question the fact that the United States Government is the greatest military power of the civilized world. Cannot we afford to be magnanimous to this miserable remnant, a handful of savages in the gorges of the Rocky Mountains? Cannot we afford to say to them, "We know the wrongs that have been inflicted upon you; we know your barbarous condition; we know the prejudices that surround you; we know that you are savages; we say to you we do not want to exterminate you; we propose to take you and deal with you as children, as we have been doing for a hundred years."

If we had not these miserable non-intercourse laws; if they were placed upon their own individual responsibility; if they had been in the free sunlight of civilization, knowing what they did and fully responsible for all their acts, I would say, in the face of the outrages they have committed at White River, "Exterminate them; let not a single man be left in that whole tribe." But are they fully responsible? They are children of a larger growth. We have made them children; we have kept them children. We have taken away their individual responsibility. We have said to them: "You shall not mix with us; you shall not live with us; you shall not sell land or goods; you shall have no home; we will move you when we please and not when you please; we will take you and put you in any portion of our vast domain without consulting you." And when we have done that, because they have been true to their barbarous instincts we take our armies and go among them and exterminate and wipe we take our armies and go among them and exterminate and wipe them from the face of the earth.

My vote shall never do that. I believe the question is between the extermination of the Indians and the division of their lands in severalty. Put them upon reservations, not of ten, fifteen, or twenty million acres, with hunting-grounds attached, for that is an inducement to barbarism, and there is no game in this country now upon the western plains that justifies such an immense reservation, and they are fed by the Government. Put them where they will have from two hundred to three hundred or four hundred acres of land Take from the wild Indians their ponies and long-range rifles, which they have obtained from mercenary white men; take away from them their ammunition, and put them upon a fixed reservation, and when the first war party leaves let the cavalry of the United States follow and cut them to pieces.

That is the heroic but proper treatment; and by that treatment civilization will come. It will come like the morning light slowly across the horizon and afterward mingling and mingling until it blazes like the noontide sun. It will come to these people; how soon we know not; but sooner or later the Indian will be a citizen of the

we know not; but sooner or later the Indian will be a citizen of the United States and the divinity that presides over every home will lead him to a nobler and better future.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in a great deal that has been said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] I very heartily concur. I agree with him that the destiny of the Indians in the future—if they are to have any destiny that is worth while speaking of—and their civilization must depend almost exclusively upon the fact that they are to have and hold lands in severalty and adopt agricultural pursuits. But I understand that while the bill under consideration attempts to provide for something of that sort, it is a totally ineffectual measure and based upon wrong principles. measure and based upon wrong principles.

The bill which the Senate is now considering undertakes to engage these people in a contract, an agreement, and by which they will submit themselves to the control of the laws of the United States to the extent proposed in this enactment. The bill does not assume the extent proposed in this enactment. The bill does not assume the ground or any part of the ground which the honorable Senator from Missouri stated as the basis of his advocacy of the measure. The bill does not assume the authority of the United States to legislate with reference to the Ute tribes, except upon their consent. The bill is confessed by the Senator from Missouri to be a series of expedients, and only of expedients. If the measure brought forward by the committee of the consent of the c mittee were based upon proper legislative grounds, or proper constitutional grounds, or proper economic grounds, I should be prepared to support it, saving and reserving, however, as I am bound to do under my oath to support the Constitution of the United States, the supremacy of their treaty rights as we have engaged that they shall supremacy of their treaty rights as we have engaged that they enjoy them.

This bill, as I observed to the Senator, and as I remarked in the opening speech which I made upon this subject, is not a measure of legislation intended to receive all of its force from the time it gains the signature of the President of the United States; but it is a measure which is made to depend for all its vitality, all of its efficiency, all of its force indeed, upon the consent of these wild and savage bands of Ute Indians that the Senator says he would be prepared to exterminate if they should not ratify the act. I cannot quite comprehend the logic of that argument. I cannot quite appreciate the situation of a race of people to whom you come with an act of Congress, a treaty, an engagement, or an agreement, I care not what you may please to call it, and submit it to their consideration and their you may please to call it, and submit it to their consideration and their adoption, and ask of them that three-fourths of them shall engage in its adoption, and then say to them, as I understand the Senator's argument at least to have said to-day, "if you do not adopt it, we shall then pursue some other expedient with reference to you." What is that next expedient? According to the argument of the Senator, it is to be extermination by the military power of the Government of the United States; pursue them with the cavalry, cut them down, destroy their lodges, drive them as you would the coyotes or the wolves of the prairies to their dens, and there destroy them.

Mr. President, there is a want of logic in this bill; there is a want of consistency in the principles of the bill, against which I have attempted to argue, and it is only because I think that the bill is proceeding upon false premises that I have ever had any opposition to it whatever. If we are going to deal with these Ute Indians in a man-whatever. If we are going to deal with these Ute Indians in a manner through which we expect to control them, through which we expect to avoid war with them, through which we expect to bring about definite consequences as the result of our relations and actions toward them, then, according to the theory that has been advanced, as I understand it, by the committee and by every gentleman who has advocated the bill, we ought to commence with an act of legislation simple and pure, asserting the power and authority of the Government of the United States over these Indians consistent with our treaty obli-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him simply a question right there?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator's main trouble now seems to be that this act is to take effect only upon the assent of the Ute Indians to it. I ask him if there is anything unusual in that; if we do not find in the legislation of every State in this Union laws passed to take effect upon their ratification by the vote of the masses of the people; if the constitution of every State has not been thus adopted; if the Constitution of the United States and all its amendments were not submitted in that manner to the Legislatures of the several States Mr. MORGAN. If we were dealing with white people of the Anglo-Saxon race or any race of people whatsoever who were competent to build up a civilized state, then perhaps there would be some applicability or some suggestion of relevancy and pertinency in the question of the Senator from Kentucky; but we are told that we are dealing with a set of savages, men who have no respect for law, who have no ideas of Christianity, who have no features of civilization even in their own hearts and consciences; and we are asked to adopt the system under which we submit constitutions to the ratification of the people of the States, worthy to be the constituency of great States of this country, and to pursue that sort of a system with reference to the Indians! You might as well go to them with Sunday-school books with the expectation of converting them, by a presentation of the pictures in them, to the Christian religion. They are totally unfit—so says the Senator from Missouri, so says the bill, so says everybody who has had anything to do at all with this discussion—really to judge and determine in reference to the value of a law which is proposed to them for their adoption. It is a very peculiar thing that we should go with a statute in one hand and a bayonet in the other and ask an Indian to adopt the law or take the bayonet in his bosom. That is Mr. MORGAN. If we were dealing with white people of the Anglo-Indian to adopt the law or take the bayonet in his bosom. That is the difficulty in the situation.

You are treating with these Indians as if they were a civilized or even a Christianized people. You are submitting the power and action of Congress under this very bill to the adoption and ratification of a band of Ute Indians, and if they refuse to adopt it by a threefourths majority of all the adult male population of that tribe then your law becomes nil; it is no law at all; it is repealed after it has passed the Congress of the United States by the refusal of a minority amounting to a little more than one-fourth of the savages of the Ute tribe of Indians. That is the difficulty that I find.

Senators have been particularly careful to avoid the use of the senators have been particularly careful to avoid the use of the ordinary expressions by which such a negotiation would be characterized, to exclude the word "treaty" from all their remarks; and once or twice I have noticed that when Senators have dropped the word "treaty" from their tongues they would recall it and make it an "agreement." With due respect to the Senators, it seems to me that that is a mere quibbling upon terms. We are either treating with these people or we are legislating for them. If we are legislating for them, we are the second to the property of them. ing for them we ought to legislate under the power and anthority of the Government of the United States, and not by the consent and advice of the Ute tribe of Indians. They are neither law-makers nor law-acceptors. We legislate in regard to the most important individual rights of men in the United States and the Territories, and we do not ask their acceptance of our laws.

The fallacy of the bill is that you do not make it now and forever and at once a law, and carry it into execution by the powers of the Government. There is the difficulty in the matter. As I suggested in the outset of my remarks, while I am not opposed to the policy of the bill, I am opposed to this principle of legislation; I am opposed to the ground upon which it is based. It is a yielding pro hâc of a power into the hands of the Ute Indians that I contend should not be conceded to the Ute Indians or any tribe of Indians or any part of the people of the United States. We yield them the power to adopt our laws, and yet we turn around and say to them, "We cannot deal our laws, and yet we turn around and say to them, "We cannot dear with you except through law; we cannot deal with you through the treaty-making power—we are cut off from that by our statutes." Gentlemen will not even intimate that this is a treaty; on the contrary, they deny it and say that it is mere legislation. When you make that denial you assert that it is law and nothing but law; and if it be law the bill is fatally defective, because in the enactment of it you do not propose a law but a mere proposition, to become a law when the Ute Indians shall see proper to adopt it. Indians shall see proper to adopt it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will allow me one moment, I ask him how we could make a law to buy their land without providing him how we could make a law to buy their land without providing some means to know whether they would agree to sell it to us or not? Mr. MORGAN. If the purpose is to buy the land, go and make a treaty with them for the acquisition of the land. Pass a law to enable them to make a treaty with you, if it is necessary to do that. Reconfer upon them the treaty-making power, if it is necessary, in order to buy their land, to make a contract with them; but it is not necessary to pass a law to do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We assert that they are not a treaty-making power at all power at all.

Mr. MORGAN. I know you assert that, and yet you treat with them. The objection I have to the measure and to the whole proceeding is that while you assert that they are not a treaty-making ceeding is that while you assert that they are not a treaty-making power, yet you do make a treaty with them. You say to the Ute tribe of Indians, represented by men who are in lawful authority among them, "Come now, three-fourths of you, as a band and as a tribe, and consent to this agreement, and we will make it binding upon every single individual in the whole tribe." If that be not a treaty-making power, I do not know what a treaty-making power is that we have

I say that we have, as the law now stands, no capacity to make a treaty with them. The statute says so. Hence I would deal with these people as I suggested in the opening remarks I made, so far as their common territory is concerned. We having broken down their power and authority as a tribe to hold land in common and to control it in common, I would put the Government of the United States in the stead and place of their tribal authorities, as a trustee, and I would execute in equity and in justice all the benefits and privileges arising to them under the treaty relations that we have hitherto had with them. I would do that; and if it be necessary for the sake of public justice, for the peace and welfare of any community in any State or Territory of the Union, that these Indians should be taken bodily and marched off of their territory, I would then take them and march them hadily off from their territory, I would then the treather than their territory. bodily and marched off of their territory, I would then take them and march them bodily off from their territory; but in doing that I would repeal the treaty. I would not allow it to stand as a treaty, recognized as such and violated in the very act that you attempt to pass. You have got the power to repeal the treaty; you have got the power to revoke it. If you find that it stands in the way of the Government of the United States and the proper exercise of its authority, repeal it, but do not violate it. If these Ute Indians cannot be dealt with in the territory they now occupy under existing treaty regulations, then repeal the treaty by an act of Congress and take charge of them, military charge if you please, and remove them where you will; but do it in pursuance of law, and not in pursuance of treaty; and in undertaking to remove them do not set out by attempting to pass an enactment to become such at the moment that they ratify it and not before.

I do not think there is a Senator who has advocated this bill, or a member of the honorable committee, who can answer the question that I put to the Senator from Missouri: What are you going to do if these Indians refuse to accept your terms? Suppose they turn upon you and say: "At the time you commenced to legislate with reference to this subject you did so upon the hypothesis that you had no right to legislate until we had ratified and confirmed your action; now you turn around and say because we have refused to do this you will now legislate in reference to us." The answer to that proposition on their part would be a very hard one to make by a Senator or a lawyer. When we came to reply to that suggestion on their part, we should be obliged to say that the honorable Committee on Indian Affairs and the Senate of the United States had committed a great blunder when they passed the bill which you have refused to ratify. They held up to you an opportunity to ratify it, when under the Constitution and laws of the United States they had no such power. They made you a part of the legislative system of this country by making a statute to depend upon your ratification; but having done that and your scheme having failed because they rejected it, you turn around and say to them: "This was a blunder and a mistake. We had the power originally; we have always had the power; and now that you have refused and got us into this muss we will exercise the power absolutely in virtue of the Constitution and laws of the United States of America."

We had better take our ground now firmly and properly and pru-dently, upon the safe position which I think has been assumed by dently, upon the safe position which I think has been assumed by the argument of the Senator from Missouri, and by various other gentlemen who have spoken here, and as I understand it is conceded by members of the committee, that to-day, under the existing statutes of the United States and its Constitution, we have a right to legislate in reference to these people, and we had better commence by law-making rather than by undertaking to make bargains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EATON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Dawes.]

DAWES.]

Mr. TELLER. Let it be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 14 of section 1, after the words "to wit," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, appropriate an amount thereof, not exceeding $10,000, for the education, in schools established beyond the limits of the lands selected, of such youths of both sexes as in his judgment may be best qualified to make proficiency in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their self-support, and.

Mr. DAWES called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered Mr. KERNAN. If I understand the amendment it is to appropriate $10,000, to be expended by the President at his discretion, he selecting the Indians and also selecting the place where they are to be educated.

Mr. MORGAN. It is to be taken out of their annuities.

Mr. KERNAN. I think that it at least is not a very good way, to leave the President to select the Indians who and the place where they are to be educated. Their education ought to be placed under some other system, I think, although I am not very familiar with this matter

Mr. MORGAN. There is another provision of the bill, which provides for their education in the Territory where they reside.

Mr. KERNAN. I am not in favor of placing $10,000 at the discre-

Mr. KEKNAN. I am not in layor of placing $10,000 at the discretion of the President in this way.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from New York understands, I trust, that out of the per capita distribution of $120,000 each year this is diverting simply $10,000 of that to these educational purposes. It seems to me to be a very small matter; and it is hardly worth while for us to say that we will not do as much as that for

Perhaps it would not be improper for me to send to the Secretary's desk and have read a letter from an Army officer who has been detailed and put at the head of the school at Carlisle Barracks, where this policy and this kind of education is being pursued toward In-

While I am up, I want to add one word in reference to the remarks that fell from the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Vest.] It is certainly to be regretted that the Senator from Missouri, in making the remarks that he made to the Senate, evincing so much ability and study of the Indian question, and in which there was so much to be com-mended, should have found it necessary, in order to make his remarks more acceptable to the people to whom they are specially addressed, to preface them with the usual sneer and attack upon New England. The Senator commenced a very able and good speech by holding up a pamphlet which he said had issued from the State of Massachusetts, under the authority of the State, and had been prepared by a committee appointed by its governor, and which he said contained a great many things which were false, and was filled with sentimentalism and namby-pambyism; and he then went on directly to prove every word there was in it to be true. No statement in any part of the pamphlet has been so strongly put and so fortified in regard to the policy of this Government toward the Indians as the statement of the Senator himself. The Senator's arraignment of that policy from the days of the Revolution down to this hour is stronger and, if possible, more conclusive than what is contained in the pamphlet itself. He even went further, and said that this long course of wrong and maltreatment of further, and said that this long course of wrong and maltreatment of the Indians and mistake in policy toward them began further back than any of us had alluded to, as far back as the Pequod war, and the treatment of the Indians by our forefathers almost simultaneously with their arrival upon the continent. That is, I am sorry to say, true to some extent, and certainly, whether true or not, it furnishes no ground for the Senator's arraignment of people in Massachusetts because they have seen fit to join with him in condemning the Indian policy of this Government and its treatment of the Indian tribes. The Senator is mistaken in saving that the namphlet was an tribes. The Senator is mistaken in saying that the pamphlet was an official pamphlet from the State of Massachusetts. The same gentleman, whom Massachusetts has made its governor, felt that he did not so far lose his identity as a citizen of Massachusetts as to forbid his taking part as an individual in the examination of these questions, any more than the Senator or myself who are citizens; but that is a small matter and a matter that I care nothing about.

The Senator is in the main right in his view of the Indian policy, and has presented it with singular force. I have only alluded to the manner in which he felt bound to treat others who coincided in the main with him in it, who happened to come from a section of the country toward whom it is the habit of some statesmen to point their arguments with sneers and ridicule. The "sentimentalism" and "namby-pambyism" which the Senator from Missouri has seen fit to "namby-pambyism" which the Senator from Missouri has seen fit to apply to my constituents are not new terms; they are quite used to them. They have heard such things for many years. It used to be the way, and the only way, that Senators and Representatives and other men who differed with them found to answer the arguments they put forth in vindication of the rights of man, wherever born and of whatever color, in this country; and those arguments proved of very little force and answered very little purpose. The great truths contained in that pamphlet, advocated in years back by my constituents, were never refuted by any such attempts at ridicule as the Senator felt instified in indulging in today; and in the remarks which ator felt justified in indulging in to-day; and in the remarks which he subsequently was compelled by the facts to make he presented the same views, but in a form more acceptable to those among whom he lives. I only allude to it to just remind the Senator that he is coming into that kind of argumentation late in the day. It has spent its force; it does not attract attention; it has no sort of effect upon those who know from conviction that man, whether he be a white man, a black man, or a red man, in this country has rights that this great and powerful nation cannot afford to ignore or trample upon.

In reference to this amendment, it is all there is in the bill that will enable the President of the United States to apply to these Indans the benefit of outside schools and give them the practical edu-cation in the industries and in civilization and in self-support and in the personal independence that they so much need, and which will contribute so largely to reaching that end that the Senator from Missouri, I have no doubt sincerely, desires to reach, and all of us desire to reach, when what is left of the Indians shall be self-sustaining, lawabiding, peaceable citizens of the United States, and not this charge upon the Treasury, this constant terror to defenseless frontiersmen, and this constant repetition of outrage and of horror.

I hope, therefore, that the Senate will do this much toward practical education of the Indians, which is to take but just $10,000 out of money which would otherwise be scattered like so many beans among these Indians without any good effect whatever.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am very heartily in sympathy with the object sought by the Senator from Massachusetts, and would be glad if the committee having the bill in charge would feel at liberty to accept it. I do not know whether they will or not; but I think the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts should be amended. It provides solely for the establishment of these industrial schools beyond the limits of the lands selected for the Indians. I am strongly inclined to think that the establishment of industrial schools in connecask the Senator whether he would be willing to accept such an amendment to his proposed amendment as will effect that object.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will excuse me; I did not catch what he said.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask whether the Senator would be willing to accept an amendment, inserting after the word "established" the words "within or;" so as to read:

Provided, That the President may in his discretion appropriate an amount thereof, not exceeding $10,000, for the education in schools established within or beyond the limits of the lands selected, of such youth of both sexes as in his judgment may be best qualified to make proficiency in practical industries and pursuits necessary for their self-support.

Mr. DAWES. I think that would improve the amendment. I can understand how those schools, under certain circumstances, would be better on the reservations than outside of them, and that would leave them entirely in the discretion of the President, where they should be. I would accept the Senator's amendment, but that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will move it, then.
Mr. DAWES. If I can I will accept the amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment cannot now be accepted, the yeas and nays having been ordered on the original amendment.

Mr. FDMINDER The Senetar from Lowe can make it on the Senetar from

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Iowa can move it, or the Senator from Massachusetts can obtain unanimous consent to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under Rule 44-

Any motion or resolution may be withdrawn or modified by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAWES. The Chair is certainly right as to the rule. If there is no objection, I will so modify my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa and accepted by the Senator ment suggested by the Senator from Iowa and accepted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be considered a part of the original amendment. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I intend to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I have been somewhat surprised at him in accepting the amendment of my colleague, because just a moment ago he told the Senate that this was the only thing in the bill which would enable the President of the United States to educate these Indians beyond the boundaries of the reservations, and it seemed to be the little thing that commended the bill to the approval of his judgment. Now, my colleague rises and proposes an amendment, which is that this money may be expended within or without the reservation, and the Senator from Massachusetts says he thinks that will improve his amendment, and therefore he accepts it.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator wants to know why I did accept it, I will tell him.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no particular desire, though I should be glad to know why. I am willing to hear the Senator if he can give any reason why it is improved now.

Mr. DAWES. It is improved for two reasons. I am anxious that the amendment should be adopted because I think it will commend my proposition to some Senators who will be willing to vote for it in that form when they would not in other forms; and in its present. that form when they would not in other forms; and in its present form it is perfectly competent for the President to spend the whole $10,000 outside of the reservation if he chooses; and no man will occupy the presidential chair who in my opinion will have any hesitancy about it.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be; but the President can expend the whole sum in the reservation. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts once more to the fact that this bill as it stands provides for the education of these Indians, and his amendment only has the effect to enable the President, if he shall choose to do so, to expend this limited sum in carrying a few of the youths from the reservation on Grand River or in New Mexico at Uintah to Carlisle Barracks or Hampton. I should have voted, as I said to the Senator from Massachusetts, for his amendment as it stood originally, but I do not want the Senate to think that this is a material amendment to the bill. It is a mere change. It will allow an infinitesimal sum to be appropriated in a different way from that proposed by the bill, for the purposes of education; but if it lays the smallest kind of a bridge to enable the Senator from Massachusetts to vote for the bill, I shall be glad if the Senate shall adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts sent to the Chair a letter which he desired to have read. If there is no objection the letter will be read.

United States Indian Service, Training School for Indian Youth, Carlisle Barracks, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, April 7, 1880.

Dear Sir: If a majority of the Senate and House concur in the views you expressed upon the Ute bill day before yesterday, in reference to the education of Indian youth, and will legislate accordingly, the "beginning of the end" of Indian troubles is reached. Education and industrial training for Indian youth, for all Indian youth, will, in a very short period, end Indian wars, and, in a not very long period, end appropriations to feed and clothe them. I do not believe anything else will.

With great respect

With great respect,

R. H. PRATT, Lieutenant in Charge.

Hon. H. L. DAWES, United States Senate.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman who wrote that letter I have never seen; I have never known him except as I know him to be an Army officer detailed by the Department to superintend the school at Carlisle Barracks. I know there is provision for other kinds of schools. I have often called the attention of the Senate to the distinction between those schools and the schools that are provided for in the amendment.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] says this is an infinitesimal ting. I know it is small, but it is as much as the Senate can be induced to take. I tried the experiment of $25,000, and that encountered the opposition of the Senator from Iowa. This is but $10,000. To take $10,000 of this money each year, and select the best youths of both sexes from these four thousand Utes and take them to schools ontside of the settlement and teach them the arts of peace, or it may be as the amendment is now modified, if the President thinks that can be done better on the ground, it can be done there, will do a good can be done better on the ground, it can be done there, will do a good deal, and it is a kind of teaching that has been overlooked. That is all I am after. The Senator from Missouri alluded to it; all Senators have alluded to it. It is a kind of teaching which has been overlooked in the attempts to educate the Indians.

I ask pardon of the Senate for any undue zeal I feel in regard to this amendment. I am not on the Indian Committee, I do not live in the vicinity of the Indians, but I do feel that we have an opportunity now to make some little advance; it is small; but even that disturbs my friend from Iowa.

disturbs my friend from Iowa.

disturbs my friend from Iowa.

I want to say that this proposition is not original with me, nor did it have the honor to spring up in that hated and despised New England to which allusion has been made to-day. I read, I had the great pleasure of reading, this morning a very able report made by the honorable Senator from Iowa himself five years ago to the Department of the Interior urging, in language I cannot hope to equal in force or beauty, this very plan. If anybody is entitled to the honor of having originated it, it is the Senator from Iowa himself. In Indian appropriation bills, time and again, the Senator from Iowa, when he has had charge of the business of the Indian Committee, has urged appropriations for applying the money to this very kind of schools genpropriations for applying the money to this very kind of schools gentrally throughout the Indian service, and he ought to have been sustained. He was sustained generally in this body, but in the other branch the measure failed. If I could reproduce here the arguments of the Senator from Iowa, I should not have tried to offer any of my own.

Mr. TELLER. I am not willing to allow the statement of the Senator from Iowa, I should not have tried to offer any of my own.

ator that this is a new proposition to go unchallenged, for there is no man who has read the history of the Indians with any care at all who will understand that this is a new proposition. It is one of the theories that I spoke of the other day, worn out and abandoned, and now taken up again. I am glad the Senator said it was not original with him. We have sent Indians to industrial schools off and on for three hundred years; we have sent them to be educated, not simply in the teaching of the schools, but in the trades, mechanics, and farming. History is full of such instances; and when we have a production like that read here from this captain at Carlisle, who says that the whole difficulty will be solved in an hour when we shall have adopted the principle of educating the children at Carlisle and at Hampton, I think it is time that some man should enter a protest against such

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, one assertion is just as good as another. I therefore put on record my assertion against that of Captain Pratt, and say that education will never do anything for the settlement of the Indian question. I have seen something of the Indian in my time; and it has not been greatly to his advantage. There is no possible education that can ever be given to a full-blooded Indian or one possessing a large amount of Indian blood in his veins which will ever enable him to compete to any considerable degree in an industrial occupation or employment. You might turn all the Indians that occupation or employment. You might turn all the Indians that could be educated at Carlisle Barracks for the next fifty years into Pennsylvania, and the Indians would starve to death in competitionwith the people of Pennsylvania. The only thing that the Indian is fit for, when it comes to an industrial occupation, is the lower branches of agriculture; something that is in its nature passive, something that requires no perceptible intelligence. He is no more capable of improvement in the sense in which we ordinarily use the term than improvement in the sense in which we ordinarily use the term than a wild beast. You may gorge him as you may gorge a rattlesnake, and of course by just as much as you gorge him his appetite for rapine and for plunder is lost. The entire effect of it is that he is simply less savage in the sense of hostile manifestations of that sort; but so far from being of any use to himself as a member of society, that idea is, to use a common phrase, gammon.

I say nothing about the obligations of humanity. We have certain obligations to the Indians which I am not disposed, so far as I am concerned, to disregard; but when it comes to talk about educating them and making them a factor of civilization, that is one of those things which cannot possibly result from anything we can do.

The opinions that are expressed here result from an absence of contact with Indians. The original New Englander, for whom I have just as much respect as its worthy descendant here on my right [Mr.

just as much respect as its worthy descendant here on my right [Mr. just as much respect as its worthy descendant here on my right [Mr. Dawes] or any other person, treated the Indians just exactly as the western people do, and made just such a compact with them as the necessary cupidity which they had for his land and all sorts of things led them to make, but by lack of proximity of course their feelings are loosened up, so to speak; they do not feel so hostile toward them as they did before. They deal with the Indians now at the distance of fifteen hundred miles. The Indian is nothing to them. No citizen of Massachusetts or of New England knows anything of those people unless he happens to go out on the frontier. The people of New England unless he happens to go out on the frontier. The people of New England are not related to this question in a practical way at all. If they were there would be plenty of Miles Standishes and men of that sort who would come to the front and solve the Indian question in the only practical manner.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator whether he thinks that three-fourths of the adult male members of the Ute tribe now in Colorado are capable of understanding and adopting this act of Congress which we are about to pass?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think they are. In fact my opinion is quite unanimous upon that point. They will understand a thing that is made practical to their apprehension by the point of the bayonet or by hunger or by some equal force of that sort, and that is all they will understand. Still we are bound to legislate for them. We have got to the point where this question has to be met. We have got to the end of the string. It has been gush and sentimentalism, and then something else. We have dealt with them with milk and water, when we ought to have dealt with them with an iron hand. Of course the result is when we have dealt with them in that lenient way great outbreaks occur, and then we must deal with them the other way and apply the Army.

A great deal has been said about outrages committed upon the Indian and what is due to him. I have not heard a word said here on this floor, and I have not seen anything quoted in the press about the damages the Indian has done to the white man. It seems that the men on that western frontier, the men who have been killed one men on that western irontier, the men who have been killed upon the frontier endeavoring to settle upon the public lands surveyed and opened to public settlement, who were invited to go there, have not had an advocate or even an apologist here at all. A year ago last September a band of Cheyenne Indians broke away from their reservation in the Indian Territory and went across the frontier to Kansas. Every single acre of land they traversed in that State was public land. There was not an acre of Indian land on their route. Every acre of it was land that had been surveyed many years since. Every acre of it was land that the United States Government had by express statute invited the people of the United States to go upon and settle there. Nine-tenths of all the people who were upon the frontiers were men who had gone there from the Eastern States. There were men there from New York and Massachusetts and Vermont and Illinois, and in fact that eclectic composition of all western communities was present.

Over forty of those persons living there, without arms, without the least hint or insinuation of danger, were killed. Nameless outrages were committed upon fifteen or twenty of their wives and daughters. Yet that conduct on the part of these Indians never has been characterized here or elsewhere as it ought to have been. When we come to consider these questions, whether by appropriation or by treaty or what not, we have always considered them upon the basis of justice to the Indians without reference to that which was due to the front-iersman who has been inevitably but necessarily crowding the Indians to the wall. But in this case, as in nine-tenths of the cases of outrages of that kind, there was no contact except such as was invited by the Government itself. The white man was not in the way of the Indian; the white man did not seek an acre of his land; he was not within fifty or one hundred miles of the reservation even. He was just precisely where the Government of the United States had invited him to go. He was just where the Government of the acterized here or elsewhere as it ought to have been. When we come

United States had said that no Indians and especially none of those particular Indians ever should go; and yet they did go there and they murdered the white settlers and outraged these women, and it has been spoken of simply as one of those things which are inevitable in the settlement of the frontier and not one that called for the con-in the settlement of the frontier and not one that called for the condemnation of the Indians at all.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the bill, probably, if it does not get too many amendments on it of the kind proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, just because I think on the whole it is the best thing that can be done. I propose to accept the inevitable. The people of Colorado have a right to respect. The bill is not up to the sentiment of that country or any just sentiment founded upon the actual knowledge of facts, but we have got to take it, as I said, as we can get it. It is probably as good as the American Congress, formed as it is now, will give. It is half a step in the right direction. It is a halting decision, to go forward hereafter in a different way from what we have heretofore gone, and to that extent and for that reason I shall vote for the bill. But I object to any anticipations that may be derived from the bill of the kind spoken of by the Senator from Massachusetts in the way of education under the direction of the President at Carlisle Barracks or Hampton Roads or the Uintah Valley or anywhere else on the supposition that that can ever be of any perceptible service to the Indian race in making the Indians better qualceptible service to the Indian race in making the Indians better qualified, by making them useful and self-supporting citizens of the United States. That result never will be reached. They may go out on the plains, they may take charge of a herd of cattle, they may in some degree adapt themselves to agriculture of an inferior kind; but when it comes to the competition for which we seek to prepare them by education, and without which education will be of no use to them, they will inevitably go to the wall. They can only stand anywhere on the face of the earth by the protection of government, and not at on the race of the earth by the protection of government, and not at all in competition with the white man.

Mr. President, an eminent citizen of the Senator's own State—I think it was Oliver Wendell Holmes—characterizes and settles definitely the status of the Indian when he speaks of him as simply a member of a provisional race. He is simply here to get out of the way at the proper time; he was not expected to be here in the way of the white race. In no way did he eyer become a factor of civiliway at the proper time; he was not expected to be here in the way of the white race. In no way did he ever become a factor of civilization; in no way did he ever become enduring either by amalgamation or otherwise. Within fifty years there will not be probably one single full-blooded Indian on the American continent; and within a hundred years there will not be a single person living who in his features or in his blood will bear the impress of a single characteristic of the Indian character. He will be entirely gone. The only question to be considered is, what shall we do as a matter of humanity to take hold of these people whose lot has thus been provisionally cast among us?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not propose to debate at length this much-debated bill. It has two aspects to it: one viewed from the stand-point of the State of Colorado; the other the general interest of the United States and the duty of Senators respecting that wider and larger question. Ordinarily, in a matter that interests a wider and larger question. Ordinarily, in a matter that interests a State, we find the Senators from that State agreeing. In this particular case there is a sharp conflict, the two Senators from Colorado absolutely disagreeing as to the expediency and desirability of this

I do not propose to argue the Indian question; but after a good deal of deliberation I have determined to vote for the bill, and I do deal of deliberation I have determined to vote for the bill, and I do it upon the general ground that I believe from the tenor of this debate, whatever theory may underlie it or whatever theory may in the end prove fallacious in regard to it, it is a bill which I must believe will be advantageous to Colorado, in that it remits to her a very large portion of her area for settlement which is now sealed, and it will be of still greater advantage to her in that it will prevent an Indian war.

Mr. TELLER. That we deny. That is just the question, will it prevent an Indian war? The Senator assumes that it will. He assumes the whole argument. I assert that it will bring on a war. That is a difference of judgment between us.

Mr. BLAINE. I listened to the honorable Senator the other day, and his theory seemed to be that he would not go forward one step in anything touching these four thousand Utes until they submitted to the authority of the United States. As to the question of dignity between the United States, with fifty million people, and four thou-sand Utes in the mountains of Colorado, I submit to my friend that no such point is involved.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the Senator has any right to put me in that position. I never claimed that any question of dignity was

Mr. BLAINE. I am not saying that the Senator did. Mr. TELLER. I did not claim that there was any question of dig-

Mr. BLAINE. That question is not involved. The United States Mr. BLAINE. That question is not involved. The United States cannot stop to talk of that; it does not exist. The sensitiveness that exists between two great nations touching their intercourse with each other, is a point that must always be held, as you might say, at the point of the sword. Here it does not exist. The infinite distance between the two parties to the controversy forbids it.

I have known enough of the history of the United States and its dealing with the Indian tribes to know that whatever theory there may be (and there are many) as to their treatment, the most expensions.

sive of all is treating them by war. The Senator from Colorado will agree with me in that. I think the weight of evidence is that this measure is, at least for the present, a measure of peace, and I do not want to launch this country into an Indian war, I do not as a friend of Colorado—and I certainly would always desire to vote in the interest of that State and not against it—to make her soil the theater of an Indian war. I believe it would do more to check and theater of an Indian war. I believe it would do more to check and destroy the great and rapid and splendid development of that most interesting State than a pestilence or a famine would do.

Therefore, upon the weight of testimony, (and I have tried to weigh it impartially,) I believe that the passage of this bill will for the present avert the danger and disaster of war. Whether the honorable Senator from Colorado, for whose opinion on such questions I always have great respect, is right in supposing that in this measure is contained the seed of a future war, is yet to be determined. It does not appear on the foce of the argument, and we must hold ourselves.

is contained the seed of a future war, is yet to be determined. It does not appear on the face of the argument, and we must hold ourselves ready to deal with future exigencies as they arise.

I have a word to say in reply to the honorable Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] merely as a matter of fact, not as a matter of argument pertinent to this bill. I think he felicitates himself quite too freely when he says that in fifty years from this time we shall not see within the area of the United States the face of an Indian, nor one that has Indian blood in his veins. If the statistics of the Indian Department are correct, there are to-day nearly or quite as many Indians within the area of the United States as there were when Columbus discovered America. I believe there never has been a census of the Indians made upon any assignable basis of fact that gave a number beyond one hundred thousand greater than that which is now known to exist. Why, in my own State we have two little tribes of known to exist. Why, in my own State we have two little tribes of known to exist. Why, in my own State we have two little tribes of Indians that are literally, not figuratively, wards of the State—the Passamaquoddies and the Penobscots. They came down to us as part of the charge assumed by Maine in the separation from Massachusetts in 1820. One lives, you may say, at the door of my colleague, or within a dozen miles of his home; the other further down on the coast. I do not know the precise numbers, but I should say that the two tribes united do not represent more than six hundred persons.

tribes united do not represent more than six hundred persons.

Mr. HAMLIN. Something over eight hundred.

Mr. BLAINE. My colleague corrects me by saying "something over eight hundred." He would be more accurate than I upon that matter. They are in either event a small number. I do not know that they have perceptibly diminished in fifty years. My colleague informs me that the Penobscot tribe, near which he lives, has slightly gained in that time. There they have lived segregated right in the heart of New England, and in sixty years that Maine has existed as a State, while they have been the wards literally of the State, supported from our treasury in large measure, and constantly looked after, not held as voters, not reckoned as citizens, not treated as white men are treated under the laws—they have under all these adverse circumstances continued to hold their own and have slightly gained in number.

In number.

I believe the Indian question is one that is going to exist very many years beyond the time when the Senator from Kansas in his sanguine feeling thinks it will cease to trouble us. It will not depart. Three hundred thousand men, living in a healthy climate, expanding all the time under the area that is given to them, do not die out very soon. I remember a distinguished Senator of the United States—I will not call his name, although I shall not make an unkind reference to him—was one of a few gentlemen who went South in what we called the "Andy Johnson" days, when we were troubled a good deal about the matter of reconstruction, and he came back and said: "You are troubling yourselves"—and that became a theory in Washington with many—"You are troubling yourselves a great deal about this question of the negro; freedom is going to destroy him; you will not ton with many—"You are troubling yourselves a great deal about this question of the negro; freedom is going to destroy him; you will not have any negroes in twenty years."—I think he put it at twenty years. When asked why we were not going to have any his reply was, "Why, the small-pox, every form of disease, is coming in to ravage them and destroy them," and he was certain the negro was soon not to be known on the face of the earth within a very short time. I think the census of 1880 will show a pretty large and healthy increase of that troublesome member of society, as some gentlemen regard him. And when we attempt to deal with the Indian question on the theory that they are going to disappear, we are proceeding upon a foundation that is not true. We shall have to deal with them as an ever-present question, which our descendants will confront as we have been confronting it for nearly four centuries in this country; and it will be here for four centuries more, I venture to prophesy to the honorable Senator from Kansas, and with all the more confidence, as neither of us will ever be able to contradict the other on the ultimate solution of it.

I only rose to say that I believed this bill had the merit of giving

I only rose to say that I believed this bill had the merit of giving to the people of Colorado in their rapid development at this time a to the people of Colorado in their rapid development at this time a guarantee against the outbreak of an Indian war in their country. While I do not pretend to say anything about its details, which I have not closely examined, I have risen to say that I shall support it. It has not been my fortune in Congress during the past three years always to agree with the Secretary of the Interior. Sometimes I have taken occasion on this floor to disagree with him, and I have risen the more readily to do an act of justice to that officer by saying that in this case I shall vote for the measure which is the recommendation of his Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) Upon the passage of this bill I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] whom I do not see in his seat, who is opposed to the bill and I am for it. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment; but as the Senator from Maryland is not here, I decline to vote.

Mr. VOORHEES, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BALDWIN. On this question my colleague [Mr. Ferry] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] Were my colleague here, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay."

The result was announced-yeas 44, nays 8; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to suggest another amendment to this bill, and I hope the Committee on Indian Affairs will accept it. On page 2, in lines 19 and 20 of section 1, where the word "four" occurs in three places, I move to strike out that word and insert "six" in

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported. The CHERCHERK. The amendment is, in line 19, after the word "Meeker," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" in the same line, after the word "Meeker," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" and in line 20, after the word "Price," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

To Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker, $600; to Miss Josephine Meeker, $600; to Mrs. Sophronia Price, $600.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, Senators will perceive at once the purpose of this. Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker is the widow of the murdered agent, Miss Josephine Meeker is a daughter, and Mrs. Sophronia Price is the widow of a murdered employé. These three ladies were all taken prisoners by the Indians and subjected to treatment that we all understand. The committee have reported in favor of allowing to each of these three ladies for a specific period of time the sum of $400 a year out of the moneys payable to these Indians. The amendment submitted by myself is to increase that sum to $600 per

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?
Mr. KIRKWOOD. Certainly.
Mr. BUTLER. What will the Indians say to that increase from

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should be very careless myself as to what they said about it.
Mr. EATON. We are told they have agreed through their head-

Mr. EATON. We are told they have agreed through their headmen to this amount.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will not argue the proposition at all. I leave it to the Senate to say. I think my amendment will commend itself to the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr Kirkwood.]

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to prevail; when a division was called for and the ayes and noes rose and were counted.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire to say a word to explain my vote. I understand this is an agreement with the Indians, and I vote against the amendment, not because I do not want to increase the amount, but I understand the sum which is to be devoted to this purpose is fixed at a certain amount. This amendment of the Senator from Iowa will exceed that sum. If that is the case, I think it would be wery unwise to open the question again.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand an amount is reported as an amendment by the committee, and the Senator from Iowa merely increases that amount as amended by the committee.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I desire to say that the several amounts in the bill are the amounts agreed upon and accepted by the headmen of the Indians before they left for Colorado.

Mr. McMILLAN. Does not this appear in the bill as an amendment reported by the committee to the agreement entered into beween the Secretary of the Interior and the head-men?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think the Senator from Colorado must be laboring under a mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is out of order when the Senate is dividing.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I can hardly suppose the Indians voluntarily agreed to make payment of the sums named in this bill before they left Colorado, and that when—Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Before they left Washington for Colorado.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Then I misunderstood the Senator from Colorado. It certainly should have been placed in the agreement itself, if that be so The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must call attention to the fact that it is not in order to debate when the Senate is dividing. The Senate is dividing on this question. The ayes are 26 and the noes 15; the amendment is adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. The adoption of that amendment would seem to make it proper to adopt an amendment in line 22 in reference to Mrs.

Sarah M. Post. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what ground there was for giving any compensation at all when it is put at only $200?

Mr. COKE. I am not able to hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask why Mrs. Sarah M. Post is given only $200?

I understand she is the widow of a man who was murdered by these dians. She was not there, it is true, but he was her husband.

Mr. COKE. I am not familiar with all these details. Perhaps

Mr. Coke. I aim not laminate with all these details? Telhaps some other member of the committee can give information.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to strike out "two" and insert "six" in her case, in line 23; so as to read: "To Mrs. Sarah M. Post, $600."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out "two" and insert "three" in that clause. I find that Mrs. Elliott, whose husband was killed not at the time of the massacre but at another time, is given $300. There is no reason why Mrs. Post should not have as much. She is a woman with three children to support.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller.]

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that I should like to have this matter distinctly understood. I understood the Senator from Colorado on the right [Mr. HIL.] to say that the allowance of these sums had been agreed upon by some representative or quasi representative of the Government and the head-men of the Indians. If that be true, we ought not to disturb that agreement by making the sum a little larger; but if there is any larger sum to be paid it should be paid from the Treasury of the United States and not from the Indian fund. If it is not true, we should be prepared to support the Senator's amendment.

I do not know anything about that except the state-Mr. TELLER. I do not know anything about that except the statement that my colleague makes, which I assume to be true of course. I will simply say on this subject that the whole question is still by this bill left to the Indians. If they decline to accept it, of course it does not go into effect. It is still to be remitted to them for their approval. They have got a veto on this bill. If they happen to veto this bill, of course that is the end of it; but if they do not veto it, it will become a law. I think this woman ought to have $300; she has three children; she is entirely destitute; she is a woman that has been well brought up and accustomed to living decently and properly.

Mr. DAWES. I observe in the original bill that there is a distinction in the amounts to be given to these different persons, and that distinction is kept up I suppose because there is something in the history of their sufferings that accounts for it. I am not acquainted with the facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to the Senator that it appeared to the committee that most of these women were at the White River agency, where the massacre took place, and were taken off and outraged by the Indians, and the others were injured at different times and places. The committee, therefore, made a difference in the pension allowed

Mr. DAWES. Grewing out of the difference in the outrages?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] to increase the amount from $200 to $300.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the committee assent to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by inserting, in line 45, after the word "and," the words "the murder of and outrages upon;" so as to

Who were implicated in the murder of United States Indian Agent N. C. Meeker, and the murder of and outrages upon the employés at the White River agency.

The first part of this agreement requires the tribe to surrender up those Indians who were implicated in the murder of certain persons at the agency. Now, according to my understanding of the matter and my belief, and I think it is common among the people of that section of country, that is not the worst of the atrocities that were committed, and I do not want the Indian Committee to say, as I think was intimated a moment ago, that they were proposing to condone this offense by the payment of money for twenty years, but I want the persons guilty of the principal offense delivered up as well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee assent to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of line 37 on page 3: at the agency. Now, according to my understanding of the matter

Provided further, That nothing in this act contained, or in the agreement herein set forth, or in the amendments herein proposed to said agreement, shall be so construed as to compel any Ute Indian to remove from any lands that he or she claims in severalty, or to deprive any such Indian who refuses to sign said agreement of his or her right to select a tract of land for agricultural purposes at any time within two years from the date of this act, under the stipulations of any existing treaty with the Ute Indians, in any part of the reservation now occupied by any of the confederated tribes of the Ute Indians in the State of Colorado.

Mr. President, in support of the amendment I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to the stipulations in the seventh and sixteenth articles of ≀he treaty, which I send to the desk of the Secretary to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the articles sent to the desk by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am in favor of the principle of the first part

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama retains the floor, but has sent up some matter to be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg pardon.
The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE VII.

If any individual belonging to said tribe of Indians, or legally incorporated with them, being the head of a family, shall desire to commence farming, he shall have the privilege to select, in the presence and with the assistance of the agent then in charge, by metes and bounds, a tract of land within said reservation, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres in extent, which tract, when so selected, certified, and recorded in the land book as herein directed, shall cease to be held in common, but the same may be occupied and held in exclusive possession of the person selecting it and his family so long as he or they may continue to cultivate it. Any person over eighteen years of age, not being the head of a family, may, in like manner, select and cause to be certified to him or her for purposes of cultivation, a quantity of land not exceeding eighty acres in extent, and thereupon be entitled to the exclusive possession of the same as above directed.

For each tract of land so selected a certificate, containing a description thereof and the name of the person selecting it, with a certificate indorsed thereon that the same has been recorded, shall be delivered to the party entitled to it by the agent after the same shall have been recorded by him in a book to be kept in his office, subject to inspection, which said book shall be known as the "Utc Land Book."

The President may at any time order a survey of the reservation; and when so surveyed Congress shall provide for protecting the rights of such Indian settlers in their improvements, and may fix the character of the title held by each.

The United States may pass such laws on the subject of alienation and descont of property, and on all subjects connected with the government of the Indians on said reservation and the internal police thereof as may be thought proper.

ARTICLE XVI.

ARTICLE XVI.

No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians, unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 7 of this treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that a portion of the committee, at least, and perhaps all the gentlemen of the committee, are satisfied with the amendment that I propose as far as the first part of it is concerned; that is, to secure to those Indians who have made selection of agricultural lands a right to continue there and enjoy them, and to cerned; that is, to secure to those Indians who have made selection of agricultural lands a right to continue there and enjoy them, and to receive certificates for those lands under this treaty. The difficulty arises in regard to the second portion of the amendment, which provides that within two years from the date of this enactment every Indian of the Ute tribe who has not signed this agreement shall have the privilege of enjoying the benefit of the seventh article of the treaty by going on within that period of time and selecting his agricultural land, and making that place his home, if he chooses to do so. My purpose is to try to execute this treaty as far as it is practicable to do so.

We provide in this law, as was provided in the original treaty of 1868, that the consent actually obtained by signature of a three-fourths majority of the adult male Indians in that territory shall have the majority of the adult male Indians in that territory shall have the effect of transferring to the Government, or yielding by cession to the Government, or disposing of, the lands held by these Indians in common; but that treaty expressly provides that the rights of the individual Indians shall not be disposed of except with their personal consent. Of course, when you remove these Indians from their present territory under the power of the tribe acting as a tribe, and compel the minority of a little less than one-fourth to remove from this territory, the personal rights should be secured to them which we guaranteed in the treaty and which the tribe has no power to affect. I do not believe that it was ever the intention of the treaty that a three-fourths majority of the Indians in that tribe should have the power to take the minority from that territory so as to deprive them of their right to make selections under this treaty of lands for agricultural purposes. agricultural purposes.

I wish at all events to satisfy the Indians; I wish when we come to consider this legislation further, and to deal with the Indians hereafter, we shall not be met with the complaint that we had violently torn them away from places where they had a right under the treaty to make their selections, and had done it immediately and without notice. I want to make provision of law by which there shall be at least two years allowed to those who do not sign the agreement and thereby bind themselves by a contract with reference to this enactment to have the right to locate upon these lands under the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. CONKLING. How many adult male Indians are there in this ribe?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not quite able to state. I should suppose between eight and nine hundred.

Mr. CONKLING. That is, Indians over twenty-one years of age?

Mr. MORGAN. They are called "adult male Indians" in the treaty.

There are four thousand of these Indians; and so in all probability about eight hundred adult male Indians in the tribe. Three-fourths of those have a right, as long as we recognize their tribal power, to transfer the entire tribe out of this territory into the territory into which we propose to remove them. I propose to make it entirely clear which we propose to remove them. I propose to make it entirely clear that that right remains to those who have already made selections by that that right remains to those who have already made selections by the first part of my amendment, and to that I understand the committee have no objection; but the second part of it in equity and justice ought to be enacted. The very moment this law is ratified by the Utes, if it ever takes effect at all, it becomes operative. You call a council under the direction of these commissioners and submit this enactment or treaty or whatever it may be called to that council; three-fourths of the adult male Indian population agree that they will accept it, and they sign the agreement. That is a ratification of it; that makes the agreement operative, which before that time is not operative. The minority who may decline to sign it, it may be one operative. The minority who may decline to sign it, it may be one or it may be one hundred or more, are transferred by the operation of this law and this agreement of the tribe as a tribe, away from this territory, and all opportunity to make the selection is entirely cut off. I do not think that is just; neither do I think that the Indians will regard it as just. If we are to make this arrangement with them in the interest of peace, we ought to give them certainly some satisfaction in regard to the equity of our conduct toward them. So I hope that the Senate will adopt this amendment.

I wish to say, however, that I cannot consider this a constitutional law in its present form, enacted, all of its provisions except one section or perhaps two, to take effect upon the consent of the Ute tribes. Mr. Cooley, in his comments on constitutional law, strongly denounces such enactments as being unconstitutional. A large number of ausuch enactments as being unconstitutional. A large number of authorities are cited by him to show that in reference to any general law affecting the people of an entire State, or you may say affecting the people of an entire tribe, for we are dealing with them now at least as a State or a tribe, as a law-receiving power if not a law-enacting power—in reference to any general legislation affecting the people of a tribe or a State, it is unconstitutional to make that legislation depend upon the condition of the people accepting it people of a tribe or a State, it is unconstitutional to make that legislation depend upon the condition of the people accepting it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question in that connection, if I do not disturb him?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is great force in what the Senator says, beyond all question; but there is another point connected with that on which I should like to get his views. If we are dealing, as we appear to be, with these Indians in their character as a tribe or community, how does it happen that we can deal with them by a statute, make an agreement by a statute at all, when the Constitution says that the Senate and the President are to make treaties? The fact that you call this an agreement instead of using the werd "treaty" that you call this an agreement instead of using the word "treaty" does not change it any, as it appears to me.

Mr. MORGAN. I stated that proposition in the outset of my remarks on this bill as indicating entirely my opinion that it was impossible that we could proceed with this bill at all without violating the treaty-making right of the Senate and President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not have the pleasure to hear the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. We are in a choice between two alternatives, one of which is that we do not treat with them; for members of the committee say this is not a treaty but legislation; the other of which is that we legislate and make the entire law dependent upon their acceptance. So I conceive that it is unconstitutional in both aspects; that there is no constitutional aspect in which this bill can be viewed at all. I think it will be so held by any court that ever has its construction under consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I have heard the Senator say over and over again that this law is to be submitted to the Ute Indians. There is nothing further from the fact. We do not propose to submit any law to the Indians. The only thing that is submitted to the Ute Indians in this statute is whether or not they will respond to the agreement. the Indians. The only thing that is submitted to the Ute Indians in this statute is whether or not they will respond to the agreement made by their head-men. What is that agreement? It is simply an agreement providing for the surrender of a portion of the lands they have now and the taking of other lands in lieu, and whether they will receive the compensation which the United States proposes to pay them for these lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let me ask the Senator from Iowa if it be an agreement in the sense in which he speaks of it, suppose some particular individual or all of them choose not to carry out the agreement after they have made it, what are you going to do? All you can do with a man who breaks an agreement in a civilized country is to sue him. And if you say this is an agreement with a nation of Indians in their political character, then you have run into the Constitution which says you are to deal with them by treaty.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not on the point the Senator from Vermont made a while ago; but the Senator from Alabama, as I understand him, now says that it is proposed that these Indians shall agree to this law; in other words, that they become a part of the law-making power of the United States here. There is nothing further from the fact in this case. We do not propose any such thing. The law is passed by Congress. It is to carry out an agreement not yet completed.

Mr. MORGAN. The first section of this bill contains nothing but an agreement and the amendments thereto. The agreement is set out in have verba in the section and the signatures of the contracting parties are there given. All the remaining sections of the bill are to in hec verba in the section and the signatures of the contracting par-ties are there given. All the remaining sections of the bill are to carry that agreement into effect, so that if the agreement is not adopted the rest of the law falls, the rest of the statute would be en-tirely incomplete and would have no purpose to accomplish, and there-fore it would be no statute.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the distinction between this case in that respect and any other case of contingent legislation; as between this respect and any other case of contingent legislation; as between this and the embargo case for example?

Mr. ALLISON. Or the case of a grant of land in a State to erect a custom-house. The grant is on condition that the State relinquishes its anthority. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. MORGAN. This is not submitted to the Indians in that sense. It is not a question which is left to the law to determine when the contingency arises; but it is a question that is left to a certain body of men by a vote to accept it or not to accept it.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator will pardon me for suggesting that in the instance of the embargo act it was left contingent.

mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator will parton me for suggesting that in the instance of the embargo act, it was left contingent upon the occurrence of a certain event, the ascertainment of that fact by an officer of the Government, and his promulgation of that ascertainment by a proclamation. Now, what is the distinction between that case and this, in principle?

Mr. MORGAN. The distinction is this: that the President of the United States has the right to put a law in force when the law provides that it shall be put in force on his proclamation. He is one of vides that it shall be put in force on his proclamation. He is one of the agencies of our own Government. But when a law is to go into effect upon the acceptance of some foreign power, or upon the accept-ance of some band of Indians in our country, then the contingency depends upon their determination and not upon ours. The legislation is entirely incomplete until they vote, until they act, and they to that extent are admitted to a participation in the act of legisla-

Now, I will read from Cooley on Constitutional Limitations his text on that subject:

The question then arises, whether that which may be done in reference to any municipal organization within the State may not also be done in reference to the State at large? May not any law framed for the State at large be made conditional on an acceptance by the people at large, declared through the ballot-box?

Mr. ALLISON. That is not this case.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. In examining the principle, I will not read the entire body of the text because there is a good deal of it not bearing particularly on this subject:

bearing particularly on this subject:

If the decision of these questions is to depend upon the weight of judicial authority up to the present time, it must be held that there is no power to refer the adoption or rejection of a general law to the people of the State, any more than there is to refer it to any other authority. The prevailing doctrine in the courts appears to be, that, except in those cases where, by the constitution, the people have expressly reserved to themselves a power of decision, the function of legislation cannot be exercised by them, even to the extent of accepting or rejecting a law which has been framed for their consideration. "The exercise of this power by the people in other cases is not expressly and in terms prohibited by the constitution; but it is forbidden by necessary and unavoidable implication. The senate and assembly are the only bodies of men clothed with the power of general legislation. They possess the entire power, with the exception above stated."

What is "the exception above stated."

That the propole in their

What is "the exception above stated?" That the people in their constitution have reserved the right of approval or disapproval of a law, and only in that case.

law, and only in that case.

"The people reserved no part of it to themselves, (with that exception,) and can therefore exercise it in no other case." It is therefore held that the Legislature have no power to submit a proposed law to the people, nor have the people power to bind each other by acting upon it. They voluntarily surrendered that power when they adopted the constitution. The government of the State is democratic, but it is a representative democracy, and in passing general laws the people act only through their representatives in the Legislature.

Nor, it seems, can such legislation be sustained as legislation of a conditional character, whose force is to depend upon the happening of some future event, or upon some future change of circumstances. "The event or change of circumstances on which a law may be made to take effect must be such as, in the judgment of the Legislature, affects the question of the expediency of the law; "—

Not of its validity but the expediency of it. There is the distinc-

"an event on which the expediency of the law in the opinion of the law-makers depends. On this question of expediency, the Legislature must exercise its own judgment definitively and finally."

become entitled to a certain subsidy of bonds or lands. Again, suppose we say that whenever the State of Alabama cedes jurisdiction pose we say that whenever the State of Alabama cedes jurisdiction over a suitable site in Montgomery, then and in that event it shall be paid for, and a public building shall be erected thereon, and so on. Those are all contingencies; they are addressed, as the Senator says, to the expediency of the law; but the law speaks, as the Constitution says it shall when it becomes consummate by the concurrence of the three bodies which act upon it, the Executive and the two Houses. What is the distinction between those cases and the case in which you say that whenever an Indian tribe agrees willingly or voluntarily to go to the White River or the Grand River or some designated reservation, then and in that event they shall become entitled to certain annuities?

Mr. MORGAN. The distinction, as I consider it, is this: In the cases cited by the Senator from New York the particular event upon which the act is to take effect is expressed in the act itself; its expediency is determined, and the law becomes operative to take effect upon the happening of that contingency or that event. But in this case, inasmuch as we make the agreement itself the basis of the statute, the law does not take effect until another party consents that it shall take effect.

Mr. CONKLING. Not so as I understand it, if the Senator will allow me. Let us see which is right. The statute authorizes and therefore me. Let us see which is right. The statute authorizes and therefore requires the appointment of a commission. It requires that commission to proceed to do certain things, one of which is the ascertainment of the contingency now in question. Surely the Senator cannot say that this is like the case, attempted some time in the States, of passing a law and providing that the people shall vote upon it, and if they vote in favor of it it shall go into effect, and unless they do it shall not; the law takes effect pro tanto; but the law is frustrated when a contingency arises which frustrates it after that.

Mr. MORGAN. The difficulty in the Senator's argument, as I conceive, is that in this case the law takes effect by the agreement of another party.

another party.

Mr. CONKLING. It is the question if that is so.

Mr. MORGAN. I will take the case of providing for the payment

Mr. MORGAN. I will take the case or providing for the payment of money to the women here named.

Mr. CONKLING. That does undoubtedly.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. That is part of the statute. Is that an unconstitutional part of it? If it is, the whole of it is unconstitutional, because you make the law take effect on the agreement of somebody else that it shall take effect, not that the law shall be of full effect to become operative upon a contingency, but that it shall be of no effect until it takes effect upon the consent of some person to be hereafter obtained.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will pardon me once more. You say by act of Congress that certain property shall be disposed of on certain terms and it shall be disposed of to the highest bidder. Suppose nobody bids and the property is not disposed of? Again you say that a contract shall be made, that sealed proposals shall be asked for, and that it shall be given to the lowest bidder. there are no sealed proprosals, or the persons who come are totally irresponsible, or the whole thing is entirely informal, and it fails in frustration; is not that just such a case as this?

Mr. MORGAN. But in the case cited by the Senator from New York there is no condition at all that the law shall become operative if there are sealed proposals, or that it shall not become operative if

Mr. CONKLING. But it presents the point that the Senator was last suggesting, that the residue of the act would fail of execution.

Mr. MORGAN. The point is stated by Judge Cooley in better terms than I can state it:

The prevailing doctrine in the courts appears to be, that, except in those cases where, by the constitution, the people have expressly reserved to themselves a power of decision, the function of legislation cannot be exercised by them, even to the extent of accepting or rejecting a law which has been framed for their consid-

Mr. CONKLING. No doubt about that. Mr. MORGAN. Whenever you devolve on any people or this tribe of Indians so much of the function of legislation as makes a law operative on their giving their consent to anything at all, you introduce into it an unconstitutional feature. That is my proposition.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it is rather late in the day, it seems to me, to talk about the right of Congress or the duty of Congress to treat with Indians for the cession of the land that they occupy. Each one of the four great powers that colonized this continent— England, France, Holland, and Spain—uniformly recognized the principle that, while the Christian powers that conquered the country obtained the right of sovereignty, the Indians were the rightful occupants of the soil so long as they continued to possess it, and that their title could not be extinguished except by their voluntary agreement secured in pursuance of law. We have made during the period of our history nearly four hundred treaties with Indians. Nearly all the country we occupy has been procured by voluntary cession from the Indians; and, with the single exception of the Minnesota Sioux outbreak in 1862, this Government has never claimed that it had a title to any Indian territory by the right of converge. Mr. CONKLING. Now, will the Senator indulge me a moment, because I am seeking for information?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose by act of Congress we say that whenever any party or corporation who may choose to do it completes a certain number of miles of road, then and in that event they shall

Mr. TELLER. I trust the Senator will withdraw the word "peace-

Mr. INGALLS. I say they are in the peaceful possession to-day of twelve million acres of soil, because that is the fact. In 1871, after a continuous recognition of the "domestic-dependent-nation" theory of Indian political attributes, Congress declared that no more treaties should be made with Indians, but that all agreements for the acquisition of their territory should be submitted to both Houses of Congress for ratification. There has been no change of the question of title between the United States Government and the Indian in consequence of that change of law in 1871. The Supreme Court by in-numerable decisions has held that the Indians were the lawful occupants and possessors of the soil, and that there was no way for the Government to obtain possession, if they were peaceable, except by voluntary cession on their part.

Here is another illustration of the exercise of that power and authority on the part of the Government. We have endeavored to seeure from them an acknowledgment of the terms and conditions under which they will cede these twelve million acres of land in Col-What question of constitutional law is there about it? In what particular does the doctrine that the Senator from Alabama has produced here apply to this question?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that it is only in view of the fact that this is considered by the committee as an act of Congress and not a treaty.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator entirely misapprehends. It is immaterial, whether you call this an act of Congress or a treaty. We have tried, as we were bound to do before we could get possession of this land, in some way to come to an understanding with these people, to make a bargain with them. They are the occupants of it; they are the possessors of it; they are there rightfully by the consent of the Government; and under the unbroken precedent that has been established, under international law, under the law of the Supreme Court, we are bound before we can obtain possession of that land to secure the consent of the Indians in some way.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I will ask the Senator whether he expects to secure that consent from them as a political body, as a government, or as individual men?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not propose to discuss the doctrine whether the Indians are domestic dependent nations, as the Supreme Court has heretofore declared them to be, or whether their condition has has heretorore declared them to be, or whether their condition has been changed by the act of 1871; or whatever Senators may see fit to assert on that point I shall not deny. I assert that these Indians, whether they are recognized as nations or as a community or as a partnership, or in any sense that you may choose to define them, are in the rightful possession of this territory of which we desire to obtain control, and a treaty or agreement has been made with them, through their head-men, their agents, if you please—if you do not desire to call them a political sovereignty, if they are a partnership, or an association an agreement has been made with their agents. or an association, an agreement has been made with their agents, which it is now sought to make operative. This law is not to take effect in any sense of being contingent legislation upon the consent of the Ute tribe of Indians. It is a misuse of terms to talk about that. There is no contingent legislation about it. Here is an agreement that Congress assumes the right to modify, to change, to abrogate if necessary; but in case it is agreed to, as defined and established by these head-men and by the Secretary of the Interior, then these conditions are to be effectual and to go into operation. There is nothing else in it.

When the Senator quotes from Cooley on Constitutional Law and Limitations as to the effect of contingent statutes, it shows that he has an entire want of comprehension of this matter, as it appeared to the Committee on Indian Affairs. He may be right and they may

Mr. THURMAN, (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) Mr. President, I have been so anxious that this bill should be disposed of, as I hope it will be before we adjourn, that it is with very great reluctance that I say a word. I shall by my brevity certainly not contribute to the prolongation of this debate

With the greatest respect in the world for my friend from Alabama it does seem to me that he has an entirely mistaken view of this subject. Suppose that an act of Congress had been passed, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase from these Utes their lands upon such terms as to him should seem just and reasonable, and he had made the purchase, what difference would it make whether they had a distinct and independent autonomy as a tribe or whether they were so many individuals? Could not Congress authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase the lands of A B or C D or E F in the State of New York or the State of Ohio, and cannot Congress authorize the Secretary of the Interior or the President or any officer to purchase the lands which belong to an Indian tribe, whether they have autonomy or whether they are so many individuals? If we could do that, what difficulty is there when the Secretary of the Interior has made such a contract, which, standing alone on his action would not be binding, for the Congress of the United States to ratify it and thereby we keet the good case (Congress had in the Secretary of the Interior has thereby make it as good as if Congress had in the first instance delegated that authority to him? For the life of me I cannot see; and we may ratify it with modifications, which, when accepted by the other party to the contract, become operative and binding. I see no legal difficulty in this question at all. It may be that I do not understand it, and I always have great difficulty in my own mind when

I find myself differing from my friend from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. If my friend will allow me, I will say that we have no power under existing statutes to confer on the Ute tribe of Indians authority to convey the rights of individual Indians to their lands.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not sufficiently familiar with this subject to know whether there are rights in the control of the contr

Mr. IHUKMAN. I am not sunctiontly familiar with this subject to know whether there are rights in severalty.

Mr. ALLISON. In the first place there are no rights in severalty. There is not a single individual Indian in this Ute reservation who has selected land under the seventh article of the treaty—

Mr. INGALLS. Except Ouray.
Mr. ALLISON. I understand even Ouray has not, and he has signed the treaty. They hold these lands in common, all of them.

Mr. THURMAN. That being the case, I really do not see the difficulty. While I am up, having said all I want to say on that matter, I will add that there is in the bill, I am told, a provision that I should like a word of explanation about, and that is that these lands having been allotted in severalty and becoming private property. Sanda bring been allotted in severalty and becoming private property, lands lying in the State of Colorado are to be free from taxation for twenty or twenty-five years.

Mr. TELLER. Twenty-five years.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not exactly understand how the United States can, by any bargain it may make with anybody, exempt from taxa-ean, by any bargain it may make with anybody, exempt from taxation private property in a State.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me, that these lands to be taken in the State of Colorado are now a part of this Indian reservation, and the Supreme Court—and, unless I am very much mistaken, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Davis] delivered the opinion-has decided that that class of lands cannot be taxed by

A State. That was in the Kansas case.

Mr. THURMAN. That is all very true; but after they have become lands in severalty and the tribal relation is broken up—

Mr. ALLISON. But it is not broken up. We do not propose to

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that the chairman of this committee [Mr. Coke] when opening this debate announced as a question of law that the tribal relations were dissolved by the bill. Upon that I made a proposition that if they were dissolved you had no right to exempt the land from taxation.

Mr. ALLISON. But it is not dissolved.

Mr. TELLER. It is dissolved. That is the legal effect, there is no

Mr. COKE. I think the tribal relation in all essential particulars is broken; but there is enough left of that relation to retain over the Indian the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, as will be seen by reference to this bill and by reference to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Kansas case. That is my position.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to put a question to the Senator from Ohio, if there is any doubt in his mind that an act of Congress and the consent of an Indian tribe may change the tenure on which the Indian lands are held from the ownership of the tribe in common to a seisin in severalty by the individual, leaving the tribal relation existing for all other purposes. If that be true, I ask him whether lands so held in severalty may not still be exempted from taxation as the lands held by the tribe in common?

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas another question about these lands. I observe that so much is to be given to one, and so much to another, and so on, hereafter. Is that allotment of land to be in bulk; or is the bill open, equally as to any other construction, to the idea that one man is to receive land in one place and another man in another place and another man somewhere else, and intermediate all these pieces of land white settlers may be located?

Mr. COKE. That will be arranged under the instruction of the commissioners who are to survey the locations.

Mr. CONKLING. They are to go where the commissioners please to locate them?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. So that they may put one man in one place and another man somewhere else, and disperse them abroad as they please, and leave white people among them if they choose?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.
Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator from Texas whether he has any evidence on the subject that the Indians understand that that is to be the effect of this?

Mr. COKE. I suppose that the head-men who made the agreement understand it. At all events it will be the duty of the commissioners to explain it to them, as they will be charged with procuring their

Mr. CONKLING. So, as I understand the Senator, the commissioners, if they are explicit and ingenuous, will let these Indians understand that one member of a family may be put in one place and another member of the same family at a distance, with white people between them, and that they may be not only divided into families but subdivided and disposed of in as many directions as anybody who at the time administers this may think on the whole would be wise?

Mr. COKE. Of course the bill supposes that the commissioners will consult the allottees in making the allotments.

Mr. COKE. It does not say so.

Mr. COKE. That of course is the presumption.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator trusts to the humanity or the good

Mr. COKE. We cannot go into every detail in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Since we passed the act of 1871 saying that the President and the Senate should not exercise their constitutional power to make treaties with Indians, but that all treaties afterward with Indians should be called a greater than the same and the same are the same and the same are the same with Indians should be called agreements and should be made by Congress, I confess I have been a good deal at sea and quite unable to understand what is the effect of an act of Congress which embodies an agreement of this character, or any other similar character, with Indian tribes. If the act of Congress speaks, as it may about other agreements such as those to which the Senator from Ohio has alluded, in its civil character, then the Indian or the United States breaking the contract, not keeping it, is only liable to a civil remedy. Treating this as an agreement—and that is all of course that Congress has power to authorize to be made as it cannot authorize the making of a treaty with these people in their political character-treating it then as an agreement, the thing that troubles me is, supposing the Indians do not keep the agreement, supposing one-fourth of them do not wish to leave their homes in Colorado and go to Utah, and then suppose the Army of the United States is brought to bear upon them, is that the civilized and constitutional way of compelling the performance of a civil agreement, although it is contained in an act of Congress? There can be but one answer to that, I think, and that congress? There can be but one answer to that, I think, and that answer must be in the negative. And consequently if any part of these Indians do not wish to go to where this agreement agrees that they shall, take those who will not agree—and it is recognized that there may be a certain number who will not agree—if we should undertake to compel them to go by force, they would have the best of the argument; and if any one of them (as an Indian did a year or two ago in Nebraska or somewhere) should appeal to the courts for protection by a writ of habeas corpus or an action of trespass against the soldier who undertook to remove him by force, he would most certainly win, as it appears to me; whereas if we do this same thing under a treaty under the Constitution, such as the courts have held over and over again is a valid exertion of the constitutional treaty-making power, we are then dealing with these people as a nation and we compel them just like the people of any other nation to keep their obligations, and if they will not do it otherwise, by the only means that they are the second another these the obligations. that any nation has to compel another to keep its obligations, and that is by the exertion of power. In this way you get along.

But this does not proceed upon that theory. It proceeds upon the theory that this is not the exertion of the treaty-making power, but it is the exertion of the constitutional right of Congress to make a civil agreement with an association of individuals, call them what you like; and the consequence, I am afraid, is very likely to be, supposing this were ever so good an agreement and nobody is dissatisfied with it, and then we resort as I do not know but that we properly should to force, we should be in the wrong, and there would be trouble. But I pass from that because I know the Senate wishes to

Mr. INGALLS. I wish before the Senator does pass from that, that he would oblige me, and I presume he would also oblige the Senate, by stating whether he considers that the political relation of the Indians to the United States Government has been at all changed in consequence of the adoption of the act of 1871 declaring that no further treaties should be made?

further treaties should be made?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course it has not.

Mr. INGALLS. It has not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At least I do not think it has.

Mr. INGALLS. Then what is the objection to this agreement, whether you call it a treaty or an agreement? The Senator would undoubtedly admit that if what he says is true—and it agrees with my views—we must still treat with them as a domestic dependent nation having a political existence. So it appears to me to be immaterial whether we call this a treaty or an agreement; the fact remains the same

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know but that the fact does remain the same, only if it remains, as this thing is in substance a treaty within every principle of construction or interpretation that has ever existed until within two or three years, I respectfully submit that it is not within the competence of the Senate of the United States in its legislative character, as it is now acting, to make a treaty in this way, and that it cannot have the effect of a treaty and invoke the force and power of the Government of the United States to be exerted against a nation who will not keep its obligations with us, for the reason that neither they nor we have entered into an agreement in the way that the Constitution provides an agreement between nations shall be made. That is the thing that troubles me. I may be tions shall be made. That is the thing that troubles me. I may be entirely wrong; I do not expect to prevent the passage of this bill; and as far as I can see it in general it very likely may be a good thing, but I am not able to see my way clearly out of the dilemma which this method of doing business seems to involve. But as I say I do not wish to weart the Senate with any complaints about that.

Another thing I wish to say. I am afraid now, looking to the nature of this agreement itself, that it is likely to lead to trouble—and we wish to avoid trouble; that is the object of this—by the vagueness of some of its provisions. It speaks first about the Southern Utes, who are to be moved and settled "on the unoccupied agricultural lands on the La Plata River in Colorado and in New Mexico and such other unoccupied agricultural land as may be found in that vicinity." That is so vague that if the Indians are at all intelligent and the settlers are as hungry for the good lands there as they are supposed the settlers are as hungry for the good lands there as they are supposed to be, it immediately invites a collision of interests, opens one, for the reason that the country they are to occupy is not sufficiently clearly described. The Indians will say: "Here is a fine little meadow bottom, with good streams and good soil, &c., in the vicinity of the La Plata River." The settlers rush on and say: "It is not in the vicinity, it is not within this agreement at all." There you have a collision, and somebody will be killed or hurt very likely, for that seems to be the usual result of a collision with Indians; and then it is said that the Indians are to blame or somebody is to blame, and we have another row, and we shall have to get out of that by a fresh treaty or a fresh agreement.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I quite agree with him as to the vagueness of that particular statement; but if the Senator will read the subsequent sections of the bill he will observe that the committee have undertaken to remedy that defect, if it be a defect, by providing that the commissioners shall go there in person and superintend the selection of these lands in detail.

Mr. TELLER. But they must follow this agreement.
Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but I think under the provision of the subsequent sections there will be practically no difficulty on that

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly hope if this is to go through that there will not be any difficulty because it seems extremely unfortunate to try and get out of an existing difficulty by putting things into a condition that is to invite a fresh one. Of course nobody wishes to do that. I am very much afraid that we shall find that, instead of having one consolidated difficulty with these people on their present reservation, we shall have three or four separate ones in the new places, arising out of some of the things that I have suggested. The same remark applies to other divisions of these Indians and I need not repeat my remark about them.

Now we come to the question mentioned by the Senator from Ohie about the provision in this agreement with regard to taxation; and the answer to it made by the Senator from Iowa is that it has been decided by the Supreme Court that so long as the United States are the proprietors of the lands and they have not become the private and several property of the individual Indians, they are not the subject of State taxation. Well, take that to be the law. Now what does this agreement contained in this bill provide upon that subject? It says first as to the White River Utes that-

Allotments in severalty of said lands shall be made as follows.

Then it states the number of sections to the various heads of families and so forth. Then it comes to the next provision:

The said chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of Utes promise to obtain the consent of their people to the ession of the territory of their reservation as above on the following express conditions:

First. That the Government of the United States cause the lands so set spart to be properly surveyed and to be divided among the said Indians in severalty in the proportion hereinbefore mentioned, and to issue patents in fee-simple to them respectively therefor.

That language is perfectly clear and as far as I see is incapable of any two interpretations. The individual Indian as a person becomes the proprietor of a particular section of land. That having been done it proceeds:

The title to be acquired by the Indians shall not be subject to alienation, lease,

That I agree can be done, assuming the agreement to be valid at all, for the reason that if a person chooses to take a title limited by that condition, that is the nature of the estate that is created. It is a strict fee-tail or limitation in the nature of a fee-tail for the period of time mentioned, the time of twenty-five years. Then it goes on or subject to taxation of any character.

That, so far as the United States is concerned would be undoubtedly binding, if the agreement is binding at all, because it has been held, and rightly no doubt, that a sovereign power can renounce its sovereign right of taxation in particular respects; but this is intended I suppose to exclude State taxation, although it is not clear that it to the suppose to exclude State taxation, although it is not clear that it would be so construed; and that raises another difficulty, that the Indian is likely to be disappointed. What sort of a case have you got then? You have got the case where the United States executing this agreement has a particular section of land surveyed; that land is given to a particular Indian, and he receives a title to it by patent in fee-simple, saving the limitation that he shall not exert the power that the word "fee-simple" implies, taken without that limitation, the power of alienation-

Mr. ALLISON. For twenty-five years.
Mr. EDMUNDS. But it descends as a matter of course to his heirs during that time. It would not be, as I believe the old lawyers used to call it, immovable until the end of twenty-five years. If the particular patentee happened to die, the title would run to his heirs no doubt, unless there was a special limitation the other way. You have the case of a clear, separate individual ownership in fee of a piece of land in a particular State. Now is it possible that the Congress of the United States has a right to say that that State shall not tax that land when it is the individual property of a person? And if we have the right to say that as to a red man, have we not upon a sufficient motive a perfect right to say it as to a white man or a black man? Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There is no doubt about that if the tribal relations were dissolved unless these people are kept on what is called

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose they are kept on it. The explanation of my friend from Texas, in answer to the Senator from New York, is that exactly the reverse is the expectation, that they are to be individualized between white settlers, a white settler having one section and a red settler having the next, and so on.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is not the way I understand the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I understood the Senator from Texas

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont how it is any different from the exemption from taxation of the personal property owned by the individual? The individual Indian, though sustaining a tribal relation, within a State owns personal property; that personal property is not taxable by the State as the same personal property would be of a white man. Is it not perfectly competent for the Government and the tribe to agree that, while the tribal relation continues, still there shall be such a change in the tenure of land that it shall have this qualified capacity for descent, this qualified individual convership instead of remaining in the tribe?

shall have this qualined capacity for descent, this qualined individual ownership instead of remaining in the tribe?

Mr. TELLER. What portion of the tribal relation exists?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I take it there can be no reasonable doubt that where an Indian tribe continues to be an Indian tribe and continues to reside on its Indian lands by virtue of its Indian title to lands that the United States in setting up the State of Colorado (which is this case) have not turned over to the jurisdiction of that State in any case) have not turned over to the jurisdiction of that State in any way, the State has no political power over that reservation at all except as it respects the relations of its own citizens to the Indians, and then perhaps it would be the courts of the United States that would have to settle them; and probably that is the existing state of the law. But this bill does not provide that this limitation as to taxation shall be dependent upon the continued existence and consolidated character of the tribal relation or the places where they are to settle. It does not provide that they are all to settle in one place, but they are to go to a certain region of country and so they are to settle down together, just as if the United States in order to encourage immigration from Ireland, where there is great distress, should provide, as it might probably lawfully do, that if a body of Irishmen from the county of Cork to the number of two thousand should come and enter upon the public lands in the State of Colorado and settle in one place, at this very spot we are now speaking of, on the come and enter upon the public lands in the State of Colorado and settle in one place, at this very spot we are now speaking of, on the Gunnison River, they should have patents in fee-simple for one hundred and sixty acres of land each; that they should live all together, and form a community if you please; make it as strong as you like in that way; they should not alienate for twenty-five years, and they should not be taxed by the State for twenty-five years; would that do? Nobody would contend that it would. It is only just so long as the nature of this Indian tribal condition, its original nature as the prigringle political community that the courts and Congress have all original political community that the courts and Congress have all agreed had a certain kind of title of their own in their political character to the soil, exists and continues, that the right to escape taxation, as it seems to me, can exist.

This bill is not limited even to such a contingency as that, so far as

This bill is not limited even to such a contingency as that, so far as I can see; but it says that, without regard to the question whether these Indians continue to be a tribe or not, every individual of them in his personal character shall have a certain piece of land that shall be his in fee-simple, and that the State shall not tax it for twenty-five years, or shall never tax it, which would be exactly the same thing in principle. The restraint of alienation, I think my friend from Massachusetts will not admit, would not change the taxation principle; that agreement might be made with anybody; we might provide for the homestead settlers and the pre-emptors and all others who take public lands in the United States that they should not alienate them for twenty-five years; but that would not help the

Then there is another question—

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator leaves that question I should like to call his attention to one fact, if he will allow me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, with pleasure; I am only seeking for

Mr. ALLISON. The question of taxation is a difficult one, which the committee considered as well as it could. If the Senator will take the bill together, he will see that the tribal relation, in contemtake the bill together, he will see that the tribal relation, in contemplation of law and in contemplation of the decision of the Supreme Court, does continue for a period of twenty-five years, and at the end of twenty-five years the tribal relation may be dissolved; but until that time the whole theory of the bill is that this taxation provision shall continue twenty-five years, that these annuities shall be paid for that period, that at the end of twenty-five years they may be capitalized and paid over to them; and the schools are provided for in the same way. Every provision in this bill looks to the ending of the tribal relation at the end of twenty-five years, not before.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator now if he will name any single thing that looks to maintaining the tribal relation.

Mr. ALLISON. The whole bill looks to that.

Mr. TELLER. Simply because you give that money?

Mr. ALLISON. One word more. This question of course is not without its practical difficulties; but if the reservation in reference to taxation is not made here, it is utterly useless, in my judgment, to to taxation is not made here, it is utterly useless, in my judgment, to allow Indians to have lands at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is another question.

Mr. ALLISON. I know it is. I know how unpleasant it is to a speaker to be interrupted in this way, but I have occupied very little the attention of the Senate in this debate and I hope the Senator from Vermont will excuse me now. We did suppose that the Supreme Court had decided substantially that as long as the tribal relation continued the State could not tax the Indian lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I will go on. The Senator from Iowa says that the theory of this bill is that the original character of these people shall continue for twenty-five years. That may be the theory, but I am unable to see it written by the best light I can read it in in the bill itself. That may be the idea, but it does not appear to me to be expressed. There is an additional clause on this taxation question, that these lands shall continue free from taxation not only twenty-five years but "until such time thereafter as the President may see fit to remove the restriction, which shall be incorporated in the patents when received." porated in the patents when received."

Now turn to section 4, to which my attention has been called by my friend from Minnesota, [Mr. McMillan:]

That upon the completion of said allotments-

Which I take it refers to these and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every of the said Indians shall be subject to the provisions of section 1977 of the Revised Statutes and to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside, with the right to sue and be sued in the courts thereof: Provided, That neither their lands nor personal property shall be subject to taxation or execution upon the judgment, order, or decree of any court for the period named in the above-recited agreement.

That does not look at all tribal to me. I must say it looks personal, it looks civil, and it looks like the ordinary and suitable, so far as the United States is concerned, disposal by Congress of its right in these lands, a disposal by the tribe of Indians of their right in the lands, because their right is a common right. They have no such law, or tradition, or usage as holding their land in severalty. They are like our forefathers were in that respect a long time back, having law, or tradition, or usage as holding their land in severalty. They are like our forefathers were in that respect a long time back, having only common interests and common rights in their lands. Everybody is free everywhere; but this looks exactly the other way, and so far as it respects the best civilization of these Indians it probably ought to look the other way. They probably ought to be absorbed, as fast as it can be done suitably, into the general body of the people of the States, subject to the laws, just as this fourth section provides.

So it seems to me the bill is looking rather to the dissolution of the tribal relation, and its dissolution immediately upon the issuing of these patents in fee-simple as it respects these persons; and the circumstance that we provide them schools does not guard that any. We may provide for schools for white settlers in any place if we think the public interest requires them, by appropriating money for that purpose and appointing the agents to carry it out.

think the public interest requires them, by appropriating money for that purpose and appointing the agents to carry it out.

Now, I pass to another question to which I invite the attention of my friend from Texas, and I shall be very brief. This agreement is to take effect, as I believe, on the proviso that "three-fourths of the adult male members of said confederated bands shall agree to and sign the agreement." What I should like to know is whether that three-fourths is three-fourths of the whole number of all the adult three-fourths is three-fourths of the whole number of all the adult males comprised in the three divisions of these people that are mentioned on page 4, taken en masse, all together, or whether it is three-fourths of each particular band or separate community as they seem to be spoken of here as it respects them. In other words, supposing that three-fourths of the Southern Utes agree to this—

Mr. COKE. Three-fourths of the entire number of separate and confederated tribes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I suggest with great respect to my friend from Texas that it would be better to say so.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of this provision.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision is exactly the provision of the treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose it is, I am trying to find out what it means, and it does not aid me a bit to say you can find the same language used ten years ago. What I want to know is, what construction is to be put on this language in respect of affecting these three divisions of these people.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator wants my humble opinion about it, which does not seem to have much influence on his mind or judgment, I can say to him that I believe the language of the treaty is such that I can say to him that I believe the language of the treaty is such that three-fourths of this tribe of Indians is sufficient to make this aliena-three-fourths of this tribe of Indians is sufficient to make this alienation. That is what I believe.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I suggest with great respect, to avoid any misunderstanding with the Indians, and it can be done in two or three words, that this act or agreement shall be made to say so in language that is not capable of two constructions. Taking that to be the construction that it ought to bear and can be made to bear, if you want it that way, then we have got the provision in this form: that in respect of the Southern Utes, who it seems are now living by themselves on a separate part of the present twelve million acres, although not a single one of them may be willing to enter into this agreement, although it may be that not a single one of them has committed any wrong against the United States or any of its people which would justify us in expelling them from the place where they now are, may disagree to this treaty entirely and not one of them sign it, if there are enough in the other two bands in the other two settlements to make three-fourths of the whole, then these poor southern fellows have got to go nolens volens. Is that right?

Mr. ALLISON. But as a matter of fact the Southern Utes comprise one-half of the tribe.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then if the Southern Utes comprise one-half the tribe, I have taken for my illustration the largest division when I might have taken the smallest one. I did not know how the fact was, but it illustrates the question precisely.

Mr. TELLER. The Southern Utes number thirteen hundred out of twenty-five hundred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then take the next, that unpronounceable middle place, where there happens to be a small settlement of these peo-ple. Suppose not one of those is willing to sign this agreement, are they to be expelled and sent to another country to live, against their will, because these two separate settlements on either side of them, the Southern Utes and the White River Utes, think it best to go? the Southern Utes and the White River Utes, think it best to go it is merely put the question. I put it to the committee, whose sentiments of justice I have no doubt are just as strong as mine, that it is a thing worth thinking about, whether it would be better not to compel any one of these separate divisions to go unless three-fourths of that division agreed to go, rather than to compel them to go against their unanimous opposition simply because there were enough votes or signers in the other two divisions to make three-fourths. I regard that as worth thinking of; but at this time of day I do not wish to

I am not able, with these provisions in the bill, to see my way clear to vote for it, as much as I sympathize with the object the committee has in view, and as much as I might hope that it would prove an advantage over the existing state of things.

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall vote for the bill, because I think the consequence of any failure to enter into some agreement now would be hazardous to us and might result in great disasters to the people on the frontier. There is one provision of the bill with reference to the relation which these individual Indians will hold to the tribe or to the law to which I wish to call attention. Section 4 provides:

That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every of the said Indians shall be subject to the provisions of section 1977 of the Revised Statutes and to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside, with the right to sue and be sued in the courts thereof.

Then follows the proviso, which is the provision specially to which I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee:

Provided, That neither their lands nor personal property shall be subject to taxation or execution upon the judgment, order, or decree of any court for the period named in the above-recited agreement.

This section, independent of the question of taxation altogether, confers upon an individual Indian the right to sue and be sued in the courts, and then it exempts all his property, personal and real, from execution upon any judgment which may be rendered by the courts. Was that intended here by the agreement?

Mr. COKE. Suppose an Indian gets possession of personal property belonging to somebody else, a white man, an action of detinue or replevin can be brought against that Indian, and the property recovered from him. That is an instance in which the section would be executed out of his own.

be operative, although no judgment could be executed out of his own property.

Mr. McMILLAN. The section provides that he may sue and be sued in all the courts of the State or Territory, yet in no court, State or otherwise, can the judgment be executed against his property.

Mr. COKE. I cannot hear the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.]

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it is a very important amendment; we ought to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I only want to occupy one moment to say that so far as I am concerned I have no objection to the first portion of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama down to the word "sever-

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the objection to the second portion?

Mr. ALLISON. The objection to the second is that it leaves open for two years the right of certain portions of these Indians, under the influence of people, to go anywhere within this reservation which they cede now to the United States, and which will be occupied undoubtedly by settlers in various ways. It enables these Indians within two years to go in anywhere and make a settlement. The treaty provides that all lands held in common by these Indians may be ceded to the United States by a vote of three-fourths, as provided by the treaty, so that when the treaty is complied with in this respect I submit to the Senator from Alabama that we have complied literally and perfectly with our treaty obligations. I think it will open up new questions, new difficulties, and new troubles with the white settlers who are to go in. I appeal to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] to state if the bill should finally be adopted whether that provision would not be objectionable. provision would not be objectionable.

Mr. TELLER. I believe that would be the effect of it as far as the second portion of the amendment is concerned. The first part is undoubtedly proper, I admit, but the second would leave it all un-

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from lows cambo retrain from carried this a treaty, after all.

Mr. TELLER. That is what it is.

Mr. ALLISON. I was speaking of the treaty of 1868.

Mr. EATON. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama to withdraw the second branch of his amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not propose to withdraw it. The Senate may defeat it if they choose.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the first part will be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for a division of the question?

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that upon a division of the question

Senators are willing to accept the first part.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for a division of the question !

Mr. ALLISON. I do, so that we may agree to the first part of the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is divisible, the first part ending with the word "severalty." It will be reported by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That nothing in this act contained, or in the agreement herein set forth, or in the amendments herein proposed to said agreement, shall be so construed as to compel any Ute Indian to remove from any lands that he or she shall claim in severalty.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the mover of the amendment, who made the call for the yeas and nays, that he does not desire the yeas and nays on the first branch, and I hope there will be unanimous consent to dispense with them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered and can only be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the call for the yeas and nays may only be considered applicable to the second division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to dispensing with the call of the yeas and nays on this branch of the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. I have none.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to this branch of the amendment.

The first branch of the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the remaining branch of the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Or to deprive any such Indian who refuses to sign said agreement of his or her right to select a tract of land for agricultural purposes at any time within two years from the date of this act, under the stipulations of any existing treaty with the Ute Indians, in any part of the reservation now occupied by any of the confederated tribes of the Ute Indians in the State of Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this proposition, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the ecretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan.]

The roll-call was concluded.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BAILEY. On this question my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

So the second branch of the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to strike out section 7 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be reported. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 7. That the provisions of title 28 of the Revised Statutes shall extend over and be applicable to every allotment of land provided for in the foregoing agreement, and to the administration of the affairs of said Indians, so far as said provisions can be made applicable thereto.

Mr. MORGAN. I merely desire to say that the last words in that section, "so far as said provisions can be made applicable thereto," merely put the tribe and the individual Indians under the personal government of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CONKLING. The effect is, if the Senator will allow me, to make a reservation of every one of these allotments, as I understand it.

Mr. MORGAN. I know it makes a reservation of each allotment; so we are to have the country spotted over, partly under Federal law, and partly under State law, according to each eighty-acre or quarter-section tract, as the case may be. I think it would be very much better to leave these Indians under the control of title 28, just as they are now, so long as the tribal relation continues. When the tribal relation is dissolved, of course the various sections of title 28 of the relation is dissolved, of course the various sections of title 28 of the Revised Statutes, about one hundred and thirty in number, have no application to them. If we strike out the seventh section, then the authority of the law of the United States, as it is at present administered with reference to this tribe, will continue over them until their tribal relation is dissolved and they become citizens of the United States and of the State of Colorado—for I believe that is the effect—when a different system of course will prevail. I can see no use of the seventh section of the bill except to put each individual Indian under the personal control of the Secretary of the Interior. If there is any other use that can be made of it, I should be glad if the chairman of the committee would explain it. man of the committee would explain it.

Mr. COKE. The object of the committee in putting this section in the bill, making title 28 of the Revised Statutes applicable so far as it can be made applicable, was, as the bill provides for agents among these Indians to see to the schools which it is provided shall be maintained there, to pay the annuities, &c., if there should be portions of title 28 of the Revised Statutes for the government of the Indian country and the Indians that could be made applicable without conflicting with other portions of the bill, it would possibly be beneficial to the Indians to have that much care from the Interior Department extended over them. To what extent that title is applicable or may be made applicable we have not undertaken to define in the bill; but we have hoped that some exercise of discretion by the Secretary of the Interior could be had under that title in the interest and for the benefit of the Indians.

benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, as the honorable Senator says the committee have not defined that in the bill, I think that the Senate has a right to ask him to give some definition here of it, so that we can understand it, for I do not understand it.

Mr. COKE. Simply the discretion, if there be any at all, is left to the Department. It will be simply a matter of construction. The Secretary of the Interior will take this law, if it be enacted into a law, with its provisions in his mind, and he will take the provisions of title 28 of the Revised Statutes, and comparing the two he can see whether or not under the provisions of title 28 he can, without con-whether or not under the provisions of title 28 he can, without conflicting with this law, exercise any more authority, and he will exercise it if he sees proper, if he finds that he has power to do so.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the very point of objection that I make.

The laws of the United States, as they now stand applicable to Indian tribes, do not give the Secretary of the Interior the right of personal government over each individual Indian; but the object of the amendment that is proposed to these laws in section 7, as the chairman of the committee avows, is to place each individual Indian, as he receives his allotment, under the personal government of the Secretary of the Interior. That violates all treaty obligations with this tribe. It violates the existing laws of the United States, or at least it is contrary in spirit to them. I think that the purpose of the committee can be very much better accomplished by striking out this section and leaving these Indians under the charge of the laws of the United States as they exist so long as they maintain their tribal relations to each other.

I move to strike out the section so as to leave the laws to bear upon

I move to strike out the section so as to leave the laws to bear upon them as before until they cease to be a tribe. That is all of it.

Mr. COKE. I will say to the Senator that the presumption certainly is that an officer will discharge his duty and will not violate the law. That is certainly the legal presumption. If it is improper for the Secretary of the Interior to exercise any authority or any discretion after giving the provisions of this bill, if it should be enacted, full effect, he will exercise none. If he can find no margin for the exercise of discretion in behalf of the Indians, giving this bill, if it passes, full effect, then the presumption is that he will exercise none; but if there is such a margin, and he finds that that margin can be used beneficially for the Indians, I simply desire by inserting this section that he shall have the authority to use it for their benefit.

Mr. MORGAN. I admit the presumption that when the law prescribes a duty to a public officer he will honestly and justly discharge it. There is a very great difference, however, between that presump-

it. There is a very great difference, however, between that presumption and leaving to the discretion of that officer what shall be the law. The bill allows the Secretary of the Interior to apply to each Indian upon each reservation or location what he considers to be the law that is applicable to him, leaving him under the personal, irresponsible government of the Secretary of the Interior, uncontrolled by law except as his discretion is a law unto himself. That is the situation. I prefer to strike it out, having the law apply to the Indians instead of his discretion.

Mr. COKE. The Senator does not state the proposition as I under-

Mr. MORGAN. I state it as I understand it.
Mr. COKE. I do not understand it in that way.
Mr. TELLER. The trouble with this matter is that the committee do not know whether the tribal relation is to be dissolved or not.

Mr. MORGAN. That is it.
Mr. TELLER. If the tribal relation is not dissolved then these

Arr. I.E.LLER. If the tribal relation is not dissolved then these laws are in force.

Mr. ALLISON. They are in force now. Then this reassertion of the power of title 28 can do no harm.

Mr. TELLER. That raises the question of the right of Congress to legislate over these Indians after the tribal relation is dissolved and they have become citizens of our State. Whenever these Indians and they have become citizens of our State. Whenever these Indiansgo upon their one hundred and sixty acres of land and have got in their crops, as our friends anticipate they will, and they go out to sell them, this law steps in, as the Senator from Missouri said, and provides that they shall not sell them except under the direction of the agent. If they are to remain members of the tribe then the law is over them now. If they are not to remain members of the tribe, then Congress has not the power to pass this provision; it ought to be annulled. While they are members of the tribe let the law stand, and when they cease to be members of the tribe let them be amena-ble to all the laws, subject to all the conditions of society, to which white men are subject.

Mr. ANTHONY and others. Question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out the seventh section of the bill.

amendment striking out the seventh section of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. If it is the desire of the committee to sit the bill out I want to say that I do not propose to delay action upon it, but I have several amendments that I propose to offer to the bill, and even the risk of incommoding and discommoding the Senate will not dissuade me from offering them. I think the committee perhaps had better not attempt to "sit it out," However, if they do, I do not ask anything on my part, only I notice an impatience on the part of some Senators, and they may have labored under the impression that we were about to close this bill. I have several amendments that are important and ought to be considered, and if they are not considered. I shall at least present them, and very likely I shall take a little time on them.

Mr. COKE. I desire to say that the Senate has heard a very full discussion of this bill, and the friends of it are determined, if they can, to put it to a final vote before adjournment to-day.

Mr. TELLER. I am not asking anything on my account.

Mr. EATON. One word, if my friend will permit me.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. It is very important that there should be an executive of few winters.

want it ended; I am willing to stay here until nine o'clock, if necessary; but I shall be compelled to ask an executive session in a very few minutes, because it is very important that there should be one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can vote on the bill after the executive ses-

Mr. CONKLING. I doubt very much, and I say this in the best of Air. CONKLING. I doubt very much, and I say this in the best of faith to the Senator from Texas, whether it is worth while for him to strive for a vote upon the bill this evening. I have taken no part in the debate; I have tried to profit by it; and I should be uncandid if I concealed that I am greatly confused and perplexed over the bill. Within a short time, an hour or two, there has sprung up in the Senate a debate touching particular provisions, which to me is quite as instructive as the general discussion has been. Nobody seems to be debating for delay; and I suggest to the Senator from Texas that the bill is as likely to receive the assent of the Senate, and I think more likely to be defensible as it shall be finally adopted, if a fair opportunity is given for that practical discussion in detail of particular provisions which proceeds now. I do not believe that that can be time lost.

I confess I have great doubt myself which way to vote upon all these provisions taken together; I cannot doubt that some of them may be radically improved, and I hope they will be; but if now, at half after five, without notice of that fact having been given, and after, as everybody must see, a considerable number of Senators have gone, we are to "sit out" the bill, as the saying is, it will have the effect I suppose to constrain most Senators against making any serious attempt to modify or improve the bill. I would suggest to the Senator from Texas to let it go over, unless he thinks there is some indication that somebody wants to debate it for delay. I see no such indication myself. I do not know that I shall have personally a word to say about it.

Mr. COKE. So far as I am concerned I would willingly according

Mr. COKE. So far as I am concerned I would willingly acquiesce in the desire of the Senator on the subject; but the bill should be brought to a vote to-day, if possible. We are indebted to the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] for having the bill before the Senate in advance of the Geneva award bill, which was laid aside temporarily because he did not suppose that near the time would be consumed that has already been consumed in considering this bill. He was pressing the committee this evening, and has done so repeatedly, to make no concession, but to get a vote if possible on this bill to-night, because he says he must have the Geneva award bill up on Monday.

Mr. CONKLING. It is not often that the Senate finds itself in so rigorous a dilemma as this. An argument, I think I may say the argument, in favor of this bill is, "Take it or take your share of responment, in favor of this bill is, "Take it or take your snare of responsibility of what may happen if you do not take this, because nothing else is proposed." That is rather an unusual exigency, an extreme in legislation. It is not quite like saying to a man, "Your money or your life," but it comes near enough to be very embarrassing to one who tries to understand the bill and his duty upon it and has great doubt after that trial. If to that is added the urgency which compels us in the absence of a considerable portion of the Senate and with want of time for that practical discussion of the details of the bill which ought always in respect of an important measure to precede final action, we are to be compelled to record ourselves, it increases the hardship felt by those who, unlike distinguished Senators around me, are not clear in their minds, but wish to be so.

As to the Geneva award bill I feel, I think, my share of interest in having it considered; and I will join the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, from which it comes, in any effort to hasten that consideration; yet I think that the honorable Senator from Ohio and any other member of the Senate would shrink somewhat from insisting, if he could, by his individual persuasion, that a bill of this sort, important as it is, important as is the series of bills of which, if I mistake not, this is but one, should, for the sake of anticipating by an hour or two or three the moment when another bill shall be taken up, be hurried to a conclusion which might be

I do not think, Mr. President, I shall be tempted to vex the ear of the Senate with any observations at large upon this bill. I will say, however, that I think, as little as I understand it, I should be able to point out a good many particulars in respect of which no single Senpoint out a good many particulars in respect of which no single Senator, if he is a lawyer, would be willing to stand up and alone take the responsibility; and that whether you deal with it as a treaty, whether you consider it a bargain, as I have heard it called, or an agreement less than a treaty, or whether you regard it only as an exertion of that unbridled statute-making power with which the Supreme Court has said you may destroy and therefore modify,—regard it as you will, sympathize, as you must, with the emergency which induces it, and then, I repeat, I think any man, reading only casually these provisions and with no more information than I have, can point out incongruities, repugnancies, vague uncertainties, dangers in view out incongruities, repugnancies, vague uncertainties, dangers in view of what has been said, such as hardly any single Senator would be willing to say was the best product of his judgment in this regard. And certainly seventy-six men, seventy-five of whom are so competent as the members of the Senate, ought to be able to produce something which will not leave open not only to different, but contrary, constructions, one as well as the other, the very meaning of the bill. It has been said, I believe, that if thirty-nine bishops were to sit down separately and write each his construction of the thirty-nine articles, it would be doubtful whether they would agree. I feel quite confident that if thirty-nine Senators, or seventy-six, were to sit down and write out each his understanding of the true intent and meaning of some of these provisions, no supposable doctrine of chances would permit us to hope that they would come to the same

The Senator from Texas says that the true meaning of the bill, (indeed I heard another Senator say that was one of its beauties, and I had found it somewhat picturesque, although that particular feature had not struck me,) is that, whoever in the end is to have the jus disponendi of this matter, and I know who that is, the Kriss-Kringle who at last is to divide out and dispense among these Indians the benefits of this scheme, is, of his own motion, to say not only as to families and individuals and different members of the same family, whether they shall be located near each other or whether they shall be located far apart, whether their neighbors shall be Indians or whether they shall be interspersed with whites. Mr. President, when the infinite goodness, mercy, and wisdom of this emissary or agent, whoever he may

Mr. COKE. Five commissioners, five sworn men.
Mr. CONKLING. Five commissioners. When this five-headed agent, which goes out to lay off this land into kingdoms and possessions, comes to allot to the individuals what they shall have, distributing them among the whites, as I heard one Senator say it was proposed, and it was that he said that was one of the beauties of the bill, then each one of these allotments is to become an Indian reservation and is to become subject to the blessings of police and other things prescribed in a title of the Revised Statutes comprising, I believe, five voluminous chapters. I believe it is there somewhere made unlawful to sell spirituous liquor upon an Indian reservation. What an effectual munous chapters. I believe it is there somewhere made unlawful to sell spirituous liquor upon an Indian reservation. What an effectual municipal regulation that will be! Here one Indian has a farm of two hundred or three hundred acres; if he is the head of a family three hundred and twenty, I believe; next to him is a white man, or he is surrounded on every side by white men; but he has his farm of three hundred and twenty acres. It is illegal, it is penal, it is therefore vastly improper, to sell distilled or fermented liquor upon that three hundred and twenty acres, because it is an Indian reservation, and it subjects this Indian, fleet of foot as most of them are, to the necessity of crossing the road, if there is one, or climbing a division fence, if there is one, to get upon the next farm where it is perfectly lawful to sell all the beverages known to any organization, political or Indian! That is very odd. It is very odd, in view of the fact so often illustrated, that, in respect of the Indians more than in respect of any other community belonging to either of the three races on this continent, the need of regulations securing abstinence from strong drink has been found urgently important.

And so I might go on with the provisions and the consequences, such as a Frenchman would call very bizarre, growing out of this notion that these lands are to be distributed between individuals, notion that these lands are to be distributed between individuals, whites and reds to alternate. But, as I said, I do not mean to be led into a discussion of this bill. It is vastly better understood, no doubt, by other Senators than by me. All I hope is to learn enough about it to find out how I shall vote and to see the united judgment of the Senate improve, if it can improve, some of its features. With that view, I do not think it worth while, without notice having previously been given, to attempt to hold on by main force and have this bill put through now, if I may so say, in the shape it is.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, this is the sixth day, I believe, that we have consumed on this bill. I have frequently given notice that I was going to attempt to bring it to a final vote. I find that a notice of that sort is of no avail, and I ask now unanimous consent of the Senate that this bill shall be taken up Monday morning after the morning hour and that it shall be voted on finally during Monday sometime.

Mr. BLAINE, (to Mr. Coke.) Specify a particular hour, if you are going to have an agreement.

Mr. COKE. Before adjournment.

Mr. BLAINE. That does not need unanimous consent. A majority and ot that. Why ask unanimous consent for that?

Mr. COKE. I make the necessary motion that the bill be taken up

Monday morning, and the final vote be had on it before the adjournment on Monday next.

Mr. BLAINE. That you cannot do.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Texas will allow me a moment, let me inquire what is the objection to his asking and obtaining, as I think he can, unanimous consent that during the session on Monday this bill shall be finally disposed of?

That is what I ask.

Mr. COKE. That is what I ask.
Mr. COKE. I do not think anybody will object to that.
Mr. COKE. I make that request of the Senate.
Mr. HOAR. Why will not the Senator ask for a particular hour?
This bill has been debated for three or four days.

Mr. INGALLS. Seven consecutive days.

Mr. HOAR. Seven consecutive days; and after being debated and propositions made to amend it in most important particulars, the Chair puts the question, shall the bill be reported to the Senate? And then, at half past five o'clock in the afternoon, for the first time, certain very serious and ingenious, and I am not prepared to say entirely very unsound objections, are stated to the bill. It seems to me that if the Senate is going to doom itself to sit here on Monday until we may expect that same thing to happen then, we shall be here until midnight on Monday. Why should we not deal with it now, if we midnight on Monday. Why should we not deal with it now, if we have got to have a long session over it?

Mr. COKE. I am ready to stay now.

Mr. HOAR. If we can fix by agreement that one hour, two hours, three hours, or four hours shall be given to debate, and then that at four o'clock or half past four we shall take the vote, I will consent to it. I do not see that the other suggestion helps us at all.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, as I happened to be occupying the floor at the hour of half after five and attention is called to that hour. I must infer that the hour appears from Messeshests at hour, I must infer that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, at least inclusively, points to me in the statement he has made.

Mr. HOAR. I had no reference to the Senator from New York as an individual at all.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I beg to say that before half after five I heard an honorable Senator near me, the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] announce that he had himself a number of amendments which he intended to offer and have a vote upon, and I heard him two or three days ago on two occasions indicate, I suppose in gene-ral terms, in the arguments he made, the nature of those amend-ments. Therefore, the Senator from Massachusetts must see that it is not upon the latest suggestion made by anybody just now for the first time, that this proposition arises. On the contrary, the Senator from Colorado tells me of a number of amendments, his own and others, substantial in character, to be voted on; and the question is whether that shall be done intelligently or otherwise.

Now, I have no care whether an hour is fixed or not, except that when an hour is fixed, the time is usually occupied in discussion and amendments are proposed which we are compelled to vote upon at last without debate; whereas if we have an understanding that we shall vote on Monday, and as early as possible, we get the bill disposed of during that day; and if any Senator wants to explain an amendment which he offers toward the close of the consideration of the bill he has the opportunity to do so. That is all.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this bill was taken up for consideration on the 1st day of April. I do not know that there is anything significant about that date. To-day is the 9th day of the same month. Omitting Sunday and one day over which we adjourned, this is the seventh continuous day of debate. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has given notice that on Tuesday next he proposes to call up the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections upon the case of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Kellogg.] I believe that if this debate is proceeded with to-night we can finish the bill in the course of an hour at the outside, and considering the amount of time that has been consumed, the very urgent public business that is pressing for attention, the notice that has been given of a privileged question that will consume undoubtedly a considerable portion of the following week, if not all of it, and, beyond all that, the very serious necessity of early action being taken on this measure unless there is to be difficulty in Colorado, I think that the Senate owes it to itself and to the subject to proceed with this matter to-night and to finish it. Every Senator knows that if this debate begins again on Monday morning it will continue with just as much fluency, with just as much ingenuity, and with just as much ability as it has proceeded to-day; and there will be just as many amendments offered there will be just as many amendments offered, there will be just as many objections propounded; and so it would be day after day and day after day till "the last syllable of recorded time," for the Indian question is to the Senate like a red rag to a bull, every person seems disposed to jump at it and every person has the ability to cope with it.

Of course I am only one member of the committee, but it appears to me that we have spent time enough on this subject, and that the further debate upon Indian policy and as to Indian administration ought to be postponed until the Indian appropriation bill comes before the Senate, which will give an opportunity for the delivery of all speeches that have not yet been propounded to the Senate. I hope there will be no adjournment until the bill is disposed of.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, when it was suggested that the Geneva award bill should be laid aside informally and this subject taken up for consideration, it was understood that, at most, two days would be sufficient to complete it. It was urged that it was of the utmost importance that it should be considered without delay on account of the necessity of taking some measure to secure that section of the country particularly concerned from further Indian depredations. This morning, when the Senate consented to adjourn over from to-day until Monday, it was with a clear and distinct under-standing that this measure would be closed to-day, and that on Monday the regular order, which will take its position again as soon as this que tion is disposed of, would come up and be considered. I am satisfied that if now, at this time, we consent that this measure go over until Monday, the middle of next week will not find it con-

I simply judge of the future by the past; and, therefore, I do not think I am mistaken when I say that if the Senate decline this evening to go on and conclude this measure (as it was certainly understood this morning it would be concluded or we should not have passed over to-morrow without a session) it will be at least the mid-dle of next week before the regular order, for which this was laid aside, can be resumed.

I hope, therefore, that there will be no adjournment until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this bill has taken about as much time, I believe, as the Geneva award bill has so far-about the same. It is infinitely of more importance to the nation than the Geneva award bill; it involves a great deal more money than the Geneva award bill; but it is not like some other bills where somebody is wait-ing here to get hold of money as is the case with the Geneva award bill. The Geneva award bill has waited a good while; it can wait a little longer.

Now, I want to say a word as to the threat that is held up over the Senate. Nine-tenths of those who have expressed themselves upon this question have announced that they propose to violate the Constitution and the law of the land, and to outrage the people of Colorado, as I say, because there is impending danger of an Indian war. Does not the Senate know that that condition of affairs has existed since last October? Does anybody here pretend to say that there is any more probability of an outbreak between this and Monday night or between this and Saturday night of next week than there has been heretofore?

Why, Mr. President, when the people down there on the border petitioned the Administration here for troops, it was said by this Secretary: "I have these Indians so perfectly in hand, I have them under such absolute control, that although the six hundred or eight hundred people living on the edge of the border"—where they had a right to be and where re-enforcements could not be got to them in a right these reactions and the said "you may rest recognize these." week if there was trouble—he said, "you may rest peacefully there; you may rest secure that no harm will come to you." Now all at once we are told that these Indians are prepared to grasp their rifles and sail in and there will be an Indian war. Mr. President, that is for effect on the Senate. That is why it is pressed from outside. It is said: "Now you must take hold and dispose of it at once." There is no more pressing necessity than there was sixty days ago—not a particle. The Indians cannot go to war now. It is winter up there, and it is the dead of winter up there; that whole country is covered with snow, and the grass has not started and will not start for sixty days yet in that vicinity. There is plenty of time to dispose of this bill.

It is an important bill: it involves intricate and difficult questions of law, and I have some amendments that I propose to put on it.

Since I have been in the Senate I think it will be admitted that I have taken as little time as anybody, and have been as courteous in not occupying time when anybody else wanted the floor, and I have always been loath to stand up and say anything when anybody else wanted to speak, or at any unreasenable hour of the day; but I do not propose, if it takes until to-morrow morning, to submit without these amendments being brought to the attention of the Senate, and without the senate hor incare when That is any right as a Senate. out the Senate hearing me upon them. That is my right as a Senaout the Senate hearing me upon them. That is my right as a Senator, and I do not propose to yield it to anybody under the plea that Senators want their dinner or that they want to go to bed, or anything else. I am here to do a duty that I owe to my people and a duty that I owe to myself and to the country, and I propose to stay here and present these amendments that I believe, as I believe I live, ought to be put on this bill, and which, if put on the bill and the bill pass, will in my judgment infinitely improve the bill. I have not offered amendments and do not propose to offer any to load down the bill. I am opposed to it. I believe it is bad, and I believe that just what Senators say they are attempting to escape will be the result of the passage of the bill as it is. I believe it is in our power to make it more acceptable and to possibly so amend it that the object which is sought by everybody, I will admit—and I question many amotives in various for it, way he accomplished the object which is sought by everybody, I will admit—and I question no man's motives in voting for it—may be accomplished.

Is it an unusual thing for a question of this magnitude to take seven or eight days? Why, Mr. President, I have heard a question of rules debated here for two whole days. I have heard questions not involving five cents, nor any great principle at all, discussed a whole day and a night here. This bill is of importance to the people of the United States; it is of importance to the people of Colorado; and I think the Senting over the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the state of the people of the contract of the people of the people of the contract of the people of the think the Senate owes it to itself, and every man who proposes to vote for this bill owes it to himself, to examine and see whether he cannot make it so that this experiment may be a success, if it is at-

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Colorado yield for a motion for an executive session?

Mr. TELLER. I will.
Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me we have no prospect of getting through with this bill to-night. The Senator from Colorado has indicated that he has several amendments to offer. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of excutive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive busi-

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope we shall go on with this business to-night. If the Senator from Colorado has any amendments to offer that are proper and right, let us take them up and act on them. I have re-frained from saying anything on this subject, although I expected to speak upon it as I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs; but I am now willing to go on and vote on the bill without saying another word. There has been plenty said, and we can tell whether it is our duty to say whether we are for the bill or not, for having worked on the bill as long as we did in committee, and having heard as much as we have heard in the Senate, I think we ought

Mr. ALLISON. May I be permitted to make a suggestion to the Senator from Colorado? He tells us that he has a number of amendments. Those amendments are not in print. I ask now that he submit those amendments to the Senate and let them be printed; that then this bill go over, and that on Monday at five o'clock, by unanimous consent, we commence voting.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that be understood.

Mr. ALLISON. And earlier, of course, if we can reach a vote.

Mr. GARLAND. I want to understand what the unanimous consent amounts to. I have no objection to this arrangement, but I want to understand what the operation of the agreement is if the consent is given now. I have seen such agreements that did not amount to anything. I am willing to vote now or then, but I want to understand the effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I have named five o'clock on Monday. I do not care to name any hour, but let the understanding be that on Monday we shall not adjourn until a final vote is reached.

Mr. BLAINE. Do not put it in that way. That throws us into a night session. Have the hour specified.

Mr. GARLAND. I have not yielded the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas has the

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a point of order. I am quite unable to understand what the Senator from Arkansas is saying.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must request Senators to take their seats. Conversation must stop in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. GARLAND. The point is this: I have seen here repeatedly, where it was apparently understood that a vote should be taken at a certain time, and that time came, and some Senator would say he had not made any such arrangement. My idea is that the bill had better go on and take its chances.

Mr. BLAINE. I never heard what the honorable Senator speaks of, and I have been here as long as he. Where an agreement was made by the Senate, I never knew it to be violated.

Mr. GARLAND. I have, half a dozen times at least.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I was absent when it was done.

Mr. GARLAND. That is very probable. I think that is the state of fact that I have seen here on this floor. There is no unanimous consent, as I have understood the practice here, by which a vote can be reached at a particular time. There is no previous question; there is no gag law here. I do not care; I am ready to vote now on this proposition; but I do not want business to be obstructed or to be hastened by any understanding of this sort, and then, when it comes hastened by any understanding of this sort, and then, when it comes to the hour, some Senator say the Senate cannot make such an arrangement

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Where there has been unanimous consent to fixing a time, I think it has always been observed in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not remember the time when

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not remember the time when any Senator has refused to be bound by the understanding, because Senators are only bound, not by the rules but by their understanding. The Chair cannot enforce it. We know that he can enforce the rules, but Senators enforce these understandings.

I have no objection to voting to-morrow or Monday at any time; but I do not think the Senate ought to tie itself up not to have a similar world of explanation brief and fair around on a many department.

single word of explanation brief and fair, pro and con, on amendments that may be offered. It is extremely dangerous to absolutely cut off proper and reasonable explanation on one side and the other, briefly, of amendments; and I am unwilling on this occasion, or any other, to have an understanding that shall prevent any Senator who wishes to do it from doing what I have a constant to the state of the stat to do it from doing what I have suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will modify my suggestion so that at three o'clock on Monday general debate on this bill shall cease, and that there may be a five-minute debate upon amendments offered after that time

Mr. BLAINE. Under the Anthony rule.
Mr. ALLISON. Under the Anthony rule, whatever that may be;
that is to say, a brief debate may be had in explanation of amendments. I do not think myself we can finish this bill to-night as intelligently as we ought, and therefore I make the suggestion

Mr. TELLER. I suppose under that arrangement I may offer these amendments and we can commence voting on them at any hour we are ready?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.
Mr. TELLER. I have not any speech to make, except that I want to press the amendments and explain them.

Mr. ALLISON. But I want them printed to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the proposition of the Senator from Iowa to the Senate. It will require unanimous consent; and then, according to the universal practice of the Senate, it will rest simply upon the honor of each Senator; the understanding cannot be approved by the Chair. The proposition is derstanding cannot be enforced by the Chair. The proposition is that general debate shall cease at three o'clock on Monday, and that, upon amendments offered after three o'clock, a five-minute debate

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Oh, no; the amendments are to be offered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois did not understand the Chair. Of course there can be debate upon amendments offered now up to three o'clock without limit, but upon amendments offered after three o'clock the five-minute rule shall apply to debate. That the Chair understands to be the proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent to that proposition !

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And that the bill shall be finished on Monday?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That the bill shall be finished before we adjourn on Monday? That is part of the understanding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Put the Chair did not state that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore.
That is proper to be stated as part of the understanding.

Mr. TELLER. Then I offer some amendments to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet. The Chair has not obtained the consent of the Senate. Is there unanimous consent to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa as stated by the Chair? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TELLER. Now I offer some amendments, and ask to have them printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EATON. It is necessary to have a brief executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive busi-

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at six o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 9, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the report of the Mississippi River commission be printed for distribution.

On motion of Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, the House took from the Speaker's table amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City Nebraska; which were read, as follows:

were read, as follows:

Line 5, after "tents," insert "and;"
Line 6, after "provided," insert "that the same can be spared without detriment or injury to the public service;" and
At the end of line 10 insert the following:
"Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Nebraska, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said arms, ammunition, and camp equipage in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State and deducted out of the sum, amount, and share of the annual sum of $200,000 appropriated for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia that may be assignable or distributable or allotted to said State of Nebraska."

Mr. VALENTINE. I move concurrence in the Senate amendments

Mr. VALENTINE. I move concurrence in the Senate amendments

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM TURMAN.

On motion of Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5053) granting relief to William Turman, guardian of William W. Brewer, and the same was brought before the House for consideration.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue a duplicate of check No. 144989, drawn by D. T. Boynton, pension agent, dated October 13, 1879, for the sum of $1,646.83, in favor of William Turman, guardian of William W. Brewer; said check having been lost in the mails.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PRICE. Does this bill provide the necessary safeguards?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. That is the general law of the land.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DRUSILLA H. SWANGER.

Mr. CARPENTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5706) for the relief of Drusilla H. Swanger; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE V. HEBB.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 417) for the relief of George Hebb; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the claim of Mr. William P. Wood, for the detection and recovery of the plates on which spurious 7.30 notes were printed; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

On motion of Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, the same committee was also discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3175) for the relief of James C. Barnes and others; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, the same committee was also discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1173) to remove the charge of desertion against Charles H. Georgius; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, the same committee was also discharged from the further consideration of the following cases; and the same were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

The bill (H. R. No. 2457) to authorize the payment to the widow of Captain George W. Yates, killed at the Custer massacre, for the loss

TRIENNIAL COMMITTEE, KNIGHTS TEMPLAR, CHICAGO.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, &c., to the triennial committee of the Knights Templar at Chicago, Illinois, for the purpose of concurring in the Senate amendments.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

as follows:

Add to the joint resolution the following:
"Provided, That the said articles shall be receipted for by some responsible person or persons: And provided further, that they can be spared without detriment, injury, or loss to the public service."

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUSAN FOX.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 1097, granting a pension to Susan Fox, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EVENING SESSION FOR REPORTS FROM FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask unanimous consent on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that Friday evening next at half past seven o'clock be set apart for the consideration of business from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MILLS. I object.
Mr. CONGER. I shall object to an evening session except for consideration of pension bills.
Some time subsequently, Mr. MILLS having withdrawn the objection, the request was renewed; when Mr. CONGER objected.

BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 928, a bill (H. R. No. 5707) for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private armed brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed. printed.

INDUSTRIAL MISSION OF AMERICAN MERCHANTS, MEXICO.

Mr. WILSON also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 54, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 272) thanking the Mexican government and people for contributing so heartly to the success of the industrial mission of American merchants and manufacturers; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. What disposition does the gentleman desire to have made of the resolution?

Mr. WILSON. I would like, if possible, to have immediate action upon it

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.

Objection was made.

The joint resolution was referred to the House Calendar.

TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. DE LA MATYR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5708) to provide for a temporary government for Alaska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

A. SCHUYLER SUTTON.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5709) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," approved June 4, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

STEAMER J. H. KELLY.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1475 for present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 1475) to change the name of the steamer J. H. Kelly to John Thorn. Be it enacted, &c., That the name of the steamer J. H. Kelly, of Clayton, New York, be, and is hereby, changed to John Thorn, by which name said steamer shall be hereafter licensed and known.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL WHEELER.

Mr. EWING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5710) granting a pension to Samuel Wheeler; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WESLEY H. SHERWOOD.

Mr. EWING also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5711) granting a pension to Wesley H. Sherwood; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY T. DUNCAN.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1941) for the benefit of Mary T. Duncan, of Louisville, Kentucky, reported adversely yesterday from the Committee on War Claims, be placed upon the Calendar. I do not think there will be any objection to this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the bills upon which adverse reports were made yesterday were laid upon the table, and a motion to reconsider the votes by which they were laid upon the table was also reconsidered and laid upon the table. This the Chair suggests would clinch the action of the House on yesterday and prevent a reconsideration. The gentleman might, however, confer with the chairman of that committee and some arrangement be made.

Mr. WILLIS. I have already notified the chairman of the committee, and I understand he has no objection; I therefore ask unanimous consent to vacate the order of the House on yesterday, and allow this bill to be pleady great the Calendar.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Some time subsequently the objection was withdrawn, and the bill (H. R. No. 1941) was taken from the table and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to make a privileged motion.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CLYMER. I move to suspend the rules and dispense with the morning hour to-day.
Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania should prevail, to dispense with the morning hour, would that cut off the privilege of making a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar at the end of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that point, that it takes two motions to dispense in order to get at the public business in that way on Fridays, namely, first a motion to dispense with the morning hour, which requires two-thirds, and if that carries, then a motion to dispense with the private business, which also requires two-motion to dispense with the private business, which also requires two-thirds. The question will be first taken on the motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was not agreed to.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at ten minutes to one o'clock; and this being Friday, the business of the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a private nature. The unfinished business in the morning hour is the bill (H. R. No. 2030) for the relief of William G. Budlong. The pending question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. How can this bill be on its passage in the morning

The SPEAKER. Because it comes over from a morning prior to the adoption of the new rules. The bill has been engrossed and read a third time, and the question is now on its passage.

The question being put, there were—ayes 54, noes 76.

Mr. BALLOU. A quorum has not voted and I call for tellers,
The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BALLOU] and the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SMITH.]

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 82. So the bill was not passed.

Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN SAN MATEO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

LANDS IN SAN MATEO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 531) to authorize the correction of boundaries of certain lands in San Mateo County, California. I ask that the bill and report be printed, and that the minority of the committee have leave to present their views, to be printed with the report of the majority. I submit to the Chair the question whether this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole or to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Does it appropriate money?

Mr. STEVENSON. It makes no appropriation of money.

The SPEAKER. Or property?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir. The bill is for the benefit of certain private citizens.

The SPEAKER. At whose expense?

The SPEAKER. At whose expense?
Mr. STEVENSON. Not at the expense of the Government.

The SPEAKER. If the bill in any way involves an expense to the Government it must go to the Committee of the Whole. The Chair will examine the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I prefer that the Chair should do so. I have called attention to the point in order that the bill may, under the direction of the Chair, go to the proper Calendar.

Mr. PACHECO. I desire to reserve the right to submit a minority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STEVENSON] has already made that request on behalf of the minority. The views of the minority will be printed with the majority report.

Mr. PAGE. I think this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask the Chair to examine it.
Mr. BUCKNER. This bill was on the Private Calendar in the last

Mr. PAGE. The bill provides for a new survey of certain lands, and of course involves an expense to the Government.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, leave being given to the minority of the committee to file their views, to be printed with the majority report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] who was not in his seat when the Committee on Invalid Pensions was called, asks leave to report at this time some bills which are in his charge

There being no objection, leave was granted.

PENSIONS.

Mr. HAZELTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably bills of the following titles; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question before the committee is the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day, coming over from last Friday, on which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ELLIS. I yield for thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VOORHIS.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I shall require not perhaps as much time as has been extended to me by the gentleman from Louisiana. I shall endeavor to present the questions involved in this case as pointedly as I can. It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that the report of the committee, read on a former occasion, was somewhat lengthy; but it was able and exhaustive. It seems this claimant purchased in the city of New Orleans a square of land which had been the property of Judah P. Benjamin, at a confiscation sale; that he paid therefor the sum of $5,400; that the title utterly failed; and he asks Congress to pay back the money which is now in the Treasury of the United States. The act under which confiscation proceedings were taken was passed on the 17th of July, 1862, and is entitled "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes." I would ask the Clerk to read two sections, sections 7 and 8, of that act, (which in all comprises fourteen sections,) because those are the two sections under which this proceeding has been taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That to secure the condemnation and sale of any of such property, after the same shall have been seized, so that it may be made available for the purpose aforesaid, proceedings in rem, shall be instituted in the name of the United States in any district court thereof, or in any territorial court, or in the United States district court for the District of Columbia, within which the property above described, or any part thereof may be found, or into which the same, if movable, may first be brought, which proceedings shall conform as nearly as may be to proceedings in admiralty or revenue cases, and if said property, whether real or personal, shall be found to have belonged to a person engaged in rebellion, or who has given aid or comfort thereto, the same shall be condemned as enemies' property and become the property of the United States, and may be disposed of as the court shall decree, and the proceeds thereof paid into the Treasury of the United States for the purposes aforesaid.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted. That the several courts aforesaid shall have power to make such orders, establish such forms of decree and sale, and direct such deeds and conveyances to be executed and delivered by the marshals thereof where real estate shall be the subject of sale as shall fitly and efficiently effect the purposes of this act, and vest in the purchasers of such property good and valid titles thereto. And the said court shall have power to allow such fees and charges of their officers as shall be reasonable and proper in the purpose.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, acting under the authority.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, acting under the authority given in the eighth section the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, on the third Monday in February, 1865, made an order prescribing the form of a deed to be given in said case. I will read an extract from that order:

It is ordered that in all cases where real estate is condemned and sold under the act aforesaid the marshal shall cause all mortgages existing against the property sold to be canceled, and shall attach the certificate of the recorder of mortgages to the deeds given to the purchaser showing the cancellation of the same

Now, what have we before us in this connection? The statute authorizes the court to make the order. We have the court making the Now, what have we before us in this connection? The statute authorizes the court to make the order. We have the court making the order, and that order is the law, and under that law proceedings were taken in the case. The decree is a proceeding in rem. The rem was there, but it was afterward held that there was no jurisdiction, and that there was no valid title acquired upon the sale. The decree of the court made on the 18th day of March, 1865, adjudges that this square of land is the property of the United States, and directs that it be sold. It does not direct any interest or equity in the property to be sold, but directs the property itself to be sold without reserve or qualification. It is a decree against the fee, and I agree with the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Hammond,] who spoke the other day upon this subject, that the decree is utterly void to convey even a life estate in the property.

Now, the marshal having, according to the judgment of the court, a right to sell, he did sell, and on the sale stated that the property would be sold discharged from all mortgages existing against it; and on that declaration the bid was made by the purchaser. According to the law he was required at the time of the bid to pay the purchasemoney. The money was paid before he got his deed. The deed was then given; and that deed embodies in it, in the body of it, a statement that this mortgage had been discharged. The deed was a contract between the United States on the one side and L. Madison Day on the other, and contains in the body of the contract the statement that the mortgage has been canceled and that no mortgage is exist.

on the other, and contains in the body of the contract the statement on the other, and contains in the body of the contract the statement that the mortgage has been canceled and that no mortgage is existing against the property. How, I ask, can you go back upon that deed? Can you deny the effect of the deed? Is it not, in other words, repudiation to attempt to do so? Ought not the United States to live up to its contracts? Ought it, because it has the power by mere force to do so, after it has taken this man's money under the terms of a contract which it cannot fulfill and will not fulfill, retain his money and give him nothing in return for it? For that is about the substance of it. In order that the committee may see precisely the condition of it. In order that the committee may see precisely the condition of this property at the time of the sale and the exact terms of the deed, I ask that the Clerk read the deed itself.

The Clerk read as follows:

Deed of sale, marked G.—Filed in evidence May 23, 1868.

United States of America.

Whereas J. Cuthbert Bullitt, marshal of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, under and by virtue of a venditioni exponas to me directed by the honorable the district court of the United States for the district aforesaid, in the suit entitled The United States vs. Two Squares of Ground, &c., the property of J. P. Benjamin, No. 793 tof the docket of said court, did expose at public sale, according to law, and after all previous legal requisites had been fulfilled and complied with, and after having given full thirty day's notice of said sale in the Picayune, one of the daily newspapers printed and published in the city of New Orleans, namely, on the 29th of March, 8th and 22d of April, and 4th of May, 1865, the following-described property, namely: a certain square of ground situated in the town of Huntsville, parish of Jefferson, with all the improvements thereon, designated on a plan of said town drawn by B. Buisson, surveyor, the 17th day of March, 1837, and deposited in the office of E. Barnett, late notary in New Orleans, by the number 63, and measuring 243 feet 4 inches on Nayades street, 426 feet 4 inches front on Arabella street, 240 feet on Cornelius street, and 377 feet 8 inches on Nashville street, on Thursday, the 4th day of May, 1865, in the year 1865, at the hour of twelve o'clock m., at the Merchants' and Auctioneers' Exchange, No. 18 Royal street, in the city of New Orleans, when, after making due proclamation of said sale, and duly crying the said property and appurtenances, the same were adjudicated, to S. Madison Day, he being the last and highest bidder thereon, for the price and sum of $5,400 in cash at the time of adjudication; which said sum I hereby acknowledge to have received in ready current money of the United States of America. And it appears, from a duly certified copy from the records in the office of the recorder of mortgages for the parish of Jefferson, which certificate is annexed to the writ of venditioni exponas, under the authorit

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,

Eastern District of Louisiana, City of New Orleans:

I hereby certify that the foregoing deed of sale has this day been duly recorded in this office in sales-book B, folios 113 and 114.

Clerk's office, May 13, 1865.

CHAS, CLAIBORNE, Clerk.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that all parties believed this was a valid proceeding. The United States believed it to be such; the purchaser believed it to be such. Both were mistaken. It transpired afterward that the Supreme Court of the United States transpired afterward that the Supreme Court of the United States held that this transaction was utterly void. Who made the mistake? Was it it L. Madison Day? Not at all. Was it the marshal? Not at all. It was the judge of the district court of Louisiana that made the mistake, and nobody else, and because the judge made a mistake they cry caveat emptor on this purchaser and say, "You are responsible for the mistake of the judge of Louisana, and you must lose your memory."

Now, sir, see what this poor fellow has to do. Here is a judgment that he supposes is valid, a judgment that the law officers of the Government pronounced valid, a judgment pronounced by a judge of a court of the United States. The position of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hammond] is that Day must look through all those proceedings to the Supreme Court and possess the knowledge that the Supreme Court will hold that all this is void. It is utterly absurd.

I concede that the maxim ignorantia juris non excusat is a maxim of the common law. But it is not to be generally applied. It applies only to general law and not to private rights. You cannot apply it to lawyers, because if it were a State-prison offense to be ignorant of the law there is not a lawyer of the country who would not be in State prison, because in every case there is a lawyer on each side, and one knows the law and the other does not, as they find out by the decision of the country of the apply it to lawyers not can one knows the law and the other does not, as they find out by the decision of the court. So you cannot apply it to lawyers, nor can you apply it to judges. There is not a judge in the United States who has not had his judgments reversed because he was ignorant of the law. Appellate courts have so decided by reversing his judgments; and if it were a State-prison offense for the judges to be ignorant of the law we would have our prisons full of judges. And yet here is a layman who has in good faith relied on the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction turned over to the doctrine of caveat emptor; and it is claimed that he is bound to know the judge made a mistake, and he must lose his money because he did not know more than the lawyers and more than the judges.

There is no such rule that applies to such a case as this. There is than the lawyers and more than the judges.

There is no such rule that applies to such a case as this. There is no common law of the United States. In the nature of the case there cannot be. We are thirty-eight States, and the law is different in every State. In those States where the common law prevails it is not held uniformly. In one State the same rule is construed differently from what it is in another. I need not dwell upon that, but I will simply read a few words from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Wheaton and Donaldson vs. Peters and Grigg, in 8 Peters's Reports, page 658, as given by Justice Wilson. He says: Reports, page 658, as given by Justice M'Lean. He says:

It is clear, there can be no common law of the United States. The Federal Government is composed of twenty-four sovereign and independent States; each of which may have its local usages, customs, and common law. There is no principle which pervades the Union and has the authority of law that is not emboded in the Constitution or laws of the Union. The common law could be made a part of our Federal system only by legislative adoption.

When, therefore, a common-law right is asserted, we must look to the State in which the controversy originated.

Therefore on this question we must look to Louisiana, and inquire Therefore on this question we must look to Louisiana, and inquire before any common-law rule is applied, is there any common law in Louisiana? It is well known there is not. The code of Louisiana on this point is identical with the rule of the civil law, which is that whenever a man sells anything, be it real estate or chattels, he is deemed to warrant the title, to warrant that he has a right to sell the thing which he sells. And there is no rule of caveat emptor in Louisiana has a constant to anything. That and this continue to anything. ana that applies to anything. That ends this controversy. But the other point is also conclusive.

Mr. ATHERTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Certainly.
Mr. ATHERTON. You say the statutes of the United States and a deed under them shall not be construed to have the same effect in every portion of the American Union?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not say that. I say the statutes of the United States are to be construed alike everywhere. But the gentleman will not claim that the statutes of the United States establish the common law of England as a law of the United States. I am saying that there is no caveat emptor in the statutes of the United States, and there is none in Louisiana.

Mr. ATHERTON. What I wanted to ask was this: whether a deed made in exactly this same form in some other States of the Union would not have the same effect that it had in Louisiana; or whether would not have the same effect that it had in Louisiana; or whether the gentleman claims it would have a different effect in that State from what it would have if made in Ohio or in New York.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not claim that; but I claim the argument in reference to Louisiana is tenfold stronger than in any State where the common law prevails, because the rule caveat emptor does not exist there at all, and therefore all arguments based on that rule

This defect was a latent one. Assume that the common law does prevail; assume that this happened in the State of New York, if you please, where the common law was adopted by statute, and then the rule is this, that where the defect is latent and the purchaser by reasonable diligence does not discover it, especially where the seller himself does not know it, the rule caveat emptor does not apply. Broom says:

The rule caveat emptor indeed has no application where the defect is a latent one, and of such a nature where the purchaser cannot by the greatest attention discover it.

And you cannot find the rule stated differently from that anywhere by common-law courts.

You cannot bring this case within the principle of caveat emptor at all, because there is not a decision in existence that holds that to a sale under a void judgment the rule of caveat emptor applies sale under a void judgment the rule of caveat emptor applies.

Now, I will cite a case in a common-law State, the case of Putnam against Westcott, in 19 Johnson's Reports of New York. That is a case where a constable on an execution sold a leasehold estate and the purchaser paid the money. It was afterward held that the sale was utterly void; that the constable could not sell a leasehold estate on an execution, and the constable was sued by the purchaser to get back his money. The supreme court of New York upheld the action, and Chief-Justice Spencer, one of the ablest jurists of the day, wrote the opinion. In that opinion he says:

It would seem that both parties were under a mutual error. The defendant supposed he had a right to sell Frink's interest in the land; and the plaintiff, by becoming the purchaser, must have thought the defendant had such authority. If, under this mistake, common to both parties, the defendant had paid over the money to the plaintiff in the execution, before the mistake was discovered, I should more than doubt the plaintiff's right to recover. The plaintiff's equity to recover would then be opposed by the injustice of requiring the defendant to refund. In such a case, I should not consider the plaintiff as entitled to recover ex æquo et bono. But it was not offered to be proved that the defendant had parted with the money; therefore, taking all that was offered to be proved as true, still the plaintiff is entitled to recover, as he has paid his money to the defendant, who, for aught that appears, still retains it, without right, and without any consideration.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. ELLIS. How much longer time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Only about five minutes.
Mr. ELLIS. I will yield that time to the gentleman.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. In this case which I have cited the officer was sued for the money. It would be precisely as if L. Madison Day had sued the marshal before the money was paid into the Treasury. But there is another case where the money was paid over, a tax case decided by the court of appeals of the State of New York. The purchaser at a tax sale paid his money, and it subsequently turned out that the tax levy was void, and the sale therefore void. He sued the City of Brooklyn, the party which had got the money. The case is Chapman vs. the City of Brooklyn, (40 New York Reports.) I read from the syllabus of the case:

from the syllabus of the case:

The municipal authorities of Brooklyn having caused measures to be taken in apparent conformity with the statute (Laws of 1850, chapter 144) regulating the subject, for the assessment upon the lots deemed to be benefited of the expense of grading and paving a certain avenue in that city, the amount of estimated benefit to two lots was assessed against parties who were not the owners of them. Judgment for the amount of such assessment against these persons having been entered up in the form provided by the statute, and executions thereon having been returned unsatisfied, the lots were put up for sale by the city street commissioner, and struck off to a purchaser, who paid over the amount of his bid, and received the usual certificate of sale. The money was transmitted by the street commissioner to the city treasury. In an action by the assignee of this certificate, and of all claim, and right of action of the purchaser by reason of the premises, brought against the city to recover back the money paid, with interest—Held, That the assessment, proceedings, and sale were absolutely void for want of jurisdiction, the assessment not having been made against the owner of the lots.

It was further held that the plaintiff could recover on the ground of an entire failure of the consideration for which the money was paid to the city.

I call attention to the following from the opinion of the court:

In ordinary cases the circumstances established in this action would be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover the money paid upon the sale with interest, for the consideration of the sale has entirely failed. The defendant supposed its own proceedings had been regular, and that it was consequently entitled to sell the land in question for the payment of the assessments made upon it, and under the same impression the lots were bid off by the purchaser. The defendant received the purchaser's money for the right to the title it was expected and believed would be ultimately conveyed, if the land was not afterward redeemed from the sale. In fact the city had no power to sell or in any manner affect or incumber the land in favor of the purchaser. It was unable to give him for his money the right on account of which the city received it; and if the defendant can succeed in retaining it, that must be done on account of some peculiar immunity enjoyed by it as a corporation.

The rule ordinarily applicable to cases of this description is well stated by Parsons in his work upon contracts. It is as follows:

"Where the consideration appears to be valuable and sufficient, but turns out to be wholly false or a mere nullity, or where it may have been actually good, but before any part of the contract has been performed by either party and before any benefit has been derived from it to the party paying or depositing money for such consideration the consideration wholly fails, then a promise resting on this consideration is no longer obligatory, and the party paying or depositing money upon it can recover it back.

I have other cases here, but I have not time to refer to them. want to read a word, however, from Kerr on Frauds and Mistakes, with respect to the point that this marshal, in making this contract, was not the agent of the Government in making this contract to sell this property discharged from the mortgage. I have shown that Congress authorized the courts to make that bargain and it was made in pursuance of that authorization. Kerr says:

A man cannot adopt and take the benefit of a contract entered into by his agent and repudiate the fraud on which it was built. If the agent, at the time of the contract, makes any representation or declaration touching the subject-matter, it is the representation and declaration of the principal. The statements of the agent which are involved in the contract, as its foundation or inducement, are in law the statements of the principal. The principal cannot separate the contract itself from that by which it was induced. He must adopt the whole contract, including the statements and representations which induced it, or must repudiate the contract altogether. It would be inconsistent with natural justice to permit a man to retain property acquired through the medium of false representations made by his agent, although he was no party to them, or did not authorize them.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, here is a contract of the United States to

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, here is a contract of the United States to give this man the property he bought discharged of the mortgage. The United States has broken its contract. It has taken the man's money and given him nothing for it. I say that the Government cannot afford to keep it and will not. Either this Congress or some other Congress will do justice in this case.

Mr. ELLIS. My friend from New York who has just preceded me [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] has pursued the line of thought that I had contemplated pursuing, and my labors therefore will be very much lightered, and I shall occupy but little of the time of the committee. I have heard with some regret that there has been an attempt made to create the impression that the claimant in this case was an adventurer, a stranger, a camp-follower, and an informer; one who, holding no convictions upon either side of the civil war which lately convulsed this Republic, occupied his time in purchasing confiscated property and making money out of the miseries and exigencies of the country. I say I regret to find that an attempt has been made to create this impression.

This must be my excuse and my apology for informing the committee that Mr. Day, the claimant, was a resident of the State of Louisiana a long time before the war began. He was a native of Kentucky, and came to Louisiana twelve years before the beginning of the war and entered into the practice of law there. He was conservative in politics, a candidate for elector on the Bell and Everett ticket in 1860, and when the war actually began he sided with the Union cause.

Since the war he has pursued the practice of his profession, and is universally esteemed and beloved by those who know him. His character for integrity, for honesty, and for fair dealing is equal to that of any gentleman who sits on the floor of this House. So much, then, for the personnel of the claimant. And I have made this statement with regard to him to endeavor to remove that prejudice which has with regard to him to endeavor to remove that prejudice which has been created against him, for prejudice insidiously creeps into the councils of judgment, and, alas! too often influences its decrees.

This case has been before Congress, I believe, since the Forty-third Congress, and has five times been favorably passed upon by various Senate and House committees since that time. A favorable report was prepared by the Senator from Florida, Mr. Jones, and a favorable report to this House, in the Forty-fourth Congress, by the late Secretary of War, Mr. McCrary. I cite these facts to inform the House that the report which we are seeking to sustain here has had the that the report which we are seeking to sustain here has had the

that the report which we are seeking to sustain here has had the sanction of some very able lawyers who are not of this House.

The facts of the case are simply these: Under the confiscation act of July 17, 1862, certain real estate in the city of New Orleans, the property of Judah P. Benjamin, was libeled by the Government of the United States as the property of a rebel in arms. Two squares of ground were libeled. And right here let me say that during the ground were libeled. And right here let me say that during the progress of the debate, two weeks ago to-day, some gentleman inquired what became of the other square. I will state to the House that the other square of ground which was purchased at that sale was situated a half or three-quarters of a mile away from the square in question; it lay off in a swamp; was purchased for $700, and became so involved with taxes that it was abandoned and sold in 1871, I believe, for taxes, so that Mr. Day never realized a single cent, but lost $700 by the purchase of the other square; and it does not and lost $700 by the purchase of the other square; and it does not and cannot enter into the discussion of this case.

A monition issued and the property was condemned as the property of the United States, and after legal proceedings, the proceedings provided for by the act of July 17, 1862, it was sold to L. Madison Day, the present claimant, for the sum of $5,400. Mr. Day paid his money, and the Government gave him a title, in the body of which was incorporated the certificate of the recorder of mortgages, showing that all evidences of prior mortgages had been erased and canceled.

Another inquiry arose in the course of the former debate in this case. It was as to the value of the property. Now, I can inform the House something about that, because I own and live upon the same property now. The price paid by Mr. Day, in 1865, when the property was sold by the Government, was then full value. I purchased it at private sale for $10,000, in 1875. It must be remembered that when the Government sold this property, and Mr. Day purchased, the war was raging; business of every kind was suspended; New Orleans was almost depopulated; real estate had become almost valueless; so that in paying $5,400 for the square of ground, Mr. Day purchased it at its full market value at the time of the sale.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will pardon these digres-

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will pardon these digressions from the argument. I happen to remember that the question was asked the answer to which I have just given. It is my earnest wish that the case be fully understood.

In proceeding with the argument it is most necessary, in the first place, that we ascertain clearly what law must govern the decision of this case, especially if we are to decide it as a court of law. Some gentleman has said the common law of the United States must govern. I confess I was astonished to hear that. Why, have gentlemen reflected that there is no such thing as "the common law" of the United States? There is no all-pervading principle recognized in the United States as common law. That has been distinctly decided by the Su-States as common law. That has been distinctly decided by the Supreme Court in the case in 8 Peters, from which my friend from New York [Mr. Van Voorhis] has just read. There is no common law of the United States; there could be no common law of the United States unless the common law of England should be adopted as the law of the United States by statute, which has not been done. In the case in 8 Peters the court declared:

It is clear there can be no common law of the United States. There is no principle which pervades the Union and has the authority of law that is not embodied in the Constitution and laws of the Union. The common law can be made part of our Federal system only by legislative adoption. When, therefore, a common-law right is asserted, we must look to the State in which the controversy originated.

Such is the doctrine laid down by our highest tribunal, and no one has disputed it. And it is the veriest nonsense for gentlemen to talk of the "common law" of the United States. And if there is no common law of the United States, to what system of laws shall we appeal for rules of decision in the case at bar? Shall we decide it by the laws of the common-law States, by the law of Ohio or by the law of Mentucky, if you please?

Mr. ATHERTON. No; by the law of the United States; by the statute of the United States.

Mr. ELLIS. No; not by the laws of the United States, because there is no law of the United States which is applicable to this con-

Mr. ATHERTON. There is the confiscation act.
Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am referred by my friend from Ohio to the confiscation act. I look at it section by section and find provisions for the confiscation of property of rebels in arms; but nowhere do I find a single line even squinting at the idea of such a controversy as this; nowhere a single line providing for warranty or the doctrine of caveat emptor, which is sought to be applied, or a single line arms in the most remote manner for the settlement of line which provides in the most remote manner for the settlement of a controversy of the kind we are now dealing with.

Then, if there is no common law of the United States, if the statutes of the United States do not reach the case, if the Constitution ntes of the United States do not reach the case, if the Constitution of the United States does not reach it, will you attempt to apply to it and decide it by the laws of any particular State from which members here may come? Why, sir, the law of a foreign State can have no extra-territorial jurisdiction, and, except for the purposes of the Union, the States of this Union are foreign States to each other. Shall I cite authorities to sustain this point? The books bristle with them. No, sir, you cannot apply to this case the laws of any State except that one in which it arose. You must go to the law of the State of Louisiana where this controversy came where this suit originated: Louisiana, whence this controversy came, where this suit originated; and you must decide it by the law of the State of Louisiana.

Section 721 of the Revised Statutes declares that:

The laws of the several States, except where the Constitution The Constitution does not touch this questiontreaties

There is no treaty that touches itor statutes of the United States

There is no statute that touches it:

The laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law, in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a dilemma from which the opponents of this bill cannot escape. You must determine and try this case by the laws of the State of Louisiana, and no other laws can reach or affect it. Then, sir, what are the provisions in the law of the State of Louisiana in regard to the points involved in this controversy? The civil code of Louisiana, article 2621, page 473, (Voor. Ed.,) is as follows:

The purchaser, evicted from property purchased under execution, shall have his recourse for reimbursement against the debtor and creditor; but upon the judgment obtained jointly for that purpose, the purchaser shall first take execution against the debtor, and upon the return of such execution, no property found, then he shall be at liberty to take out execution against the creditor.

And by the law of the State there is an implied warranty in every judicial sale; and the courts of that State, in interpreting the code have gone so far as to declare that even where the recitation of warranty was omitted in the deed, the doctrine still applied, and there was and must be warranty in every judicial sale.

Mr. BAYNE. Not on the part of the State—the warranty did not come from the State?

Mr. ELLIS. I will come to that point; and my friend will excuse me until then. This is not a judicial sale, but a conventional sale on the part of the United States to the claimant.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me ask the gentleman from Louisiana how he construes the preceding section in the civil code of Louisiana. The section he quoted was section 2621 of the civil code of that State. Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me refer to the one immediately before it.

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly.
Mr. ATHERTON. Section 2620 of the civil code of Louisiana provides "this sale on execution transfers the property of the thing to the purchaser as completely as if the owner had sold it himself; but it transfers only the rights of the debtor such as they are."

Mr. ELLIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the case of Scott againt Featherstone (5 Louisiana Annual Reports, 314) the court, in answer to the objections that the purchaser at a judicial sale was aware of the dangers of eviction when he purchased, (the property being then in litigation,) and that he, therefore, took the risk, and was not entitled to warranty and a return of the price, said:

To these propositions we cannot assent. The sheriff's sale to Collier is in the usual form, and carries with it, of course, the usual warranties of such instruments. The knowledge which purchasers have of the danger of eviction does not deprive them of the right of claiming the return of the price after the eviction has taken place. The right exists in all cases, unless the party evicted, knowing the danger of eviction, took the property without warranty and at his risk and peril.

Such, then, is the law of Louisiana; and such is the construction

Such, then, is the law of Louisiana; and such is the construction of the article of the code which I have cited.

Now, what are the facts in the case? When the marshal went to sell this property on behalf of the United States Government, under the eighth section of the confiscation act, which gave to the United States courts special power to make such order, establish such forms of decree at the sale, and direct such deeds and conveyances to be executed and delivered by the marshals, where real estate was the subject of sale, as shall fitly and efficiently effect the purpose of this act and vest in the purchasers of such property good and valid titles thereto; and also power to allow such fees and charges of their officers as shall be reasonable and just in the premises; and, again, in one of the last sections of the act it is provided that the courts of the one of the last sections of the act it is provided that the courts of the United States shall have full power to institute proceedings, make orders and decrees, issue process, and do all other things necessary to carry this act into effect. Now, then, when, in obedience to the order of the United States court, the marshal sold this property, what did he do under the order of the court? In the first place he went, by order of the court, to the place where mortgages are recorded and procured the erasure of every mortgage that stood against this property. The order of the court was directed to the recorder of mortgages to the state of the outer was theeter to the recorder of mortgages to erase every single mortgage that stood against the property. So, at the sale, the marshal exhibited a clean certificate showing that no mortgages existed against the property.

Mr. WILSON. Canceled the debt.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes; a certificate of erasure of all mortgages or evi-

Mr. ELLIS. Yes; a certificate of erasure of all mortgages or evidence of mortgages registered against the property.

Mr. ATHERTON. A mere void act.

Mr. ELLIS. But whose fault is that? There had been no construction at that time of the confiscation act. It was not until nearly ten years afterward that there was any construction of the confiscation act by the Supreme Court of the United States. Then it was supposed under this act the courts of the United States had power, and a complete power to do everything necessary to year in these supposed under this act the courts of the United States had power, ample, complete power, to do everything necessary to vest in these purchasers good and valid titles to their property, and there was no one to gainsay or deny the authority of the Congress or of the courts of the United States to do so.

Mr. ATHERTON. The authority of the officer designated by the statute. It gave him authority to do this or it did not. If it did, there is nothing to complain of; if it did not, he simply violated the

Mr. ELLIS. That may be, but there is no question that he was the executive officer of the court of the United States, armed with the authority given to it by the statute, ordered the erasure of the mortgage and the sale of the property—ordered a clean mortgage certificate, in order that the title of the purchaser might be perfect.

Mr. OSMER. Ordered the erasure of all evidence of mortgage.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman anticipated me. The court ordered and the marshal executed and the recorder obeyed, and the monition having previously issued, and no one having appeared to set up a having previously issued, and no one having appeared to set up a claim against the property, Mr. Day, the claimant, was entirely off his guard, and the error was the error of the Government and not of the claimant.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. ELLIS. With great pleasure.

Mr. BAYNE. Did not the confiscation act in terms enable the United States to take the fee, and did not the district court at the time the property was sold decide the fee passed?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. And did not the Supreme Court subsequently declare that the fee could not pass under the Constitution of the United clare that the fee could not pass under the Constitution of the United

Mr. ELLIS. That is true, sir. At that time there had been no construction of the confiscation statute, and the intendment of the law was that the fee should pass; but the Supreme Court decided (a decision in which I believe everybody acquiesces) that only a life estate could pass under that provision of the Constitution; that no estate could pass under that provision of the Constitution; that no attainder of treason shall work forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted. But as to that the Government failed to give this man a life estate even in the property of Judah P. Benjamin. He is alive to-day, and from all accounts we have will in all probability live on at least twenty years longer. The Government failed even to do what the Constitution permits, and did not secure to claimant even the life estate in the confiscated property.

Mr. ATHERTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there? The court decided that the life estate passed, subject to the mortgage—

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir; but the court decided further that when the marshal of the United States, in obedience to the order of the court and in strict compliance with the statute of Congress, erased the mortgage he did wrongfully. Now, the error under which Day was mortgage he did wrongfully. Now, the error under which Day was led to purchase the property and pay his money for it into the Treasury of the United States was not his error, but the error of the law in the first instance, the error of the court in the second, and the error of the marshal in the third, and Day himself was an entirely innocent party in the transaction.

But, Mr. Chairman, the doctrine of warranty is not only broadly recognized in judicial sales in the State of Louisiana, but in conventional or private sales, if I may so designate them, the doctrine is still more broadly recognized. Every one is bound to warrant what he sells under the laws of that State.

Mr. BAYNE. Was not the United States in this case really the vendor?

Mr. ELLIS. I think so, sir.

Mr. LAPHAM. Was there any proceeding to confiscate the property of the mortgagees or their interest in the premises?

Mr. ELLIS. No, sir; they were made parties to the monition. A monition issued warning all persons to appear at a certain time to set monition issued warning all persons to appear at a certain time to set up their claims, but no party appeared.

Mr. OSMER. How was that monition served?

Mr. ELLIS. By publication under the law.

Mr. ATHERTON. By service of order or by publication?

Mr. ELLIS. By publication in the newspapers. It was published under the law in the newspapers. No one appeared to contest the right of the Government to erase the mortgages, and the court ordered them to be careled.

them to be canceled. Now, Mr. Chairman, I lay down again not only that this doctrine of warranty at judicial sale is broadly recognized and enforced by a number of decisions that I would weary the House in quoting, but in conventional or private sales the doctrine is still more broadly recognized and rigidly enforced, the theory of the law being that every man must and is bound to warrant what he sells. Then I contend that the United States Government having divested Benjamin of all interest in this property, condemned it as its own property, and that, although attended by the forms of a marshal's sale, it was really a personal or a conventional sale on the part of the Government to L.

Madison Day. Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELLIS.

I yield to the gentleman with pleasure. Is it not true that the Government sold this property Mr. PRICE. to Day ? Mr. ELLIS.

I think so, sir.
And made him a title therefor? Mr. PRICE.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir.
Mr. PRICE. And took his money and he never has received anything in the world in return therefor?
Mr. ELLIS. No, sir.

No, sir. Then I think the Government ought to pay the money Mr. PRICE. back. That is all there is of the matter.

Mr. PHILIPS. He got all the statute allowed him.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think that my friend, the gentleman from Iowa, is a lawyer. He is too good a man to be a lawyer. But in his straightforward, honest, business way he has arrived at the correct solution of this whole question.

solution of this whole question.

And now from the strict letter of the law I appeal to the higher court, I appeal to you, Representatives, who sit here in this highest and greatest court of the whole people, as interpreters of the honesty and the fair dealing and the good faith of this Government; and I charge you on your consciences, beware how you interpret. Will you interpret that this great Union, having sold this property to this claimant, an honest man, who purchased honestly, having had his money in its Treasury for the last twelve or fifteen years, and having utterly failed to give one cent of value therefor—will you interpret the utterance of its creat heart-beatings to be that because it has the the utterance of its great heart-beatings to be that because it has the power and because it has the might it will do this dishonest thing?

Mr. ATHERTON. I would like very much to answer the gentleman, if he will give me an opportunity.

Mr. ELLIS. I yield the gentleman the balance of my time for that purpose.

Mr. ATHERTON rose.

Mr. ELLIS. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute.

Mr. ELLIS. I am afraid that little minute would not be of any service to my friend from Ohio. I regret I have not an hour to offer him.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] has referred to the political antecedents of Mr. Day, the claimant in this case. These have nothing whatever to do with the question. The simple, broad question is whether Mr. Day, having purchased at a judicial sale by a marshal of the United States, and having made, as he conceived, a bad bargain, the Congress of the United States will relieve him. If we do, Mr. Chairman, we will do what this Government has never done yet in any case, although it is now over a century old; and we will establish what seems to me to be a dangerous precedent.

Let us look for a moment at the facts of the case as they are. Mr. Day was a lawyer acquainted with the laws of Louisiana and of the United States. He knew this property. He knew, or had opportunity to know, the condition not only of the property itself but of all persons having any claim whatever to it. From the record of the case as it appears in the Supreme Court of the United States, which I have examined, it seems that in the fall of 1864 Mr. Day, as the I have examined, it seems that in the fall of 1864 Mr. Day, as the agent of the United States, took possession of this property, some three or four months before any proceedings were begun against it. That was in the fall of 1864. At that time the condition of the property was this: Judah P. Benjamin, against whom these proceedings were had, had the title to it subject to a mortgage, which mortgage was on record, and therefore notice to L. Madison Day and all the world. Being a lawyer, acquainted with the laws of Louisiana, Day was bound to know, and did know well, that if he would find out the condition of that property he must go to the record. The mortgage at that time was held by the children of the widow Micou, who had died a year before these proceedings began. They were, if not all, some of them, minors at that time. In 1869, when they subsequently commenced proceedings for the property, some of them were still minors. These minors had committed no crime whatever against the Government of the United States. The statute which was read, or part of which was read, at the instance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] was not leveled at these minors, but was directed at those who were in arms against the United States, and the purpose of the act was to condemn rebels' property, enemies' property.

Now, two persons or two classes of persons were interested in that property: Judah P. Benjamin, who was held by the court to be guilty; his interest was confiscable. Secondly, these minors who were never before the court, who have never been declared guilty, and who could not have been guilty. They never were before the court. And when the case came to the Supreme Court of the United States that court decided simply and broadly that the purpose of that act of 1862 and of the act amendatory thereof, the act of 1864, was simply to reach the property of Judah P. Benjamin or his interest in that property. If we look, Mr. Chairman, into these proceedings as they appear

If we look, Mr. Chairman, into these proceedings as they appear not only in the record of the Supreme Court of the United States, but not only in the record of the Supreme Court of the United States, but as they appear even in this report from the Committee on Claims, what do we find? Simply this, that the writ of seizure was directed against that property, and all the right, title, and interest therein of Judah P. Benjamin. Particular words like these, "right, title, and interest," following the general description "the property" always control; so that writ authorized a seizure solely and only of the interest, the right, the title of Judah P. Benjamin, and nothing more. And this was what the Supreme Court decided was sold.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. May I ask the generman a question.
Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Do you find that those words which you have just repeated are in the decree or in the deed?
Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; I am coming to that.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. They are not there.

Mr. HERBERT. They are not in the decree, but they are in the writ of seizure. But it is only that which was seized and brought into court that the court had the right to condemn. That, too, is the language of the order of publication.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Day of course had something to do with the deed, for he was a party to it; but he had nothing to do with the writ.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman now says that Madison Day, who bought under this deed, who traced his title to that decree, which decree was founded on that writ of seizure, had nothing to do with the proceedings in that court, under which proceedings he purchased, and which constitute the basis of his title here.

I have repeated from memory, Mr. Chairman, the words used in the monition and in the writ of seizure. The eighteenth volume of Wallace, containing the case of Day against Micou, has been handed to me, and I will read from that, so that there may be no misunderstanding as to the words. An order of publication was made, and the words in that were:

To show cause why the said property and real estate, and right, title, and interest therein, of the said J. P. Benjamin should not be condemned and sold according to law.

Now, right there, the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] asked me what J. Madison Day had to do with that. In answer I will tell him what the Supreme Court say. Mr. Justice Strong, delivering the opinion in the case, said, page 161:

It was not any property in which the persons designated in these two sections might have an interest that was made subject to seizure; it was their estate, their property, and their interest in it, whatever that interest might be.

It is a well-recognized principle of law that whenever any person purchases under a judicial sale, he must look to the proceedings necespurchases under a judicial sale, he must look to the proceedings necessary to give the court jurisdiction. The point I am making is, that the court, whatever it might have attempted to do, had no jurisdiction over anything whatever except simply the interest of J. P. Benjamin. That was condemned, and that only. That interest was seized, and that only. The petitioner here, Madison Day, went into the possession of that property, was put in possession of it by the marshal, and enjoyed that possession without question up to 1869.

Then a suit was brought against him. The court in Louisiana rendered a decree, not divesting him of the interest that had belonged to I. P. Benjamin, but simply recognizing the right in him to hold on to

J. P. Benjamin, but simply recognizing the right in him to hold on to all the title of Benjamin, and declaring that he should give up the property unless he saw proper within ten days after that time to pay this mortgage that was due to the Micou children.

Mr. CULBERSON. What was the rental value of the property worth for the four years that he was in possession of it?

Mr. HERBERT I counts say, but it must have appointed to $400.

worth for the four years that he was in possession of it?

Mr. HERBERT. I cannot say; but it must have amounted to $400 or $500 per annum. That was the decree of the court: that this petitioner, L. Madison Day, had the right to hold on to the interest of Benjamin in the property and the right to pay that mortgage to the Micou children. He did not see proper to do it, but appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that the judgment of the State court of Louisiana was right, and refused to reverse its decision. We now have the whole question before us. It is this: Madison Day having purchased the property under these circumstances, and having been put in possession of the interest of J. P. Benjamin in it, is he entitled to be reimbursed by this Government the amount he paid for that property in full without deducting therefrom the rental he has enjoyed; or is he entitled to anything whatever?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman a moment.
Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.
Mr. O'CONNOR. While Madison Day was enjoying the rent of that property, the United States had the advantage of the interest on the $5,400 of purchase-money.

Mr. HERBERT. And Madison Day, for that $5,400, had got everything which the United States sold.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No, he did not.
Mr. HERBERT. He did; that which the United States sold was nothing more than the interest of Benjamin. The statute never authorized the sale of anything more.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The United States Government sold him, not the interest of Benjamin, but two squares of ground in Louisiana free from all incumbrance whatsoever.

Mr. HERBERT. That is where the gentleman and the Supreme

Mr. HERBERT. That is where the gentleman and the Supreme Court differ.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No, we do not.

Mr. HERBERT. The Supreme Court of the United States says that all which the United States had the power to sell to Day, all that was sold to him, was the interest of J. P. Benjamin; that, and that only. And that, I say, he got and enjoyed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The United States court decided that the court had not the right to cancel that mortgage. But not with standing that the court issued the order, and in virtue of the order the mortgage was canceled, and Day bought the title with the mortgage canceled upon the record.

Mr. HERBERT. I want to call attention to the manner in which, in so far as it affects this particular case, that order was issued. The decree of condemnation, which, as I say, was based upon the seizure, was rendered before any order ever was made by the court that the should be any cancellation whatever of any mortgage. No rule had been made, no order had been made by the court affecting or pre-No rule had been made, no order had been made by the court anecting or pre-tending to affect the interest of any outside person. When the de-cree was passed the power of the court over that case was functus officio. The court did undertake to pass an order, which the Supreme Court say was void. What sort of an order was it? It was an order to cancel all outstanding mortgages against that property, although they might be, as in this case, in favor of minors, or in favor of inno-cent purchasers, or in favor of persons against whom this law was never directed and whom it was never intended to affect eent purchasers, or in favor of persons against whom this law was never directed and whom it was never intended to affect.

It was under those circumstances that Madison Day saw proper to buy two lots of land. From this particular lot he has been evicted. He says he has made a bad bargain, and asks this Congress to pay him back his money. The Committee on Claims cite to us a report made in the Forty-fourth Congress in favor of the payment of the paymen made in the Forty-fourth Congress in favor of the payment of this claim. There were two reports at that time. The minority report took ground against paying Mr. Day anything. The majority report, however, said that he ought to be paid $5,400, less the expenses, amounting to some $1,000. The report of the Committee on Claims in the present Congress is that he ought to be paid the full amount, $5,400, and that the United States ought to pay the court costs, marked the states of the court costs, marked the states of the court costs and the court costs.

Now, on what principle can these two reports be reconciled? If one is right, the other is wrong. The plain truth of this matter is, that Madison Day has no right here, either legally or equitably. If he had a legal right, he would have gone to the Court of Claims and there have asserted it. He passes by that forum, because he knows he has no rights there; and he comes here to appeal to our sympa-

Gentlemen on the other side say that we are wrong when we contend that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies. That this is the general rule I believe they do not deny. I read from Rorer on Judicial Sales, page 199, section 476:

The rule of caveat emptor applies in all its rigor to judicial sales.

The rule of careat emptor applies in all its rigor to judicial sales.

That is to say, the rule has been established for ages in court after court all over this country and in England, whence we derive our law, that the only sound, safe policy in order to put an end to litigation, in order to have no drawbacks, no claim for reclamation, is that the person who purchases at a judicial sale must take simply what he can get and pay the purchase-money he bids. He gets nothing more than the court has the right to sell.

But gentlemen say the case is different in Louisiana. Let us see for a moment whether this be true. Is it the fact that a judicial sale conducted on behalf of the United States means one thing in Louisiana, another thing in Virginia, and another in Maine? That cannot be.

another thing in Virginia, and another in Maine? That cannot be States have no right, even if they should attempt to do it, to control in this manner the rights of the United States. In a case in 9 Peters, page 182, in which the opinion was delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall, the case of Field vs. The United States, the court being unani mous, it is said:

The rights of the United States cannot be abridged by the local laws of the States; and the Government is not bound, in order to protect them, to appear and become a party to proceedings in State courts.

But gentlemen say the United States are bound because by section 721 of the Revised Statutes the laws of the States are made applicable to the courts of the United States, sitting in the several States, and because further, by a law of Louisiana quoted by the distinguished gentleman from that State, [Mr. Ellis,] who, I take it, has gathered all the law that can be found in the statutes of that State favoring his position, the rule of caveat emptor does not apply.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to a decision in the State of Louisiana?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I refer the gentleman to the case of Hass vs. Neville, (3 La. Annual Reports, 327,) and the case of Scott vs. Featherstone, (5 La. Annual Reports.) In these cases it was held that a purchaser at a judicial sale in Louisiana can always recover the purchase price unless he has expressly bought at his own risk and peril, and excluded his right of recovery by a stipulation on his part

Mr. HERBERT. I take it for granted, and would have done so even if the gentleman had not cited these authorities, that the courts of Louisiana follow the statutes in that State. I am about to comment on the statute of Louisiana read by the gentleman from that State and on which these decisions are Iounded, and to show that it has and can have no possible application in this case or any case like it either to the United States or even to the State of Louisiana. The statute read by the gentleman was as follows:

And I ask particular attention to this statute to show how far it falls short of the mark—

The purchaser evicted from property purchased under execution.

This was not an execution sale-shall have his recourse for reimbursement against the debtor and creditor.

Is there any debtor here? Is there any creditor here? Did the relation of debtor and creditor subsist between Judah P. Benjamin and the United States? But the statute goes on:

But upon the judgment obtained jointly for that purpose the purchaser shall first take execution against the debtor, and upon the return of such execution, "no property found," then he shall be at liberty to take out execution against the creditor.

This proceeding is upon a joint judgment to be obtained against the two parties to the suit. Will the gentleman from South Carolina or the gentleman from Louisiana undertake to say that there is any proceeding known to the laws of Louisiana by which a joint judgment could be obtained against the United States and Judah P. Benjamin—a proceeding which would regard one of them in the light of a creditor and the other in the light of a debtor? If not, then it is perfectly clear upon the face of this statute that it does not apply, because it is only applicable to an execution sale, and this was no execution sale; and because it relates solely to cases between private individuals where the relation of creditor and debtor subsists.

It seems to me that this would be enough to dispose of that statute without more. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another and a conclusive reply. I read from the first volume of Kent's Commentaries,

It is likewise a general rule, in the interpretation of statutes limiting rights and interests, not to construe them to embrace the sovereign power or government, unless the same be expressly named therein or intended by necessary implication.

Apply that rule here. If it were not sufficiently apparent before that the Legislature of Louisiana did not intend that statute to apply to the Government when tested by this rule, it is perfectly clear it can have no application whatever. It would not even apply to the State of Louisiana, much less to the United States. It was never intended to have any such application. The State of Louisiana is not named in it. There is no word or syllable in it from which an inference could be drawn that the law-makers intended, by the passage of that statute to include the State.

that statute, to include the State.

And, sir, I have looked somewhat through the statutes of Louisiana, and have been unable to find there is a single act intended even to apply the principle of the statute I have commented on to sales made by the State of Louisiana, much less to sales under the authority of the Government of the United States

These answers, to me, seem conclusive as to the legal or equitable right of this petitioner. He has no equitable right; because the rule is general and well established everywhere throughout this country that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to judicial sales. It was his own folly to buy what the court never seized and never had authority under the law to condemn. He cannot have any equity, Mr. Chairman, unless we lay down the broad principle that whatever is done by the courts of the United States this Government stands ready to guarantee in every particular. When you give to Madison Day the relief he asks simply because the United States district court for the State of Louisiana made a mistake, then you are saying that you hold out not only to purchasers, but to all the world, that this Government guarantees that its judges shall know and shall administer all the law; and that if any man be injured by the mistake of a United States court, he shall have his remedy by coming to Congress If that be a correct principle of law, that we warrant, that we guarantee, that our courts shall decide the law and nothing else but the law, then we ought not to stop here with giving Madison Day that $5,400 he paid to the Government of the United States. We ought to go further; we ought to reimburse him for his costs, his lawyer's fee, for his attendance here in Washington watching his own case in the Supreme Court of the United States—all these things ought to be reimbursed to him.

And that is not all; we cannot stop there. If Madison Day is entitled to relief, because we guarantee correctness and legality in the proceedings of the United States courts, then every other person injured by those proceedings is likewise entitled to relief. These chiljured by those proceedings is likewise entitled to relief. These children, these minors, who had that mortgage, were kept out of their property for years by reason of this decision of the district court of the United States of Louisiana. This man, Madison Day, was put into possession of property upon which they had a lien, and which they had a legal right to enforce without difficulty, without let or hinderance, so the Supreme Court of the United States has held. Yet that district court put this man into possession of that property; and that district court put this man into possession of that property; and he held it from them and resisted them year after year; for although they commenced proceedings in 1869, they never got final judgment in the Supreme Court of the United States until 1875. During all that time they were losing interest on their money. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Ellis] says the property was not worth $10,000. There were due not only $10,000, but interest also. The claim of these children was large enough to take the whole of that property and they were entitled to it; to sell it and to get the value of it; but by order of this United States district court of Louisiana they were not only kept out of its possession for five years, but were compelled to pay kept out of its possession for five years, but were compelled to pay kept out of its possession for five years, but were compened to pay large lawyers' fees.

It is just as equitable, Mr. Chairman, just as proper to pay these persons, these innocent parties who were in no default, who were guilty of no negligence, whose mortgage was recorded, just as proper to pay them all they lost by this mistaken decree of the United States district court of Louisiana as to pay Madison Day.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does not the record show he had actual knowledge of their title ?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know that the record does show that. Mr. HERBERT. I do not know that the record does show that. But it does appear that when Day took the deed he got with it a certificate which showed him plainly that the mortgage debt due these minors had been canceled by this void order of court instead of being satisfied by a payment. It does show it in that way. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to it.

For, sir, here now is the position of this claimant. Here are these winess winess at that time their mother dead a way before with r or, sir, nere now is the position of this claimant. Here are these minors—minors at that time, their mother dead a year before, with their mortgage subsisting and recorded, a lien on that property—minors who had never been guilty of any crime against the United States; and here was this man taking that property, paying his money for it, setting himself down in it, and relying upon an order that the court had made.

Here comes up another doctrine of the law. If it be said for Day that when he paid that money into the court it became the duty of the Government of the United States to protect the rights of those minors, we say he, as a lawyer, he as a justice-loving man, he seeing that the money he was paying would be put into the coffers of the United States unless they were notified of their rights ought to have gone before the court and said: "I purchased all this property. have gone before the court and said: "I purchased all this property. These innocent persons, these minors, have a claim on it, and therefore they have a right to the purchase-money. Cite them to come into court and propound their claim." But here is this court making this cruelly unjust order, and never for a moment taking into consideration any of the rights of the minor children.

Mr. CULBERSON. On what ground did the court order the mortgages to be canceled?

Mr. HERBERT. The court ordered the cancellation of the mortgages under the confiscation acts, which it somehow seems to have gages under the confiscation acts, which it somehow seems to have imagined authorized proceedings of that kind.

Mr. FINLEY. Brute force?

Mr. HERBERT. It might be so termed perhaps. The Supreme Court of the United States declares no such power existed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words to say in conclusion. Shall we now, at the end of nearly ninety years from the time the Government went into operation, for the first time set a precedent of this kind? I sincerely trust not. If we do where will we stop, and how much will such a precedent cost the Government? Who can tell what limit we are to set, what bounds we are to fix, if we once leaves be not on such a course? launch out on such a course?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to call his attention to the question of private agents in this connection?

Mr. HERBERT. A suggestion has been made to me, Mr. Chairman, which reminds me that I have omitted one other ground of reply to the gentlemen on the other side of the House. They say here, in the first place, that the court bound the United States by its decree, and that if the court did not do it the marshal did when he stated at the sale that the titles would be made perfect and good. Now, at that time the cancellation of these mortgages had not been made. Mr. time the cancellation of these mortgages had not been made. Mr. Day did not know, he said, at the time he purchased—he had never heard—that there were mortgages upon the property; and why? Simply because he did not take the trouble to inquire. They were on the records right under his nose. They were recorded in the proper office of that parish under the laws of the State of Louisiana. But it seems he never made any inquiry; he never took the trouble to examine into the matter; and the marshal at the sale said that the titles would be made good. That seems to have been the only warrant upon which Day acted. Day acted.

Now, gentlemen say that the marshal was an agent of the United States, and being an agent he had the right and power to bind this Government. A more untenable proposition was never advanced in this Hall. The leading case which has been cited in this connection—one from 6 Otto, United States vs. The State Bank-decides simply this, that a Treasury agent in the city of Boston at the United States sub-treasury, having the power to issue certificates of deposit, did, when he issued such certificates in form and manner strictly in accordance with the power confided in him by the law and by the Government, thereby bind the Government, and the party injured by that act, which turned out to be fraudulent, had the right to say the Government could not set up the plea of fraud on the part of this agent. ernment could not set up the plea of fraud on the part of this agent. That is the case gentlemen rely upon to sustain the broad proposition that this United States marshal was the agent of the United States Government and had the right to bind it in this transaction. There is no analogy whatever between that case and this. That agent at Boston was put there to issue certificates of deposit; but the Government of the United States never appointed a marshal to give legal opinions about the effect of a decree, to make representations to lawyers about law.

I read from the case of Whiteside vs. The United States, found on page 257 of volume 3 of Otto's Reports. The opinion of the court is set out in the following words:

Principals in the latter category

That is referring to private persons-

the in many cases bound by the acts or declarations of their agents, even where the act or declaration was done or made without any authority, if it appear that the act was done or the declaration was made by the agent in the course of his regular employment; but the Government or public authority is not bound in such a case unless it manifestly appears that the agent was acting within the scope of his authority or that he had been held out as having authority to do the act, or was employed in his capacity as a public agent to do the act or make the declaration for the Government.

Will gentlemen defending the claims of Day here undertake to tell this House that the marshal when he undertook to say whether the titles were good, and the United States was a guarantor of the title, was acting within the scope of his legitimate authority, and that this Government had held him out as an agent having the right to bind it over and above what the decree did? We are considering now the act of the marshal as separate and distinct from the act of the court. The gentlemen seem to rely with great confidence upon his declarations, but they amount to nothing whatever. All the power, all the right he had was simply the power that emanated from the court. There is no law, there is no statute, there can be no decision found in the Court of Claims, or in any other court of the United States, where it is held that the marshal in selling under a decree can give any more force or power to that decree than it already had, by any declaration whatever that he may choose to make. He is simply a ministerial officer and has no right and no power to undertake to decide what the law is, or to bind the United States by any guarantee he may make. It is not within the scope of his authority and thereby the Government is not bound.

Mr. NEW. He did exactly what the court did not want him to do.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes. This is exactly what the court did not want him to do, and never empowered him to do.

The proceedings of courts are in writing. To let the representa-tions which marshals may make at sales be treated as binding would be to introduce confusion absolutely intolerable. No such thing was ever contemplated by any court in this country as that it should be in the power of a marshal by any declaration he might make on be-half of the United States or for himself to bind the Government in any way whatever. The only safe, the only reasonable, the only sound rule by which we can be guided here is the rule established by courts and adhered to everywhere for generations back, that the purchaser at a judicial sale must look out for himself. He buys only what the court has power to sell and he buys nothing else. When that sale is made, when the deed is given, when he is put in possession, there is an end of the case

If that be not so, Mr. Chairman, if we adopt a different policy here, what is to be the result? There are already knocking at the doors of this Congress, I do not know how many claimants whose claims rest on similar grounds to that of L. Madison Day. The committee to which I have the honor to belong had several claims—two at least to which I have the honor to belong had several claims—two at least that I know of—resting upon almost precisely the same question, except that they occurred in another State; and they have already been reported upon adversely to this House. I see no particle of difference between those cases and this except in this respect: those cases come from the eastern district of Virginia; this case comes from the State of Louisiana. Shall we make a difference between the two on that account? Shall we tell those men who bought property in the State of Virginia that they are not entitled to any relief at the hands of this Congress, and say to this man who bought in the State of Louisiana that he is entitled to relief? If we do, we do what Judge Marshall said in that case I cited from 9 Peters could not be done—we recognize the right of the States by their laws to bind the United States to make the obligations of the United States one thing in one State and another thing in another State, although the proceedings are every-make the configations of the United States one thing in one State and another thing in another State, although the proceedings are everywhere under the same law of Congress.

The effect would be simply to say that if you pass a law here on the subject of confiscating rebel property, it means one thing in Louisiana, it means another thing in Virginia, and perhaps it means another thing in some other State close by. That cannot be. It would be to allow a citizen of the one State to recover, where a citizen of another

State would have no right whatever.

Mr. Chairman, whenever we establish this precedent, whenever we pass this bill giving relief to L. Madison Day, we open the flood-gates to a new class of claims and no one can tell how much money it will cost the United States, how much time and money it will cost this Congress to consider cases like this which have already arisen and which may arise under tax sales and other sales by the United States Government. In the exercise of a sound policy let us place ourselves upon the rule of law which has served us and our ancestors for centuries past that the purchaser at a judicial sale pays his money for that which the court has power to sell. This rule has been found to work well between individuals, and this Government is certainly entitled to the benefit of it.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr.

ATHERTON.]

Mr. ATHERTON. How much remains of the time of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Herbert?]

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. ATHERTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BARBER] who is to follow I understand will also yield me ten minutes.

Mr. BARBER. I propose to yield the gentleman from Ohio ten

Mr. BRIGHT. I think this case has occupied as much time as it should reasonably occupy. If the debate be not brought to a close very soon, I shall have to move that the committee rise for the purpose of fixing a limit to the debate.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I desire to say that after the hour occupied by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] I will take the floor and call for a vote on the bill.

Mr. BARBER. I do not propose myself to talk more than ten minute

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to make a somewhat fuller statement than has yet been made in respect to some of the facts in the case which perhaps the committee ought to understand in order to vote intelligently upon the measure before them. The facts show that prior to 1865 two squares of ground in the city of New Orleans were owned by Judah P. Benjamin and another man also named Benjamin. Judah P. Benjamin, whose property was sought to be confiscated by this proceeding, owned only the undivided half of this property of the confiscated by this proceeding, owned only the undivided half of this property. cated by this proceeding, owned only the undivided half of this property, as I understand the facts. That property was encumbered by a mortgage in favor of the lady whose name is mentioned in the case, Madame Micou, for $10,000. L. Madison Day went into the possession of that property as tenant of the Government in 1864; subsequently, in 1865, on the 15th day of May of that year, by a proceeding under the confiscation act of 1862, he became the purchaser of those two prices of ground proving for them the sum of $6,100. The cost under the confiscation act of 1862, he became the purchaser of those two pieces of ground, paying for them the sum of $6,100. The cost and expenses of that proceeding and the taxes upon the property amounted to $1,276.35. So out of these two squares of ground there was paid into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $4,823.65. L. Madison Day remained in possession of that property until February 3, 1868, when Madame Micou, who had a mortgage upon one of the squares, commenced proceedings for the purpose of foreclosure of the mortgage. The proceedings resulted in a decree of foreclosure of the mortgage and sale of the property. But Day had remained in posmortgage and sale of the property. But Day had remained in possession of that property under his purchase for about four years before the confirmation of the sale.

Madison Day was a lawyer, and lived and practiced law in New Orleans for many years prior to that time. He was not an ignorant man; he understood the law and was learned and eminent in his chosen profession. He took his chances in this business of getting a good bargain, or perhaps losing some money, as every man does who undertakes to purchase at a judicial sale.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That is, he gambled.

Mr. ATHERTON. If you choose to call it so, he gambled. He Mr. ATHERTON. If you choose to call it so, he gambled. He took his chances of getting a first-rate bargain or losing his money. This sale was not without consideration, as is attempted to be shown in the proceedings in this case. By virtue of that sale by the marshal he procured the interest in that property formerly owned by Judah P. Benjamin, whatever that interest was; that is, his life estate; nothing more, because under the laws of the United States nothing more could be acquired by forfeiture by the United States as penalty for treason.

This confiscation act was passed, providing in general terms that the estates and interests of all persons of certain classes engaged in the rebellion might be taken and confiscated, might be forfeited to the Government. By reason of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which prevented the forfeiture of real estate for any longer period than the life of the owner, President Lincoln had prepared, and was ready to send to the Congress of the United States, a message vetoing the confiscation act. For the purpose of avoiding that veto, on the very day that the act was passed, a joint resolution passed both Houses of Congress which provided that no forfeiture of real estate should take place for a longer period than during the lifetime of the offending party. These two statutes were upon the statute-book when those proceedings were taken. What was that joint resolution? The joint resolution and confiscation act are to be construed together, because they are substantially a part of the same legislation. The joint resolution was passed because of the scruples of the President of the United States upon the language of the confiscation act itself. That joint resolution was as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of the third clause of the fifth section of "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes," shall be so construed as not to apply to any act or acts done prior to the passage thereof, nor to include any member of a State Legislature, or judge of a State court, who has not, in accepting and entering upon his office, taken an oath to support the constitution of the so-called "Confederate States of America."

Now, let me call attention to the real gist of this joint resolution. Nor shall any punishment or proceedings under said act be so construed as to work a forfeiture of the real estate of the offender beyond his natural life.

Now, when Day came to purchase the property he had these two statutes before him. He was a lawyer and knew the joint resolution had been passed because of the provision of the Constitution, and because of the scruples of the President in respect to this act. When cause of the scruples of the President in respect to this act. When these proceedings were commenced, and when this claimant purchased this property, he knew of the existence of this joint resolution.

This sale was made by a United States marshal. It is said that the marshal, in making the sale, made certain representations and a warranty. What would be the effect of a warranty if he made it? I see nothing in the papers indicating that he did so, but I will take gentlemen at their word, and assume he made them. What is the effect of a marshal or any ministerial officer at a judicial sale attempting to make a warranty of title to anything sold?

The officer making a sale has merely a ministerial duty to perform. His power is limited and his duties pointed out by the statute, and if he makes a representation or warranty he merely binds himself.

The rule is, as to all judicial sales except as regards fraud, that the maxim of caveat emptor applies. Let the buyer beware. There is no warranty of title or quality. * * If the person conducting the sale under the court makes a paper warranty he binds himself alone. This he should not do.—Rorer on Judicial Sales,

The person selling is the mere instrument of the court to carry out the law, and is not liable if guilty of no fraud. And if he warrants expressly he then binds himself individually, but the warranty affects no one else.—Same, page 221.

The marshal's power is prescribed and limited by statute. Every man can look at that and determine the extent of his authority. A special agent cannot bind his principal by his representations unless he has authority to make them. Even a general agent cannot do so contrary to the letter of his instructions unless those instructions are unknown to the vendee. This marshal was only the agent to make the sale, not to warrant the title. His instructions were to be found in the acts of Congress. All had knowledge real or constructive of these instructions

It would hardly do for a lawyer having an extensive practice extending to the Supreme Court of the United States to say he was misled by the representations or relied upon the warranty made by a United States marshal touching a matter like this. It is remarkable, too, that he did not have actual knowledge of the existence of the Micou mortgage. Registry acts existed in Louisiana. The mortgage was matter of record. He had only to look at the record to have actual notice of it. He already had constructive notice by the record. If he did not know it, he was willfully blind. It takes great charity to believe that height a lawyer living in the property as great and to believe that being a lawyer, living in the property as tenant, and buying it at so large a figure, that he took a marshal's word and did not look for himself.

Let us look for a moment at the confiscation act and see whether the marshal was empowered to sell or did sell anything except the life estate of Judah P. Benjamin in the property. For whether he thought he was selling the entire interest or not is very unimportant. No one knew better than the claimant here, that he could only sell the interest in the property that had been forfeited to the United States. The real estate of Judah P. Benjamin could only be forfeited during his natural life. The confiscation act could not affect Mrs. Micou's mortgage, for it was not alleged that she had incurred the penalties of the confiscation act. So all that could be seized of the real estate of Judah P. Benjamin under the act was his estate therein during his natural life.

By looking at the terms of the act it will be found that "all the estate and property" of certain classes of persons might be seized by the Government and the proceeds applied to the support of the Army. It was further provided that to secure the condemnation of "any such property," proceedings in rem were to be instituted in the United States courts.

The "above-described" property was to be condemned as enemies'

property.

By examining these statutes and the joint resolution of the same date it will clearly appear that it was the interest of the offending party that was to be seized, not the entire estate, if others owned a joint interest in it or an incumbrance upon it. It was such property that was to be condemned and forfeited to the Government, and it was that property—that is, the whole if he owned all, or the interest therein of the offender—that was to be sold, and no court by its order, or marshal by his representation, could sell more, and no one should have known this better than L. Madison Day.

The proceedings were against two squares of ground, "the property of Judah P. Benjamin." The property and "his right, title, and interest therein" were forfeited to the Government and bought by Day. He procured by that purchase the life estate therein, then owned by Judah P. Benjamin, who is still living. He occupied it several years. So far as the papers show, he has one of the squares of ground yet. If he made a good bargain he would not be here to refund any of the proceeds of the speculation, and when he comes alleging a bad bargain the law says to him construction.

Gentlemen who support the bill say the other square was in a swamp and got involved for taxes and he abandoned it. The taxes due on the land at the sale were all paid out of the proceeds of the sale; so, if it got involved for taxes, it was for taxes accruing after the purchase by Day. If it was before, his claim would be as good for the price of that land as this, and no demand is made in the bill for that, the money paid for the "other square."

I believe it is not disputed that if this sale had been made in New York, Ohio, or any of the States except Louisiana, the rule caveat emptor would apply. But it is said that the local law of Louisiana is very peculiar; that the ordinary words of a deed without any covenant for title amount to an implied warranty of title. And it is contended that the deed binds the Government to warrant the title is contended that the deed binds the Government to warrant the title because of the local statute of that State. This is certainly somewhat novel. That is to say, that the statutes of the United States are to have ingrafted on them the local law of Louisiana, so that a deed made under an order of the court that would not create any liability made under an order of the court that would not create any hability in case of a failure of title elsewhere in any of the other thirty-eight States is to be construed as a warranty deed if made in Louisiana. If there was anything I thought was settled in this country, I thought it was that the acts of Congress should have a uniform operation throughout the entire Union; that one of the chief reasons for a Federal judiciary was that the Constitution, treaties, and acts of Congress should have a uniform construction and operation, and might be brought under review by the Supreme Court of the United States wherever brought.

The act of Congress has been invoked which provides for assimilating the practice in the circuit courts of a State to the procedure authorized by the laws of the State; also to the rule that always obtained in the Federal courts that the local law will be enforced therein in controversies not involving the laws of the United States. the rule has its limitation, and the language of the court is:

The local law of the State in which a Federal court is authorized to exercise jurisdiction forms the rule in civil actions not arising under the laws of the United States. (7th Peters R., 469; 9do, 607; 16 How., 65; 3 Circuit Pennsylvania, 817; Peters's Circuit Court Report, 487; 2 Summer, 401.)

United States courts follow State courts "where no Federal questions and the states of the United States Courts of the States Court tion arises." (Walker vs. State Harbor Commissioners, 17 Wal., 648.)

The court will follow, as of obligation, the decisions of the State courts only on local questions peculiar to themselves or on questions respecting their own constitution and laws. (16 Wal., 678.)

Courts of the United States have no authority to adopt provisions of State laws which are repugnant to or incompatible to an act of Congress. (Watson vs. Tarpley, 18 How., 517.)

While the courts of the United States will enforce the laws of the while the courts of the United States will enforce the laws of the several States in suits pending in them, and will regard as authoritative the construction put by the State courts of last resort on the constitutions and statutes of the State, they will not allow the State law to change by implication the statutes of the United States. The rule does not apply to controversies wherein Federal questions arise, or to cases requiring the construction of the statutes of the United States. Otherwise there would be no uniformity of decision in the courts of the United States, and the statutes, like a chameleon, would take their hue from the legislation and peculiar jurisprudence of each State. In controversies between citizens of the several States, and where jurisdiction rests on reasons other than the fact of a Federal ingredient, the United States courts generally execute the State law as the courts of the State do wherein they are held, but on questions of general commercial law and the enforcing and construction of the statutes of the United States they are not governed by the local law, nor do they follow it. To use the language of the courts:

In administering the laws of the Union the rule of decision of the Federal courts is unvaried throughout the Union. (Lorman vs. Clark, 2 McLean, 568.) In passing upon questions of general commercial law the Federal courts are not bound by the decisions of the courts of a State where the contract is sought to be enforced. (Jerrett vs. Howe, 2 Am. L. T. R., 87.)

The confiscation act must have the same construction in every State. And the deed made under the order of the court and by its officer must mean the same in Louisiana and Maine and in every State of the Union.

The statutes of the United States are and must be the supreme law of the land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, uniform in their meaning, construction, and operation.

Certainly, if anything can be settled it is by the rules of law; it is that this claim has no standing here as a legal claim, such as could be enforced if this was a controversy between rival litigants. It seems to me to fall far short of that on every legal principle.

My eloquent friend from Louisiana [Mr. Ellis] with peculiar power asks us to rise above the rules of the law and do full justice as measured by a higher standard. These rules are the contributions of the law and do full justice as measured by a higher standard.

ared by a higher standard. Those rules are the crystallized wisdom of the ages, and when we go beyond them we are liable to go a long way astray; but is this the case to invite us to pour out the generosity and bounty of the Government? The money is not ours, or we might and bounty of the Government? The money is not ours, or we might indulge our generosity to an unlimited extent. Every cent of it is the people's and we are the trustees of their sacred trust, and the law generally furnishes the safest rule for our action and conduct.

But who asks this generosity and bounty? Not the poor or the ignorant, but the learned, lettered, and accomplished attorney whose name as counsel can be often found in the highest court of the United States. He attempted to speculate on property that had been for States. He attempted to speculate on property that had been for-feited as he claimed. He did not seek to deprive the offender. He sought by an ex parte proceeding to destroy the heritable blood of the offender and deprive the expectant heir, who had done no wrong, of his patrimony. He sought further, through this abortion of a decree, where no notice had been given to lien-holders, to strip them of their claims because the proceedings, in the language of my friend from New York, was against the "rem," and he need not go any further than the rem, and without paying them any of the purchase-money hold the property free of their liens.

I confess I have no such love for this confiscation act, or the speculators who sought to enrich themselves by good hargains the reunder ulators who sought to enrich themselves by good bargains thereunder while the owners were ruined, as to bend the rules very far to extend while the owners were ruined, as to bend the rules very far to extend the one or help the other. I confess some natural repugnance both to the machine and its operator. The good President of the United States would not indorse that machine, even when manufactured to order by his party friends, until the constitutional rights of a guiltless posterity was recognized and protected. The claimant sought to override that right, and comes here like the Jew who demanded the pound of flesh, and when the courts said he could not take a single drop of blood from an innocent posterity, he then wanted to be allowed "his principal, and let him go." I am unwilling to do more for him than was done for his prototype. He perhaps expected to find in the Federal courts a power that would override the joint resolution of Congress and the law giving every man, and woman, too, whose rights are affected by a litigation a day in court, but he failed, and he found no "second Daniel" in the judiciary of the Union.

They were not eight to seven for him; but hearing him in his own behalf in the Supreme Court they refused to hear counsel on the other side, and turned him away empty. They said that the confiscation act interpreted in the light of the concurrent joint resolution of Congress did not mean that any interest passed to the purchaser of confiscated property except the former title of the offending party, and that only for the farm of his party all life. They did not mean that life.

cated property except the former title of the offending party, and that only for the term of his natural life. They did not make the law; they declared that was the law as intended to be made—was the law when the forfeiture occurred and when the sale was made, and that Madame Micou's mortgage remained unaffected by the proceeding to which she was not a party. And when Day found he had nothing by his forfeiture but the title of Judah P. Benjamin and had lost both his speculation and his money, I think I hear him saying:

Why then the devil give him [her] good of it! I'll stay no longer question.

I demand no forfeit of his goods, nor any hanging as was done in the court of Venice, but cannot think that claimant is the person on whom to lavish the substance of a long-suffering people.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. O'CONNOR. If the committee will come to an understanding to take a vote immediately at the close of my remarks, I will now proceed. If that understanding cannot be had, I will move that the committee rise in order that the House may fix a limit to this debate. I believe that according to the rules of the House I am entitled to the last speech before the vote is taken on this bill. I simply wish to understand whether there can be an agreement that I shall now say what I have to say, and that the committee will then proceed to

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Philips] desires to speak upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] to move that the committee rise?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do move that the committee now rise for the

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Burrows reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day, and had come to no resolution thereon.

L. MADISON DAY.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Private Cal-mittee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Private Calendar; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the bill for the relief of L. Madison Day be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. FROST. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] so as to limit debate to five minutes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman from South Carolina who has charge of this bill would be entitled to one hour to conclude the debate, but he is willing to restrict himself to thirty min-ntes. I think the House will not treat him with proper considera-tion unless it gives him this much time.

The amendment of Mr. Frost was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. O'CONNOR to limit debate to thirty minutes was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. O'CONNOR that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Private Calendar was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Burrows in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BARBER.] Mr. BARBER. Mr. Chairman, though I had no particular desire to address the committee on this case, yet as a member of the Committee on Claims who concurred in this report after examining the case carefully in connection with the gentleman who made the report, I thought I might be able to put the Committee of the Whole in possession of some facts that ought to be considered in voting upon the case.

I am wholly unable to discover any propriety whatever in attempt-I am wholy unable to discover any propriety whatever in attempting to apply to this case the common-law doctrine of caveat emptor. That is an old rule of the common law established as a matter of public policy between suitors in courts of justice. That is not this case. This question is between the sovereign power of this Government and L. Madison Day, its citizen. We attempted by virtue of the sovereign power of this Government to seize this property and confiscate it, between the sovereign areas a posticipant in the modelling. power of this Government to seize this property and confiscate it, because Judah P. Benjamin was a participant in the rebellion. We authorized our court to condemn the property; and we invited citizens of all classes to come forward and purchase it. We did this in violation of the Constitution of the United States. We ourselves did it—the sovereign power of this country. We undertook to sell to Mr. Day this property. We took his money; and it does not lie in our mouths to say that he bought it at his peril, for that would be to take advantage of our own wrong—our own deliberate attempt to violate the Constitution of the United States. That is all there is in this

We have this man's money in the Treasury; he has nothing. It has been intimated here that he had the use of this property. But every lawyer knows that on failure of title the party evicted is accountable

Mr. ATHERTON. Certainly not in this case, because Benjamin was entitled to the property until that time.

Mr. BARBER. The mortgagee might hold Day responsible.

Mr. ATHERTON. No; the mortgagee would not be entitled to

Mr. BARBER. Well, the question would be between Benjamin and the mortgagee. Now, I say the reason of the rule failing the doctrine itself fails, and the attempt to apply the rule caveat emptor ought not to prevail.

Mr. PHILIPS. Mr. Chairman, I never heard of this claim until it was taken up for consideration in the Committee of the Whole House. It attracted my attention because of the novel propositions of law asserted in the report of the committee and the extraordinary grounds for equitable relief assumed by the claimant. He places his right to relief upon three grounds:

First. Because he was misled by the Government through the action of the district court into the belief that he was to have the property free from incumbrance and in fee.

Second. Because the marshal as agent of the Government made certain statements at the time of the sale as to the mortgage, and because the marshal executed to him a warranty deed.

Third. The Government is bound by the conduct of the marshal, be-

Third. The Government is bound by the conduct of the marshal, because it ratified his acts by the receipt of the purchase-money.

The whole foundation of this claim crumbles to pieces by a simple reference to the act of Congress of July 17, 1862, (12 United States Statutes, 591,) under which the property of Judah P. Benjamin was seized and sold. The proceeding was statutory. There was no civil law, Code Napoleon, or Louisiana code about it. It had its origin and completion in a Federal statute. There were established the boundary lines of jurisdiction; there were fixed the character of the property to be confiscated and the nature of the estate any purchaser could acquire under it. The whole proceeding being a creature of the Federal statute, it possessed no quality, or attribute, or function not derivable from the statute itself. Keeping within its letter and spirit, there was safety; passing beyond this in search of something prompted by greed and avarice, the claimant got hurt. The fifth section of the act authorized "the President to cause the seizure of all the estate and property of anybody else; not the interest of mortgagees or any other interest of any other party. The sixth section is gagees or any other interest of any other party. The sixth section is still more explicit:

All the estate and property, moneys, stock, and credits of such persons shall be liable to seizure as aforesaid.

The seventh section prescribes the manner of the condemnation of such property. It is a proceeding in rem in the United States courts, "which proceedings shall conform as nearly as may be to proceedings in admiralty and revenue cases." That is as to the manner, the mode of judicial procedure. The court conducting the condemnation should conform as nearly as the provisions of this act will permit to the eonform as nearly as the provisions of this act will permit to the methods in admiralty and revenue cases.

The eighth section directs the making of a deed, and for vesting absolutely in the purchaser all the estate of the libelee—that and nothing more. And on the same day of the passage of this act Congress passed a joint resolution explanatory and declaratory of this act, so as to make it conformable to the spirit of our Constitution in pari materia, by which the act was not to be "so construed as to work a forfeiture of the real estate of the offendee beyond his natural life."

a forfeiture of the real estate of the offendee beyond his natural life." Now, I submit it to every impartial, candid mind, to every intelligent lawyer in this House, to say if the provisions of this statute are not plain and simple. Ought there among honest, law-abiding men to have been any two opinions as to its meaning and purposes?

What was the object of the act? Its preamble recites it clearly, boldly. It was "to confiscate the property of rebels," not anybody else's property, and only the life estate of the offender. And yet the district court of Louisiana, if the claimant is to be believed, not only in the teeth of the joint resolution of Congress, which was a part and parcel of the act itself, undertook by its decree to confiscate the fee to the land, but to wipe out and destroy the estate of somebody else in this land—a third party—a mortgagee, who years before the war had loaned Benjamin $10,000 and taken a conveyance of this land as security.

nad loaned Benjamin $10,000 and taken a conveyance of this land as security.

Think of this but for a moment. The mortgagee, against whom no intimation is made that he had offended his Government—who, for aught that appears, may have been a resident of Massachusetts or Missouri and loyal to the Government—held as security for his debt, not only the life estate, but the fee, if in the mortgageor—his mortgage by a mere sweep of the recorder's pen was satisfied and wiped out in toto, when the Government could only sell the life estate.

Nor is this all. The very confiscation act hore on its face unmis-

Nor is this all. The very confiscation act bore on its face unmistakable evidence that Congress never contemplated affecting any other interest than that of the libelee, not only by the plain language of the sections already quoted, but by the provisions of section 6, which, after allowing sixty days to the offending parties to return to their allegiance after due warning, &c., by the President, says:

And all sales, transfers, or conveyances of any such property, after the expira-tion of the said sixty days, shall be null and void.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius is a well-understood legal maxim. Why prohibit the conveyance or incumbrancing of the property after a given period if the monition seizure and sale had the effect to wipe out all incumbrances and to conclude all incumbrancers and claims of every degree and from every grantee?

This claimant talks about being an innocent purchaser! Who is he that he should before this Congress and the country lay claim to that charity invoked by the ignorant? He is a lawyer of high degree, sharp in practice, and old in experience. He made his own brief, and argued his own cause in propria persona in the Supreme Court in resisting the claim of the mortgagee, and displayed his usual tact in trying-

To veer and steer and tack a cause Against the weather-gauge of laws

If fame has not overdone his reputation he had long been a prowler among ancient moldy records to disturb quiescent titles on which generations of unsuspecting families had reposed. By all the trainings of his mind and the habits of his profession he had learned to look well to the titles of lands in judicial sales and knew the need of investigation, not only into existing incumbrances, but into the powers of courts to adjudicate concerning the divestiture of titles. So when he tells us, in the report of the committee read before us, that he did not know of the existence of the mortgage in question when he bought, he excites my incredulity. Why, the very court decreeing the sale of the property, made an order for the satisfaction of the mortgage, not as if it had been or was to be satisfied by payment, but by a mere brutum fulmen of the court, the violence of which should by a mere brutum fulmen of the court, the violence of which should have been apparent to any honest mind.

The claimant, too, says the marshal at the sale proclaimed that all mortgages would be satisfied. Was not all this notice? Notice, say the books, is actual, not only where the party sought to be affected knows of the existence of the particular fact in question, but where he is conscious of having the means of knowing it. "Where the purchaser has knowledge of any fact sufficient to put him upon inquiry as to the existence of some right or title in conflict with that he is about to purchase, he is presumed either to have made the inquiry and ascertained the extent of such prior right or to have been guilty of a degree of negligence equally fatal to his claim to be considered a bona fide purchaser." (48 Mo., 370; 15 N. Y., 359.)

If this man did not know of this mortgage it was because he did not want to know. It was of public record. His avaricious eye was so filled with visions of fat grabs, of luxuriant homes, and profitable speculations under this confiscation act that he sought for nothing so much as to acquaint himself and to indoctrinate the Federal ing so much as to acquaint himself and to indoctrinate the Federal court at New Orleans with the customs of a feudal age and despotic practice that obtained in the proceeding in rem in the British Isles, where it was held that the hanging of a red rag from a port of customs in Britain was sufficient notice to an absent debtor in the Indias to warrant the seizure and despoiling of his property.

Why, sir, the order of publication itself, in the confiscation proceedings against Judah P. Benjamin, shows that it was not designed to ings against Judah P. Benjamin, shows that it was not designed to affect anybody else but the libelee. It was for persons interested at a given time to appear and show cause why "the right, title, and interest therein (of this real estate) of the said J. P. Benjamin should not be condemned and sold according to law."

The Supreme Court of the United States in Day vs. Micou, (18 Wallace, 156,) therefore rightly and justly decided that it was only the right, title, &c., of the libelee, and nobody else, that was to be or could be sold, and then only his life estate. That the district court New Orleans could have entertained any other view is but an eviof New Orleans could have entertained any other view is but an evidence of how sadly the war spirit and the mad reign of passion had pervaded even the judiciary of certain localities. And when Mr. Day comes here and says he, as a lawyer, believed in the validity and right of such action, he confesses that he was particeps criminis. He was not only trying and seeking to carry the confiscation act (certainly extreme and severe enough as a war measure, having its birth amid the threes and convulsions of the shock of dreadful battle) far beyond both its letter and spirit, in making it reach out its Briarean arms so as to take within its grasp the debts of innocent and unapprised third parties, but he sought to have the penalties of the offending father visited upon the heads of his unoffending offspring and heirs—a monster of British tyranny, against which the best blood of our forefathers was poured out as water, and against which they entered their solemn protest in the very chart of our liberties.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, it is a historical fact with which the newspapers of the day at the time teemed and was known to every reader of newspapers in this broad land, that the confiscation act, as discussed and passed by Congress, was disapprobated by President Lincoln, who ever had a warm place in his heart for justice tempered Lincoln, who ever had a warm place in his heart for justice tempered with mercy. He disapproved of it because he believed it violative of the second clause of section 2 of article 3 of the Federal Constitution, which declares that "no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted;" and it was to prevent his threatened veto of the bill that Congress, on the day of its passage, passed the joint resolution limiting its operation to the life estate of the offender.

The following is President Lincoln's message accompanying the confiscation act when he returned it to Congress:

confiscation act when he returned it to Congress:

Considering the bill for "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes," and the joint resolution explanatory of said act, as being substantially one, I have approved and signed both. Before I was informed of the resolution I had prepared the draught of a message, stating objections to the bill becoming a law, a copy of which draught is herewith submitted.

ARRAHAM LINCOLN. ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The pretense, therefore, of this claimant that he supposed he was buying the fee is not only in defiance of the statute and in contempt of well-known history, but it is a sin against the memory of the dead President. And what is more conclusive against the good faith of President. And what is more conclusive against the good faith of this claimant, and an overwhelming proof of his cunning and sharp practice, is this fact, (which the public records disclose and which the report in this case conceals,) that he entered into possession of this property in the fall of 1864 as a tenant of the United States. At the tax sale, October 8, 1864, J. Madison Wells became the purchaser of this property, who conveyed the same to claimant March 25, 1865, prior to his purchase under the confiscation proceedings. When he purchased at this last sale he was evidently scaling to the transfer of the purchased of this last sale has we evidently scaling to the property. purchased at this last sale he was evidently seeking to strengthen his purchased at this last sale he was evidently seeking to strengthen his tax title, and was no doubt conniving to procure the largest result to this end in bringing about the extraordinary orders of the district court and the very verbose and remarkable deed gotten up for him by the marshal. When sued by the minor children, who are the beneficiaries of the mortgage deed, he set up as a defense not only the title acquired under the confiscation sale but also the tax title. How hollow and shallow, therefore, is the pretense that he was led into the purchase of this property and the expenditure of his money by reason of the decree of the district court and the assurances of the marshal at the sale.

Juggling and contriving, as he was by cumulative titles to acquire this property, it is imbecile to conclude that this adroit lawyer was induced to make this last purchase in ignorance of the conditions of this title. The extraordinary conduct of the district court and the remarkable character of the marshal's deed find their explanation in the solicitude of this speculation to acquire a handsome estate.

Why did the marshal make him a warranty deed? There is nothing here to show that the court ever ordered such a deed to be made. It had no authority to make such an order. Every lawyer knows that. If this marshal put into the deed a covenant of title it was his own voluntary, over-officious act, for which the Government is in no wise responsible.

Rorer, a standard author on judicial sales, pages 167, 168, says:

It is a well-settled principle that in judicial sales there is no warranty. The officer, trustee, or person executing the deed is the mere agent or instrument of the court; is not liable for defect of title or insufficiency of the proceedings; nor at all, except for fraud, unless he conveys with warranty, and then the covenant of warranty binds him personally, and him only.

So if there was a warranty of title the marshal himself was liable, and not the Government, and the claimant should be relegated to his action on his alleged covenants for breach against the marshal.

The doctrine of respondent superior invoked by the claimant, and over which he has, through this report, shed so much of the gladsome light of judicial learning, has no sort of application here. There is no principal and agent about this case. The court in dealing with the subdefined and limited statute. The marshal was in no sense an agent. He was a mere ministerial officer of the court, to carry out and execute only such decree and order as the court, under the statute, might rightfully make. This whole question was settled fully by the Supreme Court in the Monte Allegro case, 9 Wheat., 616, and text-writers and the profession universally have acted on it until it has become canon of the law.

When the claimant comes here asserting as the basis of relief the doctrine of this report, he either assumes that Congress is ignorant of long-settled truisms in law or he expects us to fly in the face of principles which the courts have settled and the experience of ages has demonstrated the wisdom of. I for one shall not by my vote unsettle them to oblige a man whose very profession should teach him

"The rule of caveat emptor applies in all its rigor," says Rorer, page 168, "to judicial sales of real property." And the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Monte Allegre case, said, more than fifty years ago:

Generally in all judicial sales the rule caveat emptor must necessarily apply from the nature of the transaction, there being no one to whom recourse can be had for indemnity against any loss which may be sustained. Is there, then, (they ask,) anything peculiar in the powers of a court of admiralty that will authorize its interposition or justify granting relief to which a party is not entitled by the settled rules of the common law? We know of no such principle.

Congress never contemplated that the Government should become a guarantor of titles under this or any other penal statute. The Government was not presumed to know anything about the condition or complications of the title. The statute was before this lawyer purchaser. It was so plain and explicit that no man compos mentis had a moral right to misunderstand it. No man should be held blameless who gave his sanction to the outrage upon common right and law attempted by the Louisiana district judge.

The money arising from this sale is not in the Treasury, as has been so repeatedly asseverated in this discussion. It has been expended as a war fund in obedience to the requirement of the confiscation act. If this man Day is to be paid this sum of $5,400 it is to come out of money this man Day is to be paid this said of $5,400 it is to come out of money to be wrung from the over-burdened tax-payers of this country.

If, Mr. Chairman, we shall establish the precedent for the doctrine of respondeat superior and of warranty of titles in these judicial sales, what a swarm of claims may we not expect to come up here from all over the country, from that hungry, voracious crew of land-grabbers, the green-goggled, faded-umbrella, battered-high-hat "Captain Wragge," who sought fortunes in this class of forced sales! The gluttons who saw in them more "millions" than Colonel Sellers did in an illimitable expanding hog market and the myriads of sore-eyed an illimitable, expanding hog market, and the myriads of sore-eyed Asiatics, are to-day "as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, the can-kers of a calm world and a long peace." We are now asked by the pas-sage of this bill to invite this disappointed army of speculators to turn upon the public Treasury for the recovery of the money which they put into a lottery. There are now pending before this Congress, in the House and the Senate, similar bills. Where is to be the end? Will not members pause and think what they are doing before voting for this bill?

The property of one McVeigh, of Virginia, was attempted to be confiscated in 1863. When the libelee appeared in court by his counsel to answer, in obedience to the monition to show cause why his property should not be confiscated, the court struck out his answer on the ground that he was a "resident at Richmond, within confederate lines, and a rebel." Judgment by default was rendered, and the property sold.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in reviewing this proceeding of the lower court as to the validity of such a judgment, held that it was void, and that the purchaser acquired no title whatever.

Judge Swayne, delivering the opinion of the court, used the following strong language:

A different result would be a blot upon our jurisprudence and civilization. We cannot hesitate or doubt on the subject. It would be contrary to first principles of the social compact and of the right administration of justice. (McVeigh vs. United States, 11 Wallace R., 259, 267, December term, 1870.)

United States, 11 Wallace R., 259, 267, December term, 1870.)

The case of another of these purchasers is reported in 3 Otto, 274–284, reaffirming the above case, in a most elaborate opinion. These purchasers are now before Congress with relief bills claiming the return of their purchase-money. Their claim is stronger than that of Day, because the judgments under which they purchased were absolutely void and the purchasers acquired nothing, whereas Day did acquire under his purchase the life estate.

Yet the Judiciary Committee of this House, in report No. 627, report adversely against the claim of the purchaser under the judgment against the McVeighs. Another of these purchasers, at this session of Congress, presented a bill for relief to the Senate, and the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, on the 16th of February, 1880, made the following report, (No. 260:)

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (8. No. 280) for

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (8. No. 280) for the relief of Ann Gregory, widow of Charles N. Gregory, deceased, report:

That the rule of caveat emptor applies to sales of the character mentioned in the preamble to said bill, and that the committee find nothing in the circumstances of this case that should except it from the operation of that rule. They therefore recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

From all of which it is apparent that the judgment of the Judiciary Committees of both branches of Congress is in exact accord with the opinions of the Supreme Court that the doctrine of caveat emptor does apply to such sales, and that the purchasers are speculators entitled to no equitable consideration.

THE WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

But the claimant says there was no consideration received for his purchase-money, and it is unconscionable for the Government to keep the money. Every speculator at a judicial sale who loses his game has the same equity. "You pay your money and take your chance." Day got all he was entitled to under the law—the life estate. He took it cum onere. As the mortgagee held both the life estate and the fee as security for his debt, Day, as the purchaser of the particular estate, had I presume a right in equity to compel the mortgagee to first explants his security on the fee hefore selling the life estate and first exhaust his security on the fee before selling the life estate, and if the sale of the fee would not satisfy the mortgage, and Day was unwilling to pay the balance to save his particular estate, it was his fault or misfortune.

But it is claimed that under the civil code of Louisiana where a But it is claimed that under the civil code of Louisiana where a purchaser at an execution sale is evicted and loses the purchased property "he shall have his recourse for reimbursement against the debtor and creditor." The supreme court in the Monte Allegre case, supra, decided directly and flatly that in such sales as the one under discussion "the rule of caveat emptor must necessarily apply from the nature of the transaction, there being no one to whom recourse can be had for indemnity for any loss which may be sustained."

This Louisiana code has nothing whatever to do with a sale made ander the provisions of a Federal statute. Such a construction would produce jars and collisions unbearable in the working of our federative and State systems. In their appropriate spheres each is exclusive and supreme. In the enforcement of domestic judgments founded on a local statute, the State court proceeds according to its own prescribed methods and regulations. So the General Government, in enforcing judgments rendered in its own courts under a Federal statute proceeds according to its statute and its own prescribed rules. ute, proceeds according to its statute and its own prescribed rules. Otherwise it would have no uniform fixed laws and practice for administering justice, nor litigants in its courts any equality of right. The invocation of this provision of the Louisiana code is an admission that if this sale had occurred in any other State than Louisiana the doctrine of caveat emptor would apply. Can it be possible that under this confiscation act, and under a Federal statute, striking at the property and punishing political offenders on the theory that the Government reaches the offender as a citizen, that a purchaser under a judgment of confiscation in one State would not acquire the same right and the same interest as a purchaser under a judgment rendered in any other Federal court in any other State? Or that the liabilities of the Government to the purchaser would not be the same all over the Union? The absurdity of a contrary doctrine is too palpable for argument.

This question was fully discussed and settled by the Supreme Court of the United States at an early day in the case of Wayman vs. Southard, 10 Wheat.; reaffirmed in Riggs vs. Johnson County, 6 Wall., and in the case of ______, 9 Wall.

This Louisiana statute has never been adopted by Congress as applicable to proceedings of Federal courts sitting in Louisiana.

But this Louisiana code, like all the cases cited by the claimant, has reference to contracts between parties out of which arise mutual obligations, debts, judgments, &c., and has no application to cases where the sovereign proceeds in invitum against the property of the offending citizen for the enforcement of a penal statute.

This Louisiana statute, too, unquestionably applies to cases of sales under judgments in personam, for it is a well-settled rule that judgments in rem on constructive service bind only the res, the thing seized. Even under the provisions of the Louisiana code "the purchaser shall first take execution against the debtor, and upon the return of such execution no property found, then he shall be at liberty to take out execution against the creditor." Has Day done this? Has he exhausted his remedy against Judah P. Benjamin? This he must show before he comes on to the creditor Government. Who knows but what Benjamin has property in Louisiana?

Suppose Mr. Day follows Benjamin to London? I would like to see him grapple with this judicial "lion of the tribe of Judah" on such monstrous propositions of law as he asserts in this report such monstrous propositions of law as he asserts in this report.

Three years ago I looked in upon the House of Lords of the British Parliament. It had not been long since there left his once happy home under the genial sky of the Pelican State, a beaten, disappointed man, once a leader among his people. He had landed at Liverpool moneyless, friendless, and homeless. He sought but for a resting-place and bread. Before this great House of Lords, on this grand theater where genius and learning had wrought their mightiest achievements in the world's civilization, I then saw this wanderer from our shores pleading a cause before this august tribunal sitting as a high court of appeals. Every ever and ear were given to his every word as to an appeals. Every eye and ear were given to his every word as to an oracle of the law. I inquired of an English barrister near me, who that was? He whispered to me "that is Judah P. Benjamin, the foremost lawyer in England." Differing as we had during the war, yet my American heart felt a tinge of pride to remember that he was of "my own my native level."

of "my own, my native land."

In a text-book of this great jurist, now of international authority, as by all text-writers and jurists, this doctrine of caveat emptor, especially as against the sovereign power, is asserted in all its breadth. And if the voice of the law and wise statesmanship could be heard and heeded in this House, instead of a mandlin sentimentality, and a timidity in the performance of public duty this Congress would see the idity in the performance of public duty, this Congress would say to this claimant: You paid your money on the chances of a speculation under a statute plain and explicit. Had you realized your expected profits, the Government would have no claim on you for a share, nor have you any on the Government for your losses. He who ventures must sometimes lose

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine,

[Mr. FRYE.] Mr. FRYE.]
Mr. FRYE. Two minutes are sufficient for me to make all the speech I wish to make about this question. I investigated it once with a great deal of care, as a member of the Judiciary Committee. Gentlemen may bury this question as they please under glittering generalities or discussions of carefully drawn legal points, but there is no question of caveat emptor or caveat anything else about it. The involve case is this. The Itited States Convenient when the representations of the care in this. simple case is this: The United States Government, upon the represample case is this: The United States Government, upon the representations of its own officers, obtained from this man $5,400 in money, and he received not a single inch of ground or anything else for the money which he paid. The United States Government guaranteed, to all intents and purposes, that the property was free from incumbrance. It was not free from incumbrance, and the man lost his money. He now asks the Government to pay him back that money, without one cent of interest for the ten or lifteen years during which the Government has held it. Lawyer after lawyer has great hour. without one cent of interest for the ten or fifteen years during which the Government has held it. Lawyer after lawyer has spent hour after hour here trying to convince this House that it is not legal to pay back this money. I say there is not a man on this floor who, under similar circumstances, would not feel bound on his honor to pay back every dollar of the money with interest. Now, in Heaven's name, shall not this great Government, in dealing with its citizen, do what you or I or any honorable man would feel bound to do, without any law on the subject? The simple principles of good morals, of high honor, would compel any one of us to do toward another man what this man asks the Government shall do toward him.

Mr. PHILIPS. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to ask him a question?

him a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri to ask a question.

Mr. PHILIPS. I should like to know what the difference is between the case now before the House and the case of the Monte Al-legre, 9 Wheaton, 616?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will state to you the difference. That is the case of the sale of condemned personal property, and there was no warranty. There was no representation by the marshal at the sale that the purchaser was to get a clear and unencumbered title.

Mr. PHILIPS. That is where the gentleman misrepresents the facts of history.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Read the whole of that case.

Mr. PHILIPS. That was a marshal's sale of tobacco by sample.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. PHILIPS. And there was a misrepresentation as to the quality of the article sold; and the purchaser came back for his purchasemoney. But the Supreme Court held that—

Generally in all judicial sales the rule caveat emptor must necessarily apply from the nature of the transaction, there being no one to whom recourse can be had for indemnity against any loss which may be sustained. Is there, then—anything peculiar in the powers of a court of admiralty that will authorize its interposition or justify granting relief to which a party is not entitled by the settled rules of the common law?

They say:

We know of no such principle.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Who received the money for which the tobacco was sold?

Mr. PHILIPS. The Government.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Did the Government hold it?
Mr. PHILIPS. Of course the Government held it; and the imputation of fraud which the gentleman from Maine makes against good faith would apply to the Supreme Court of the United States, which decided the identical question involved here.
Mr. O'CONNOR. That, sir, has nothing to do with this case. The Government of the United States sold by sample, and held up the sample. In this case the Government of the United States when they advertised this property for sale represented to every hidder at that advertised this property for sale represented to every bidder at that sale that they were to give to the purchaser a free and unencumbered title; and I say now for the Government of the United States to go behind that warranty, to go behind that stipulation, to go behind that representation, is to cheat the plaintiff, who stands before the Congress of the country and asks his money shall be returned to him.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to

Mr. O'CONNOR. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I must refuse to yield to anybody. When I first opened this case I yielded to everybody; but now I propose to yield to nobody for the few minutes which

I say, Mr. Chairman, neither by the law of Louisiana, where the law of caveat emptor does not apply, nor by the common law of England, which is the common law of all the States of this Union, can it be held for an instant that the Government of the United States has the right to retain this money and the claimant has not the right to

If the House will bear with me for a moment I will show this is a case of false representation. It is a case in which the Government of the United States did not sell the interest of Judah P. Benjamin; of the United States did not sell the interest of Judah P. Benjamin; the Government sold the thing itself, and when it sold it, it warranted it. But the party has been evicted and deprived of his possession by failure of the warranty on the part of the Government. This is a case of sale under a void judgment or void decree; and I can give you decisions from every court and every State in this Union that, where property has been sold under a void judgment or a void decree, the purchaser is entitled to recover the purchase price.

I will give you first a case from Kentucky. In that State it is well settled that where a plaintiff in execution points out property or is in any way concerned in causing property to be seized and sold as the property of the defendant, a purchaser who takes nothing by his pur-any way concerned in causing property to be seized and sold as the property of the defendant, a purchaser who takes nothing by his purchase may enjoin the collection of a sale bond given on account of the purchase. (2 J. J. Mar., 35; 7 J. J. Mar., 641.)

I quote, in the next place, an English case. In Newdigate vs. Davy (1 Lord Raym., 742) it was held that money paid under a judgment which was void for want of jurisdiction and authority in the court to render the judgment could be recovered back. So I say to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Herbert,] here, in a case void for want of jurisdiction and authority in the court to render the judgment, it was held that the money in that case could be recovered back.

I come now to a case from Tennessee. In Henderson vs. Overton (2 Yerger, Tennessee, 394) it was held that caveat emptor was the rule

(2 Yerger, Tennessee, 394) it was held that caveat emptor was the rule

(2 Yerger, Tennessee, 394) it was held that caveat employ was the rule as to the title, but that a purchaser under a void judgment could recover back the purchase price paid for the property.

I quote now from the great State of Virginia. In Virginia it is held that notwithstanding a purchaser at a judicial sale "takes all the risk of the title," yet where the sale is under a void decree the purchaser is not only entitled to a return of the purchase price but is the property. (Sands as subrogated to the creditor's rights against the property. Lynham, 27 Grattan's Reports, 291, 304.)
In Maine, where a guardian's sale is void by reason of his not having given the bond required by law, the money can be recovered back from the guardian. (Williams vs. Martin, 38 Maine, 47, 51.)

I quote you now from the case of Chapman vs. The City of Brook-

I quote you now from the case of Chapman vs. The City of Brooklyn, 40 New York, page 372, where it was held that a purchaser under a void judgment could recover back the purchase price from the city. And in the case of Schwinger vs. Hickock, 53 New York, page 285, it was held that the sale of property under a void judgment was a nullity, and that the money could be recovered back from the plaintiff in execution; as the purchaser, in the language of the court, acquired and could acquire no title under the sale. From Alabama, the State of the gentleman who seems to enter with so much zeal into this question. I quote: question, I quote:

In Bell vs. Craig (52 Ala., 215) the court, in reference to a void sale and the right of the purchaser to purchase price, says:

"If the sale was void the purchase-money was not assets in the hands of the administrator-in-chief. (Petit vs. Petit, 32 Ala., 288.) It belonged ex æquo et bono to the purchaser. Neither the administrator de bonis non nor the creditors or heirs of the intestate had any claim or right to it."

In Bland vs. Bowie, (53 Ala., 152, 162,) although it was considered that sales of lands of a decedent made under an order of the probate court are judicial sales, to which the maxim caveat emptor applies in all its rigor, yet the court said:

"We do not doubt that it is competent for the purchaser, at any time after he discovers that the proceedings for the sale are void, to resort to a court of equity to compel the heir or devisee to elect a ratification or the revision of the contract of purchase. If the purchase-money has been paid and distributed to the heirs, or applied by the personal representative to the payment of debts, a court of equity would compel a conveyance of title from the heirs, if they could not successfully impeach the fairness of the sale." (Bell vs. Craig, 52 Ala., 215.)

In the case reported in 25 Ohio, it was held that money paid under a void judicial sale will be restored to the purchaser by the court; and it has been held by many courts that a plaintiff who sues out an execution on a void judgment is liable to an action for trespass. (Albe vs. Ward, 8 Mass., 85.)

Now, it might be said that this is not a void judgment. What is this judgment? The judgment in this case was a judgment of condemnation and forfeiture of these two lots of ground in the city of New Orleans, the same being the property of Mr. Benjamin, to the United States. But the judgment goes further. It provides for sale of this property and a decree that the marshal when he sold the property should make a title to the purchaser in which should be incorporated the certificate of the recorder of mortgages, showing that the mortgage had been canceled. Now, that act, I say, was a part of the judgment of the court, and if that judgment is void, then, under the theory of the cases that I have cited, the whole cause of the opposition falls to the ground and the claimant is entitled to his money.

I have, Mr. Chairman, voluminous cases which I might cite in support of the proposition set forth in my report, but my time is limited and I must hurry on. I must beg leave to say here that if we are to decide this case according to prejudice, that is one thing; but if we are to decide the case according to the laws of the land, according to justice and equity and good conscience, that is quite another thing. And I am bound to state to the House that I myself have been surprised and felt ashamed when this case came before the House two prised and felt ashamed when this case came before the House two weeks ago to hear whisperings along the rear of these benches that this claim should be put down because Madison Day was nothing but a "Union bummer." I was ashamed, too, to hear remarks made by gentlemen upon the other side that this case should be put down because Day was nothing but a "speculator."

Now, I have to state to this House that I, as a member of the Committee on Claims, regarded this case, and regard all other cases that come before me, in the light of a judge and not of a partisan. I have nothing to do with the character of L. Madison Day, and I am thankful for the sake of the old man that a democratic Representative has stood upon the floor of this Chamber to-day and borne testimony to stood upon the floor of this Chamber to-day and borne testimony to

Why, Mr. Chairman, a gentleman, a friend of mine, came to me to-day and stated that it was reported that Madison Day had "squatted" on this land before it was reported to the Government, and that it was in the record; but it is a base and malicious falsehood. There is nothing of the kind in the record of the case. I say that is not fair play in a high judicial tribunal like this, the Congress of the American people—

Mr. PHILIPS. If you will give me a chance to reply— Mr. O'CONNOR. You have had plenty of time. I am stating nothing more than what can be supported from the records in the case.

Now, I say it with pain, but I say it because I am bound for the sake of justice and the truth to say it, that these unfair and unjust whisperings to prejudice the claimant were made here. I have reported on this man's case judicially; I want him to be treated judicially; I want him to be condemned judicially, or I want him to have his money back, if he is entitled to recover it.

I say there is no law in the universe that would deprive him of the

I say there is no law in the universe that would deprive him of the right to recover that $5,400. I say a law of such a character as would deprive him of that right would disgrace the code of any barbarous nation on the face of the globe.

Why, the gentlemen here have endeavored to draw some kind of distinction between the law which would govern in the case of one individual and another, and that which would apply between an individual and the Government of the United States. Why, the Supreme Court of the United States has distinctly decided that point, and the rule of law applicable to the individual is distinctly applied to the United States by the Supreme Court. In both cases cited in the report of the committee on this case, The United States vs. State Bank and Merchants' Bank vs. United States, it is laid down in 6 Otto's Reports that the rules of law applicable to individuals apply to the United that the rules of law applicable to individuals apply to the United States, and that the United States, like an individual, must refund

States, and that the United States, like an individual, must refund money received without consideration given for the same, and which, according to natural justice and equity, ought to be refunded.

On the other side they brought in an appeal to the sympathies of the House for the heirs of Micou. Why, sir, the heirs of Micou have got all they were entitled to. They sold the property for $9,000, and have got the money. They have no claim to your sympathy. But the Government of the United States, which sold to Day this property, and sold it with a covenant and warranty in the deed that no incumbrance or lien should ever rest against it, has got to-day in its vaults $5,400 of his money; and I say in equity and in conscience the Government is bound to return that money to this claimant.

Mr. Chairman, I am very thankful to the House for the patience it

Mr. Chairman, I am very thankful to the House for the patience it has exhibited. I am very sorry so much of the public money has been consumed in the time that has been occupied in the consideration of this case; but I felt bound to discharge the duty I had to perform in connection with the bill I had in my charge; and I now perform in connection with the bill I had in my charge; and I now ask the committee to come to a vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question being put, there were—ayes 69, noes 40.

Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. HAMMOND of Georgia, called for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] and the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. WILLITS.]

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw the call for tellers.
Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It was I who made the call for tellers, and I do not withdraw it.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72,

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point that a quorum has not voted. Mr. CLYMER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. Burrows reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the Joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, &c., to the triennial committee of Knights Templar at Chicago.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City, Nebraska.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GAR-FIELD for three days.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Richard Atkins.

On motion of Mr. BEALE, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw the petition of — Tabb, now before the Committee on

On motion of Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Mrs. Mary Griffith.

COLUMBUS BARRACKS, OHIO.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting plans and estimates for chapel and school at Columbus Barracks, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR INSANE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to a probable deficiency in the appropriation for the Government Hospital for the Insane for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MACON, GEORGIA.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5718) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Macon, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move that the House do now adjourn. Mr. HAWLEY. I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn over, there were ayes 36, noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-seven minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 10, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m., Mr. Cox in the chair as Speaker

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read a letter received from the Speaker of the House. The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1880.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1880.

SIR: I expect to be absent from the House of Representatives during to morrow's (Saturday's) session, and in consequence herewith name and appoint you, under power given me by the rules of the House, to act as Speaker in my stead for that day.

Your abedient assent

Your obedient servant,

SAM. J. RANDALL, Speaker.

Hon. S. S. Cox, Representative from State of New York.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EVASION OF THE STAMP-TAX.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is on the Speaker's table a con-Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is on the Speaker's table a concurrent resolution of the Senate looking to the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses for a purpose which the resolution, if read, will explain. I ask consent that it be taken from the Speaker's table and acted upon now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That a joint committee, consisting of two members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, he appointed by the respective presiding officers, to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on cigars and other articles sub-ject to excise duties, what remedy can be provided by law, and with power to recommend such measures as they may deem proper by bill or otherwise.

Mr. MILLS. I would inquire what is the object of that resolution?
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. This subject has already been partially considered by a sub-committee of the House. This concurrent resolution was unanimously reported from the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and the concurrence of the House is asked for the purpose of authorizing the appointment of a sub-committee of the Committee of Finance of the Senate and a sub-committee of Ways and Means of the House to consider this subject. It is merely a matter of form to enable the two committees to act conjointly.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was taken up, considered, and adopted.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM C. EDMONSTON.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 432) to adjust and pay the account of William C. Edmonston; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.
Mr. CLYMER. Pending the demand for the regular order, I move that the morning hour of to-day be dispensed with.
Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take from

Mr. BILAND. I have demanded the regular order.
Mr. CLYMER. I will say to my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] that the regular order was demanded before I made the motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. CLYMER; and upon a division there were—ayes 126, noes 38.

Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. CONGER, and others called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, there being but 25 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of a quorum

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. MULDROW. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to ask consent to have printed in the Record a memorial.

Mr. CLYMER. If I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MULDROW] I must yield to others. I must insist upon my motion.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] moves that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up the Army appropriation bill. I suppose it will be competent for the Committee of the Whole to take up some other bill; it is not competent for the gentleman to move to go into Committee of the Whole for a particular purpose. When the House shall get into Committee of the Whole it will be competent for the committee to take up any subject it may choose.

mittee to take up any subject it may choose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Army appropriation bill would first come up in Committee of the Whole as the unfinished business.

Mr. ATKINS. My reason for making the remark is this: There are gentlemen on the other side of the House who desire to discuss the amendment offered by the Committee on Military Affairs to the Army appropriation bill. How long they desire to discuss it I do not know; nor do I know what the sentiment of the House is in regard to the time to be allowed for discussing that amendment.

time to be allowed for discussing that amendment.

I understand that there are some gentlemen who desire to take part in that discussion who are now absent and will not be present until Tuesday next. For one I am willing, as one member of the House and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to take up the Indian appropriation bill to-day and go on with it. The gentleman and as a memoer of the Committee on Appropriations, to take up the Indian appropriation bill to-day and go on with it. The gentleman in charge of that bill is now ready to go on with it, and the Army appropriation bill can be postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that the Committee of the Whole will have to regulate that when the House shall go into Committee of the

Mr. ATKINS. That was the inquiry I rose to make of the Chair. The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be arranged in Committee of the Whole. Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennnsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the point that the House cannot determine what bill the Committee of the Whole shall take up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair coincides with the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] and has so decided.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the Chair to state the question as being apon going into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already stated that the Committee of the Whole must control its own business.

Mr. CLYMER. I modify my motion so as to provide simply that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. This will leave the Committee of the Whole at liberty to decide what will take up.

The motion of Mr. Clymer was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. The Chair is informed that the amendment moved as an additional section by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs is now before the Committee of the Whole for general debate. The Chair before the Committee of the Whole for general debate. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. CONGER. I understood the proposition was to take up the Indian appropriation bill. If so, I raise the question of consideration at this time of the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the Indian appropriation bill is not before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. Is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] who has charge of the Indian appropriation bill now in the House?

Several MEMBERS. Yes.
Mr. HASKELL. Then I desire to ask whether he desires to take up the Indian bill now?

up the Indian bill now?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary question. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The Chair was in error in recognizing the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] He is informed that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] who moved the pending amendment desires to be heard upon it. Hence the Chair must recognize him.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cook] was going to "shoot" anybody on that side who discussed this question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I propose to occupy the time of the committee for only a moment. The question of "troops at the polls" occupied the time of this House in the last Congress for many weeks. It, perhaps, precipitated the extra session, in which the subject was It, perhaps, precipitated the extra session, in which the subject was cussed for months. The question originally before the House was this: whether or not a statute allowing the Army to be used by order of its Commander-in-Chief, or those controlling it, at the polls at elections in the States, to control or interfere with those elections, should be wiped out by repeal. A bill unobjectionable, so far as appropriations for the Army were concerned, with this proviso added to it, passed the House of Representatives at the last session of the last Congress. It was stricken out in the Senate. A conference of the two Houses was had. There was a failure of agreement by that conference; the term of the Congress expired, and the bill failed. In the extra session a bill embracing the same provisions was introduced, discussed for months, passed by this House, passed by the Senate, and sent to the acting President of the United States, by whom it was vetoed. The same proposition was afterward brought in as an independent measure, unconnected with appropriations; was fully discussed, passed by the House and by the Senate, and was again vetoed by the Executive. After all this there was added to the Army appropriation bill a clause identical with this amendment, namely:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

This of course did not propose to repeal any law; it was simply a prohibition upon the use of the Army or a condition that the appropriations should not apply if the Army should be thus used. This was adopted nearly unanimously. Those whom we on this side recognize as the leaders of the other side acceded to it. It was discussed but little, and when the vote was taken, it resulted as follows; republicans in Italics:

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 31, not voting 83; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

It will thus be seen that of the members voting upon this proposition, but twelve republican and nineteen democratic members voted tion, but twelve republican and nineteen democratic members voted against it. Now, it seems to me that when a proposition so mild and inoffensive as this has so lately and so unanimously met the concurring sentiment of both sides of this House, it is hardly reasonable and certainly not profitable to enter now into any further discussion of it.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition does not rise to the measure of my demands by any manner of means. No, sir, this tame, cowardly amendment does not come up to that standard of legislation which (had I the power) I would here and now unyieldingly insist upon. I would wipe out this un-American, anti-democratic, villainous statute, which owes its existence to the inspirations of fanaticism and to an era of hate; one which disgraces the statute-book, is a shameful parody on republican government, and an insult to the sovereign people of the country! ple of the country

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman state on which side the "hate" and "fanaticism" were?

Mr. SPARKS. I decline to answer questions. With this I am done. And now having occupied five minutes' of time to say this, I hope it will end the discussion so far as this side of the House is concerned. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman on the other side, [Mr. Robeson, of New Jersey.]

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman from Illinois did not answer where the fanaticism and the hate of these laws were.

Mr. ROBESON. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty minutes.
Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, according to the arrangement, and by virtue of the fact that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAW-LEY] is a member of the sub-committee and entitled to an hour in his own right, and as it was understood he should open the debate, if the committee will allow me, I should be glad to reserve whatever time has been extended to me by the gentleman from Illinois till after he has concluded.

Mr. SPARKS. I am willing to yield whatever remains of my time to that side of the House; and, as I have said, I yielded to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the floor in my own right, Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Appropriations Committee and a member of Conas a member of the Appropriations Committee and a member of Congress, for an hour. The gentleman from New Jersey is entirely right.

Mr. ROBESON. I only wish the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to understand how it is that I have taken the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no feeling in the matter at all. I am much obliged to the gentleman from New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey proceed

now with his remarks?

Mr. ROBESON. No, sir; I desire my time substituted for that of the gentleman from Connecticut; in other words, that the gentleman from Connecticut shall proceed now, and that I shall have my time hereafter. I will go on after he gets through.

Mr. FRYE. I am to follow the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. CLYMER. Let us have the regular order of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize first the gentleman from Connecticut if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is understood that I am not speaking in anybody else's time

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut in his own time, and he has the floor for an hour.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am well aware that many of these Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am well aware that many of these topics have been very thoroughly discussed during the sixteen weeks we spent here last summer, and yet I am not willing to pass by this bill and pending amendment without some remarks. I believe we have before us one of the most important questions which has agitated Congress for years; not altogether included in the simple amendment which the Committee on Military Affairs has proposed, but in the general policy of which that is a part; and chiefly, I may say, in the evident determination of the ruling majority of this House to insist upon forcing upon us political riders on appropriation bills. I think that involves a great constitutional right, involves a complete revolution in deliberative legislation. Whatever the amendment may be, whether it be altogether bad or only tainted and colored ment may be, whether it be altogether bad or only tainted and colored with badness, or whether it be altogether good, whether it be the devil's creed or the New Testament, I vote against any political amendment on an appropriation bill, and vote against that bill when the amendment shall have been put on it.

I believe that to be my duty; I ask no other man in the world to follow me. I think there is so much involved in the claim of the majority that I have not only the right, but it is my bounden duty to take that ground. I do it with the firmest conviction that I am right, and without hesitation. I rely upon my constituents to sustain me; I know they will; but whether they do or not, it is my ground.

I confess I was a little astonished at the declaration on the other side that they wanted no general debate and there ought to be none here. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have spent two days in this House lately, hurried as we have pretended to be, in discussing a little private bill—very little compared with the great interests of this country—involving the repayment of $5,000 to a citizen of Louisiana; two whole days we have spent on it, and yet gentlemen are suddenly seized with such a desire to economize time that they desire to force without a moment's debate a political amendment upon the Army bill.

I do not understand this. What change has come over the spirit I do not understand this. What change has come over the spirit of their dream? Last summer they were ready for nothing so much as debate. They appealed to English and American history to justify them in their alleged right to load down appropriation bills with amendments. They were all for talking. They appealed to the country; they challenged us to meet them at the polls and on the hustings. Now they pass the word that there shall be no general debate, and one of the best-natured men on the other side of the House said that if any man on that side wanted to debate this question he should be shot on the spot. I take it, therefore, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] is doomed, for the gentleman from Georgia who made that threat is a brave soldier and a man of his word. [Laugh-

I ask again what has come over them? Is it the frost of the last fall elections? Where were these gentlemen in the recent elections who rode about here last summer with spurs and plumes? Did they come to Maine, and Massachusetts, and Ohio, and New York, to advance these doctrines? Many of them whom we should have been glad to see there were absent. They failed to come, and yet the people tolerably well understood the issue. I confess I hoped to hear them. I am anxious because we want some speeches to circulate in the next fall campaign. We want some more of these fiery arguments made on that side of the House in denunciation of all military force, of all armed force in the American Government; in denunciation of what I conceive to be the incontrovertible right of the National Government. We want some more of those threats to repeal every word on the statute-book that was "born of the spirit of the war;" or, if you choose, "engendered by the hates of the war;" having in mind not alone the legislation of reconstruction, but manifesting also hostility to the I ask again what has come over them? Is it the frost of the last legislation of reconstruction, but manifesting also hostility to the famous constitutional amendments. I beg gentlemen of the majority to go on with the power they displayed last summer in laying down the principles of last summer. Why is it they are so silent? Is it in obedience to the commands of the whisperer of Gramercy Park? Does he object to the commands of the whisperer of Gramercy Park ? Does he object to this discussion? Is it because it will disclose a difference of opinion among themselves that they object to this debate? Possibly, for if you will take the members of this House aside, four out of five of them will tell you that political legislation on appropriation bills is unfair and unwise. Is there any further political motive in this enforced silence among men who dearly love to talk, and better still love to fight?

still, love to fight?

It was said last summer and last autumn that in order to insure the nomination and election of a certain presidential candidate, it was only necessary that the democratic party should maintain the policy of the extra session. Is it possible that the opponents of General Grant have laid in with the majority in this House not to have any warm political debate, lest it should bring about the nomination and election of that most distinguished gentleman? Have you not heard it said, gentlemen on the other side, as I have heard it said, that if the democratic party proceeds, insists upon its policy, the country will be ready to elect and inaugurate even John Brown, if he can be found? Are you aware of that fact? Do you know that defeat stares you in the face if you attempt to make as bold a fight as you made last summer? If you do not know it, I know it. I think you do know it, and therefore I understand this silence. I am not saying whether I want General Grant or not; but I have so much of the nature of ordinary men that I confess the more of that there is the more I am driven to combative feeling and the of that there is the more I am driven to combative feeling, and the less I care how pronounced and vigorous the man may be whom we nominate, for I am ready to meet every charge that we met before. I court it. I wish the majority to make absolutely certain the election of a republican President that we may have for four years more the country in the hands of the men who saved it, and under the legislation which saved it. Thereafter the census will dispose forever of all anxieties about a solid South.

Probably these are meany resultance, here who have visited Madage.

Probably there are many gentlemen here who have visited Madame Tussaud's gallery in London. Doubtless it has happened to some of them, as it has happened to a great many others, that in walking through those halls they have brushed against some lady or gentleman and have made ample apology to what turned out to be a wax figure. Is that side of the House to become a Madame Tussaud's collers?

A MEMBER. Jarley's wax-works.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall apologize if I say anything discourteous to the wax figures.

I see over there our witty friend from New York, [Mr. Cox.] We shall see our light and graceful friend from Michigan [Mr. Horr] in the rôle of Hamlet, walking over there, placing his tender finger upon the head of the gentleman from New York and exclaiming:

Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy. * * * Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment that were wont to set the table on a roar?

And he is silent. For the order is given that there shall be no general debate. I commiserate him and many others. How they rode through this arena! How the feathers danced in the sunlight! The feathers are here; but they are not on the head of the ostrich. His head is in the sand. [Laughter.]

I recollect how gallantly my chivalrous friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] came into the lists. "Where is my Highland laddie

There shall be no general debate on a great question, one of the greatest we have had here for years. But, Mr. Chairman, there will be general debate. I do not refer to this House alone. The general debate of this year began last summer, and it has not stopped; the general debate of the thousand cross-roads; the general debate in a thousand groves; the general debate in every shoe-shop and in every country groves; the general debate in every shoe-shop and in every country tavern and in the sheds of every meeting-house even on a Sunday, for there are men who believe that their duty to their country is quite near their duty to their God. And there will be general debate in the seven thousand periodicals published in this country. If you could see them flying through the air they would cloud the sky like the multitudinous flights of pigeons. The rolls of the great papers passed through the press at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, printed on both sides, cut, and folded. That is the general debate that you cannot suppress by the vote of a caucus here, and that the kindly gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cook] cannot shoot down.

The general debate has begun; we welcome it; we court it; we challenge it; because through that we expect to save our country. We have done it before and believe that we shall do it again.

I propose now to make a very brief discussion of the merits of this

I propose now to make a very brief discussion of the merits of this amendment.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. HAWLEY. I am willing to yield for general debate.
Mr. COX. My question is: Does it hurt the gentleman to kick at nothing? [Laughter.]
Mr. HAWLEY, Well, I was kicking at the entire democratic party, and not at the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

The amendment declares

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Now, it is a little difficult to construe that so as to get at the precise meaning of the gentlemen who invented and composed it. does not say that the Army shall not be paid its full rations, its full allowance for clothing, for transportation, for arms, and all the purposes for which the money is given in the bill. None of it is withheld. It does not even say that the Army shall not be used as a police force to keep the peace. It only says that none of this money shall be used for that. No one doubts the power of the President of the United States to put the Army anywhere he pleases within the limits of our land. He has the right to accumulate two companies, a reciprost ten thousand men if the charge of the New York Heat. a regiment, ten thousand men, if he chooses, at New York, at Hartford, at Cincinnati, or at Chicago. He is bound to have them wherever he has reason to suppose that the laws and Constitution may be defied. You cannot question the motive with which he places men at any particular point. You may say he has what you call a political motive, and we may say this motive is to see that the laws shall be obeyed in any emergency. He may have reason to expect that bad men are about to defy the Constitution and the laws beyond the power of the civil authority to subdue, and therefore he has placed the Army in such a position. You have not, then, forbidden him to use the Army in any way he sees fit under his views of constitutional You only intimate that the Army shall not be used as a police force.

Now, sir, I am not about to say just precisely how far I might be willing to agree to a proposition of that sort if it were an independent measure. As I interpret it, I could so word it as an independent measure. As I interpret it, I could so word it as an independent measure that there would be no strong objection to it, because we have never claimed that the Army can be used as a police force. But men dispute about these words. I should say that the use of the Army as a police force would imply something like this: the stationing of lines of armed men at the polls and thereabout; regulating the ticket peddlers and the canvassing and keeping the crowd away so as to maintain open lines; telling peaceably disposed men which way to go and how to keep order. That is properly the duty of the police force. And the police force is called upon to suppress such disorders or slight irregularities as are within their power as comparatively unarmed men.

But when the civil authority is unable to keep order, unable to protect peaceably disposed men in the exercise of their legal rights; when the tumult surpasses the power of constables and sheriffs and marshals, then I say, leaving the discretion where we must always leave it, in our rulers, absolute, overwhelming, crushing force may and ought to be brought in. And I do not care what the law is so it be a just and constitutional law. The State must take care of its State laws and the National Government must take care of its national We believe these laws concerning elections to be just and conlaws. We believe these laws concerning elections to be just and constitutional. We have the judgment of the Supreme Court with us. Then, if that be so, I have to say that there is no second of time in the year, there is no inch of space within the Union, when and where we may permit any man to successfully defy any law of the United States, the election laws included. And the man who is loyal to liberty, law, and the Constitution must believe that, or else believe that his Government is but a rope of sand.

I say I could vote for a bill embracing this idea; I would guard it against the misconstruction which some gentlemen of the majority place upon it. But we are under no obligation, as I view it, to recognize the merits of this amendment at all, if it has any. I do not care how much or how little of merit it has. It is brought in here upon an appropriation bill for the ordinary subsistence and maintenance of the Army of the United States. It is brought in here by the majority because they know that the minority here and the Senate of the United States, and the Executive in general, desire that this bill shall pass. It is brought in here because they know the absolute necessity of passing this bill; because they know that to attack and destroy this bill is to attack the Union in its jugular vein, is to cut its throat, to starve it, to kill it, to black-mail it, thumb-screw it, to play the highwayman upon it, to destroy it. That is what the destruction of the Army appropriation bill means; and they know how unwilling we should be to see it done. Therefore they dare to put on an appropriation bill that which they know is offensive to us and which is meant to put a slur on the Federal laws for the protection of elections. I say I could vote for a bill embracing this idea; I would guard it of elections.

The only gentleman on that side of the House who has thus far indulged in general debate expressed what I suppose to be the sentiment of that side—all of them. No; I do not believe that; I will qualify it. It is not the sentiment of all on that side, but of the qualify it. It is not the sentiment of all on that side, but of the controlling portion. I thank the gentleman for so much of "general debate" as he has given us in five minutes; and if that is to be all that we are to have, we will put it very prominently before the people, so that by the light of the few words which he has given us they may comprehend the amendment and the policy of the party. He denounced this legislation in reference to elections, which we deem to be patriotic and constitutional legislation, as villainous, born of hate. &c. Let me quote literally: of hate, &c. Let me quote literally :

Mr. Chairman, this proposition does not fully meet my views by any manner of means. This tame, cowardly amendment does not come up to that standard of legislation which I adopt on this subject. Had I the power I would insist upon something much stronger than this, and would unyieldingly insist upon its adoption. I would wipe out this un-American, unrepublican, undemocratic, villainous statute, which owes its existence to the inspirations of fanaticism and to an era of hate. It disgraces the statute-book of this country—

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman state on which side the "hate" and "fanaticism" were a

Mr. SPARKS. And it insults the sovereign people of this country.

He frankly announces the purpose of the democratic party, so far as he can foretell it, to be to wipe out from the statute-book every statute or line protecting Federal elections. That is frank, and if democrats agree with him, and think that a popular and constitutional issue, why, then, is there to be no general debate?

But as I said, the more important question concerns the alleged right to place general legislation on appropriation bills. It is a persistent endeavor to incorporate here a revolutionary policy, a policy revolutionary of the parliamentary history of Great Britain and of the United States. It is subversive of the freedom of debate, of the freedom of voting.

What is the use of a discussion of this amendment if we are to be absolutely compelled to take it? The Army appropriation bill is:

indispensable to the life of the Government; the amendment is a political and partisan measure which could wait an indefinite time and could be better discussed independently. What good does it do to make argument against this amendment if it is absolutely certain to pass? The democrats say that the Army shall not live without it, and we say the Army must live. There can be no freedom of debate or vote. It is our duty and only resort to vote against any political amendment, and vote against any appropriation bill containing a political amendment, until this practice shall have been abandoned.

It is a coercion of the Senate. We do not permit the Senate to originate revenue bills, and it is our claim that the Senate shall not originate appropriation bills, though it may amend those that have originated in the House. But what freedom of debate will the Senate have when political amendments are put on appropriation bills in the House, and it is told by the House that the money cannot be granted without those amendments?

without those amendments

In England the House of Lords discovered this one hundred and seventy years ago. During the long revolutionary period, before the advent of William of Orange, the British Parliament tried all manner of revolutionary pretexts to carry their purposes. After the government was fairly established in 1688, the House of Lords put its foot on this particular practice, and protested in a rule which remains upon the books, and will remain there, that such practices are sub-versive of the constitution and destructive of the rights of the House of Lords upon the books, and will remain there, that such practices are subversive of the constitution and destructive of the rights of the House of Lords.

Our Senate has taken precisely that ground before this, when a republican majority in the House of Representatives unwisely and unconstitutionally undertook to do precisely this very thing in connection with the use of the Army in Kansas, and brought on an extra session. And the discussion in the Senate showed republicans and democrats, the ablest and best men in the country, arguing against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans, argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans argue against this policy precisely in the line that we, the republicans argue against this policy precise and the majority of the features what political legislation shall go upon an appropriation bill, and the Senate cannot initiate an appropriation bill. That proposition hardly needs arguing.

This policy coerces, and is intended to coerce, the President. It compels him to forswear a constitutional right. I need not speak of the shall return it with his objections. He is sworn

These are not new ideas. I do not profess to consider them such in any degree. They are as old as the history of legislation in free governments. I have indicated the position of the British Parliament. It was claimed for a little while last summer, in the beginning of this debate, that we could find precedents in English history. They are not to be found, except in times of professed revolution of the wildest description and the excepting of the professed revolution of the wildest description, ending in the execution of one king and the expulsion of another. They are not to be found since Great Britain has had a true constitutional government and a really free Parliament.

I have heretofore called the attention of the House, and shall therefore do it but briefly now, to the history of our ideas on this subject in this country. In twenty-five of the States of the Union it would be impossible under their constitutions to do what we are asked to be impossible under their constitutions to do what we are asked to do to-day. There are not a dozen men on the other side of the House who would be allowed this in their State Legislatures. I might easily find out how many. There are thirty States that provide in their constitutions against this sort of legislation—twenty-five of them directly in provisions declaring in one way or another that every bill shall contain but one subject-matter, which shall be clearly expressed in the title, or giving the governors the right to veto any sections or parts of an appropriation bill and approve the rest; and five States that forbid attaching general legislation to revenue, that being the old form of protection against riders.

Mark that, gentlemen of the majority! There are probably not ten of you who could do this thing in your own States. And the provisions preventing this are not new in our State constitutions. Perhaps the clearest and most vigorous disapproval of this idea is found in the constitutions of New Jersey and Maryland—old constitutions—that of Maryland having been adopted in 1777.

I have called attention, and it has been done by others also, to the fact that the very able politicians and statesmen who inaugurated tact that the very able politicians and statesmen who inaugurated the rebellion, when they came to found their confederate government and adopt their constitution, took the Constitution of the United States as their model and general frame-work, making comparatively few additions or alterations. But in two or three provisions they made it unconstitutional and absolutely impossible to do what gentlemen who were formerly members of that government are trying to do here to-day. There are ex-members of the confederate congress on this floor whe are water king are to the work the confederate congress. to do here to-day. There are ex-members of the confederate congress on this floor who are undertaking now to do what they could not have done in the confederate congress. The chairman of our Committee on Apropriations was an honored and useful member of that body—so far as a man can be honored in doing wrong. He is an honorable and just gentleman in every relation of life. Yet he is countenancing by his vote, though opposing in his heart, that which the majority is undertaking to do here to-day, but which he could not have been allowed to move in the confederate congress. Such a proposition would have been ruled out of order upon a suggestion from the humblest member.

Yet gentlemen on the other side are forcing a measure of this kind upon us. Why? Because they have the majority! Look out that you keep it! You are trying to do here that which history condemns, which thirty State constitutions condemn, and which the other eight will condemn as soon as those States hold constitutional conventions.

you keep it! You are trying to do here that which history condemns, which thirty State constitutions condemn, and which the other eight will condemn as soon as those States hold constitutional conventions. You are doing that which the British Parliament condemned, and which this Congress itself, in previous years, after deliberate argument, has condemned. You are doing that which your own confederate government condemned and rendered impossible. Yet, for the sake of choking this Federal Government, which you tell us you love, you are inaugurating that policy—driving us, or attempting to drive us, into submission to it. This is to be done with no "general debate" on your side. I do not wonder at it. Your ground is gone; the excuses you imagined have been shown to be without foundation. History and law and constitution and logic and common sense are against you, and only revolution on your side.

I have substantially done. I have run over the subject in a brief and condensed way. I repeat, then, in conclusion, it is not a matter of mere party tactics or personal preference, but the duty of a patriotic gentleman, under the Constitution, to resist this measure, in the beginning, in its course, at the end, and always; to vote against every political amendment on an appropriation bill, and vote against the bill when the amendment shall have been adopted, and thereupon to go to the people in defense of our rights as citizens and as legislators. I say, I ask no man to stand with me on that; but I have made up my mind. [Applause on the republican side.]

How much time have I occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am willing now to yield the rest of my time to any one on this side who desires to take it. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROBESON. I believe I am now entitled to the floor.

from New Jersey.

Mr. ROBESON. I believe I am now entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to have the amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Mr. ROBESON. By a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest and ultimate tribunal of judicial judgment under the organization of our Government, it has been declared, "that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force exercised through its official agents, execute, on every foot of American soil, the powers and the functions which belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent." This is the inevitable, incontrovertible result of right reasoning from established principles. This declares the principle on this subject of the Constitution of our country, (a principle which lies at the foundation of all Anglo-Saxon government,) and these are the conclusions which follow inevitably from it. All laws of Congress are, and must be held to be made, in the light of those principles which have been settled, adjudicated, and declared by the highest tribunal of the country; and this law, if it becomes a law, must mean and be understood to mean Mr. ROBESON. By a decision of the Supreme Court of the United judicated, and declared by the highest tribunal of the country; and this law, if it becomes a law, must mean and be understood to mean just what is permitted by this declaration; otherwise, if not unconstitutional, it is at least in defiance of constitutional command, and in derogation of constitutional duty.

In the discussion of this question, Mr. Chairman, which, to my mind, lies not only at the foundation of the power of the Government in this country, but relates to the very principles upon which rests the superstructure of popular government—in the discussion of this important question, I shall deal in no flowers of speech, nor indulge in the insubstantial harmony of declamation. I shall declare what I conceive to be undeniable principles, and shall endeavor to follow them by unwavering logic down to irresistible conclusion; and if I fail to convince, the fault will not be with the truth which I declare, but must rest either with the minds and temper of my auditors or in the want of power of the humble individual who has attempted their illustration.

This amendment looks to, and is meant to control, the execution of United States law on election day. Need I pause to say to you, citizens, Representatives, Americans, that if there be a day in the calizens, Representatives, Americans, that if there be a day in the calendar when the laws should have full sway; when that atmosphere of perfect peace and perfect liberty which can only be found in the enjoyment of freedom under the perfect control of law shall surround us and our action like the "all-incasing air," that day is the one day which is set apart by the laws of our country, on which the freemen who are to govern this continent act in their individual capacity for themselves, and set in motion, primarily, the political machinery of our Government. We are so familiar with their action on that day that we do not appreciate its significance and force. The orderly gathering together on election day of the free voters of action on that day that we do not appreciate its significance and force. The orderly gathering together on election day of the free voters of a great republic, with a continent as an empire and freedom as a heritage, and there exercising their political will under the protection of law, supreme, powerful, efficient, and all-pervading, to keep the peace for the perfect exercise of that will, is as sublime a spectacle in government as the world has ever seen. To accomplish that result all the agencies of political progress and civilization have culminated here on our shores. That is the day of American freedom, that union of liberty and law which is our heritage, not the day of its celebration, but the day of its exercise. That is the time and there is the place when and where the American citizen impresses for himself, and not when and where the American citizen impresses for himself, and not through any representative, his will upon American policy and government. There and then he casts his vote.

A weapon that comes down as still As snow-flakes fall upon the sod; But executes a freeman's will, As lightning does the will of God.

And if there be one day in the whole calendar of time when the laws should not only exist, but when they should be powerful and effective, when they should be able to command all the force of the Govrve, when they should be able to command all the force of the Government for the preservation of peace, this is that day. If there be such a day more than another, when is it if this be not it? If the laws of the country are to be executed, and for that purpose its peace preserved at all, will you make an exception of election day? Does the democratic party of this country choose by its action to say, "We will reluctantly execute the laws; we will for very shame, maintain peace; we will sustain the Government on every day except on election day but more that coercion when the freeze of the country tion day, but upon that occasion, when the freemen of the country desire freely to execute their will, and without let or hinderance to impress their power upon the Government of the country, we cannot afford to keep the peace of the United States?"

Let us look at this question as it is. What is government? Government is an organization of civil society which governs; and for that purpose makes and executes laws. If it does not make the laws, it is no government. If it does not execute them, it does not govern. There can be no government, in theory or in fact, which has not the power to execute its laws.

Are these propositions fair ones? Can anybody dispute them? Is anybody bold enough to deny them?

Next let us consider what are laws. Laws are those rules which a government executes; and if they be not executed by government they are not laws. How do governments execute their laws? By force. Who shall deny it? Why are laws efficient and why do they govern the actions of men? Because they have the power of the government behind them. What is the power of the government? The physical force at its command. Laws, then, are those rules which governments execute by physical force. Shrink not from that proposition, for none can deny it? Society is organized in order to put the whole power of the community into the form of laws and regulations, behind which the whole strength of that organized community exists in the shape and substance of what we call the civil power. Nothing is law, then, which is not to be executed by the power of the government; that is, by physical force. Next let us consider what are laws. Laws are those rules which ing is law, then, which is not to be executed by the power of the government; that is, by physical force.

Sir William Blackstone has defined municipal law to be "rules of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power of the State, commanding what is right, and forbidding what is wrong." The whole theory of law which I have declared is to be found in that exact and comprehensive language. It is a rule prescribed by the supreme power of the State, by the government, which carries with it not only the authority but the force to execute its will.

Now, Mr. Chairman, by what means is this force to be applicable.

authority but the force to execute its will.

Now, Mr. Chairman, by what means is this force to be applicable to the execution of laws? In this country, under our constitutional system born of the line of English precedents, traditions, and laws, and in the light of English history, and established in the atmosphere and operating according to the principles of Anglo-Saxon common law, all laws are executed in time of peace and under ordinary circumstances, by the Executive through the civil officers of the Government. I do not contend that in time of peace, under ordinary circumstances and without special authority of law, the civil laws are to be executed by the Army, under military control and acting directly under military inspiration. Mark well the proposition as I have endeavored accurately to state it. I yield nothing of the power of the Government necessary for its preservation and safety. This is no question of direct, forcible attack upon Government. Then, governments, like men, are driven to their reserved forces, and have and must have and must exercise all their force for self-preservation, and are, if necessary, a law unto themselves for that purpose. Such is not the proposition now, nor are we maintaining this power.

But we do now say that the republican party is the party of civil government; and it believes that, to govern, the Government must have laws to carry out its constitutional rights and duties, and that the failure to make these laws is a failure of constitutional duty. And they believe that when these laws are made, the Government, it is a government, must execute them; that if they are to be executed they are to be executed by the power of the Government which is behind them; that if the power of the Government is behind any law, it must be there every day in the year; and that if any part of the power of the Government is behind any law, the whole power of the Government must be there. Who shall deny this last proposition? Who will state and defend the monstrous anomaly that a part of the force of the Government is behind a law and not the whole; that the Government is bound and its officers sworn to execute a law, and that it has reserved strength which it will not use to execute it !

No, sir; such is not the character of American law, nor the spirit of the American people. If it be law, it must be executed to the very edge if necessary, and all the power of the Government is and must be behind it.

To go a little more into detail, Mr. Chairman. Under Anglo-Saxon government the process of the execution of law is this: The laws are made by the legislative power in obedience to the constitutional duty and obligation imposed by the commands of the constitution. They are executed by the executive power, through the civil officers of the government, to whom in time of peace is ordinarily intrusted the execution of these laws, and into whose hands is given, for that purpose, the whole physical power of the government and all the strength of the people. Is that a fair proposition? Does it command the assent of thoughtful minds, and will it have the affirmative assent of patriotic action?

Now, how do the civil officers execute the laws in this country? They put in motion primarily the machinery provided to carry them into execution. They breathe the inspiration of life into the system, and put it into working order and effective operation on all persons and things, so that the freemen of the country may exercise their inalienable or guaranteed rights in its atmosphere and under its protection, and "in the peace of the United States." And if any man, by force or by fraud, by riot or by confusion, by wrong action or by unjust command, seeks to interfere with that exercise, and break that peace, they put down that interference and they keep the peace for the transpare.

How do they keep that peace? First, by the majesty and respect of the law itself. In what consists this majesty of the law, and whence comes its respect? It consists in the strength of the Government, and the law itself. In what consists this majesty of the law, and whence comes its respect? It consists in the strength of the Government, and comes from the fact that the individual who represents it is clothed with the power and backed by the force of the whole people. If the wrong-doers submit, nothing further is required. If they do not submit, what then is to be done? All the forces of the civil power, as represented by its executive officers, are then called in requisition. If this be not sufficient for the purpose, what then? The bystanders may be called upon. If they be not sufficient, or if they be not proper persons for any reason, or if they be the very people who are making the disturbance and encouraging or enforcing the wrong, what then is to be done? The peace must be kept by the whole force of the bailiwick, "the posse comitatus," covering and including the whole power of the Government; including every citizen who is under the protection of the laws, all the militia, organized or unorganized, all the Army, wherever it may be, within reach, every man, citizen or soldier, militia or regular, that is or can be brought within reach.

This, you will see, is not the Army moving with "plumed troops" and in the "big wars" which make military power and primacy, but the Army held in subjection by, and subordinate to, and acting as the instrument and the weapon of, civil power.

Can this be denied? Who dare deny it before the good sense of the American people? Who has the courage to stand up here in his place and say that that is not the true theory of Anglo-Saxon government, upon which our Constitution is founded and upon which it rests; in striking at which you strike at the very foundation-stone of its power, till the edifice, symmetrical and beautiful as our fathers ernment, upon which our Constitution is founded and upon which it rests; in striking at which you strike at the very foundation-stone of its power, till the edifice, symmetrical and beautiful as our fathers left it, may topple to its fall?

These armed citizens come, not as warriors, but as the servants and conservators of peace, contributing only to her victories, no less important than those of war. They are not armies surrounded by the "pomp and and circumstance of glorious war," exciting the imagination, swaying the feelings, and trampling on the rights of the people; they come, arrayed not for the destruction of their Government, but for its safety, its maintenance, and its preservation. As illustrative of this I will read a few lines from the speech of Lord Mansfield in the British House of Lords upon the Westminster riot cases, in which he puts this proposition exactly: he puts this proposition exactly:

The military have been called in-

Said he-I read from Hansard's Reports, volume 21:

The military have been called in, and very wisely called in, not as soldiers, but a citizens; no matter whether their coats be red or brown, they have been called—

Not to strike down, but-in aid of the laws, not to subvert or overturn the constitution, but to preserve both.

Is that right or is it wrong? If there were riot in the city of Washington on election day so violent, so uncontrollable that it threatened with its terrors the destruction of your beautiful city and all that the country has done to adorn its capital, would it not be competent for the civil officers of the law, acting under our Constitution and our laws, to call upon the organized force of marines, which is the control of the Charles with the charles with the control of the Charles with the ch which is quartered yonder within half a mile of this Chamber, and bring them up as citizens of this country, under its laws subordinate to its civil power, for the execution of the laws and the preservation of the peace of the country?

This, as I have said, is the very last and fullest subordination of the military to the civil power. It is no exercise of military dictatorship. It has no element of Cæsarism. It is a splendid spectacle of peace, liberty, and law-armed, organized military power marching under the banners of peace, armed with the weapons of civil liberty, carrying on their shoulders bayonets that think, the very safeguards of American institutions, and following humbly and simply, cheerfully and obediently, under the control of civil power. The military shall be subordinate to civil power. Yes. That is its noblest attitude, because it shows that it is the weapon of law, which may be used and rightly used for the civil purposes of peace, and will not itself seek domination and command.

The military acting subordinate to the civil power. Why, if your amendment does not mean that it shall so act, then it means to destroy this principle and to say that the military shall not be subordinate to the civil power. Does it not mean that? If you do not mean that you must mean, that when civil laws are to be executed and when peace is to be maintained by civil officers in order that the freeman's will may have full and free control, that at that time and there the Army shall no longer be subordinate to civil power, shall not come to its assistance when properly called upon, but shall refuse or be powerless to act for civil purposes and under civil control, but shall stand idly by to see peace destroyed and civil government overthrown, till quiet and orderly citizens must either submit to the domination of force or fraud, the rule of the bludgeon or the knife, or the civil laws, which are powerless because unexecuted, must give way and be silent in the presence of armed power, because the legislative power will not provide for them adequate force, and martial law must prevail because it only can be executed. Mr. Chairman, the first direction that we receive upon the subject of the execution of the laws is in the Constitution of the United States. In the third section of the second article we find:

The President shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

The President shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed!

That is the constitutional provision, clothing the President with affirmative power and enjoining upon him an affirmative duty.

Oh, but say gentlemen, the President cannot act unless that power be organized by the National Legislature into the forms of law. Suppose for the purpose of this argument I admit that. Where, then, does it put the opponents of this executive power? The Constitution

"He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

That is undoubtedly a constitutional duty. But it requires, you say, that the National Legislature shall act to put it in motion. Then it is your constitutional obligation and duty so to organize it Then it is your constitutional obligation and duty so to organize it into the forms of law, but if you do not so organize it you yourselves fail in constitutional duty. Accept the position if you wish. Go before the country on that day when the freeman exercises his power, and say to him: "It is true, here is a law upon the statute-book which we by our votes have made, pretending we would give you free elections; it is true that the President is called upon by the Constitution affirmatively to take care that it be faithfully executed. But it is necessary that to execute it he should have his power for that purpose organized in forms of law. But that is our constitutional duty. pose organized in forms of law. But that is our constitutional duty, and we refuse to do it. This is the Constitution our fathers gave for the government of the country, which we swore to maintain before high Heaven when we stood here and took our oaths of office. That is the Constitution upon which rest the structure of our Government. the liberties of our people, the last hope of freedom for all the world Here is our duty imposed expressly upon us, but we decline to execute it, for fear our party may lose its majority." Gentlemen, pause. Some of you have formerly been arrayed against this Constitution and this Government—I refer to it only as a matter of history—but when you were so arrayed you took your lives in your hands, and poured on the altar of success your fortunes and your sacred honors; you appealed boldly to the God of battles, and stood bravely on a field where every man who fell could see the foe who struck him; but now you are enlisted under the banner of that Government; you are its chosen representatives; you are sworn into its service; you have pledged your honors and your oaths that you will maintain its Constitution and carry out its laws. You are armed with its weapons, admitted inside the defenses of its strength, have control of its citadel, make its defensive garrison. Would you now saw off its flag-staff, undermine its walls, spike the cannons of its strength, bind its defenders hand and foot, and poison the pure well-spring of its power at its source? Are such the plumed troops, these the big wars that make ambition virtue?

Oh, gentlemen, the history of the world presents many spectacles which according to moral or political law may be considered outrageous and wrong, but in which the very magnitude of the struggle itself, the audacity of the courage displayed, the mighty interests and splendid destinies of nations which follow in its track of fire, and the imperial spirit which inspires its sacrifices and guides its action, considered of the courage displayed, the defermine to defer respectively.

imperial spirit which inspires its sacrinces and guides its action, conspire to defy reprobation, if they do not disarm criticism.

Thus it has been said that ambition, though a vice, is a vice so equivocal that it seems to sometimes verge on virtue; that though its grasp may be ruin and its flight may be famine, yet it sits on earth's pinnacle, and sports with the lightnings of heaven. But, gentlemen, the property of the prop there is neither heroism, patriotism, nor ambition in that spirit which, intrusted by a confiding country with the welfare of the Government, would betray it to its destruction and its fall.

Now, gentlemen, how are these laws to be executed? The President is to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." What does that mean? He shall take every means in his power to do it. Not that he shall order the Army under its military officers, and acting, as I have said, directly under the military inspiration, to execute the civil laws, but that if it be necessary, or if it be likely to be necessary, he shall have not only ready but amply ready and convenient every element of physical force which the Government has a right to control, ready to apply it at a moment's notice. What sort of an officer would he be who, acting under military orders, if ordered to support a division to-morrow with his corps, keeps it fifty miles away, so that such support would be impossible? What sort of a President would he be, acting under the command of his constitutional obligations and duty and the force of his constitutional oath, if he had reason to believe that there was to be organized riot in the city of New York on next that there was to be organized riot in the city of New York on next election day, that five thousand men were to be there, organized or unorganized, ready to put down the law, to destroy the peace of the United States, and to interfere with the popular will—what sort of a President would he be if he did not have every soldier he could muster ready to execute and maintain the laws; not by military power, not as a military constabulary force, but to be there where they were needed, restrained under proper commands, waiting for the call of the civil power and acting under its control and governed by their orders whenever action was necessary?

I am happy to say that that President, under whose banner I served, and of whose administration I was an humble member, whenever he had information that the laws of the United States were to be threatened and interfered with in their execution, provided all the force of the Government at command, to be ready at the call of the civil power to maintain the laws, and to keep the peace for that purpose, whenever and wherever it was threatened or disturbed. Do purpose, whenever and wherever it was threatened or disturbed. Do not misunderstand me, gentlemen. I have already said, and will say again, if need be, that in time of peace, and in the absence of specific law authorizing it, the military power of the Government is not to be used as a military organization, acting under military inspiration alone, for the execution of civil law.

But I do say that all the military power of the Government is at the command of the President and of the civil officers, when properly called upon for the proper execution of the laws of the country. And I say that that President fails in his duty before God and man, before our generation and in the face of our hopes for the future, who, if he our generation and in the face of our hopes for the future, who, if he is informed of and understands its need, fails to have that power ready for use wherever and whenever the occasion absolutely requires it.

Gentlemen, democrats, this law appointing marshals to keep the peace at the polls was passed by your votes, since the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States affirming the constitutionality Supreme Court of the United States affirming the constitutionality of the election laws and the right and power of the Government to keep the peace for their execution, and I suppose it is to be construed by that decision; that all you mean by it, is to declare an unquestioned principle, that the military arm of the country, as a military organization, acting under military officers and by direct military inspiration, is not to be used as a constabulary force; that they are not the people who are to act in the first instance to keep the peace. But you do not mean to say, in the face of that decision, and in the face of the constitutional duty and power which is there affirmed, that the Army of the United States, a part of the physical force of the Government, is not at the command of the civil officers of the Government whenever it is necessary for the execution of the law and the preservation of the peace of the United States for that purpose.

If there is any doubt of your intentions and position on this sub-

If there is any doubt of your intentions and position on this subject I will give you a chance to define it by your votes before this bill becomes a law, and shall judge you, as the people will, by your con-duct and not by your professions, if you refuse to carry them into action.

Last session, gentlemen, if they saw fit, might stand upon the question that the United States had no peace to preserve; that it was the peace of the State, and must be preserved by the power of the State. But the Supreme Court has now decided otherwise, and declared that the United States may execute its laws at any place, at any time, and in any State, and may preserve its peace for that purpose. I would say to my friend from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] if he were here, that there is now a decision of the Supreme Court that the United States has "a peace to preserve;" and that decision goes also to the extent that it has the power and the duty to preserve it.

Those gentlemen who, standing in their representative capacity here, said in effect by their votes: "It is true that this is the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; it is true that by that decision these laws are constitutional; it is true that they are to be executed, and it is true that there is a peace to be preserved for that purpose; but as the representatives of the people, as members of a co-ordinate branch of the Government, we refuse to be controlled by that decision, and therefore will not vote for this law," are consistent.

Wrong as I think them, false as they are in position, unconstitutional as is their stand in refusing to execute a constitutional duty, they at Wrong as I think them, false as they are in position, unconstitutional as is their stand in refusing to execute a constitutional duty, they at least preserve their consistency in wrong. But to those men who have made this law, providing for the services of marshals at elections, who have said that there shall be marshals to carry out the election law; to those who have said that these marshals shall be clothed with the power of civil government, shall have the power to enforce the law, I put the inquiry: Where do you stand? Will you say, "Yes, we have made this law; but the Government shall not execute it, if it needs power to do so; if no power is needed to execute it, then let it be enforced; but if it is resisted, if it needs forcible execution, we will clothe the Government with no weapons of power for that purpose?" On which side are you, gentlemen? Are you on the side of government, of law, of constitution, of right? Do you believe that that only is a government which makes and executes law; that if it fails either to make laws or to execute them, it is no government? Do you believe that the Government can command? Or do you deny those propositions? If you deny them, I am able to understand you; but if you accept them, and refuse by your action to carry them out, I beg you will understand that if you trifle thus with the intelligence of the American people, and think you deceive them, you are "like little wanton boys that swim on bladders, far out beyond your depth."

Let us understand what you mean by this proposition—you gentlement whe have introduced and youted for it. Do you mean that the

Let us understand what you mean by this proposition—you gentle-men who have introduced and voted for it. Do you mean that the President shall retain all his constitutional power for the execution of the law through the civil officers, and that if need be every man and every boy in this country who can carry a firelock shall be organized and called upon to enforce the laws and maintain the Government; or do you mean that, as I have said, being inside the fortress and clothed with the weapons of the strength of this Government you will spike its guns and leave it to disorganization and destruc-tion? Take which side you please. We accept the issue before the country. The republican party stands on it to-day. Laugh not in your assumed cleverness, thinking that you have got us in a trap by means of this equivocal provision. Truth, right principle, is never in a trap. It marches right onward from principle to achievement. It is only cowardice or subterfuge that puts itself in the wrong. [Loud applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, this Congress will be known in future history as the one in which it was proposed by the party in power to destroy the Government unless the minority of this House and the President of the United States would allow laws to be passed legalizing in effect fraud, violence, and crime; and it will be known as the first Congress in the history of this country in which it was proposed in both branches to annul all the President's power to execute the laws of the United States authorizing the preservation of peace and order at the polls on election day.

In the course of the discussion of this question I propose very briefly to review the history of legislation in this Congress.

First, I may say that the Forty-fifth Congress adjourned without having performed its constitutional duty by appropriating the money necessary to carry on the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, and also without providing for the pay of the Army. The democratic party then embarked upon the policy of coercing the minority of the House of Representatives and a repubilcan Senate and the President in the matter of important legislation. How far has it succeeded? The first bill of this Congress proposed to appropriate for the Army, only on condition that a section in it should be allowed to become a law making it a high crime to keep the peace at the polls on election day. That section was notice to the United States election laws which secured the constitutional right through supervisors of elections, special deputy marshals, &c., to have free, fair, and honest elections of members of Congress. This bill also was notice to the country that open fraud by means of violence, intimidation, repeating, tissue ballots, and other unlawful measures would be in the future as in the past the pernicious policy of the democratic party. It met at the hands of the Executive the fate of the other two bills.

These misfortunes Mr. Chairman notwithstanding the defaut boosts.

These misfortunes, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the defiant boasts of certain democratic members, led the democratic party to "dally" of certain democratic members, led the democratic party to "dally" and "doubt" in the face of the authoritative statement (by Mr. Black-Burn) that "he who dallies is a dastard, and he who doubts is damned." Other direful threats came to us that certain members of the democratic party would stand by the revolutionary policy entered on "until the marble of this Capitol crumbled into dust by the neverfailing action of time." But, Mr. Chairman, time, aided by the firm stand of the republican party here in Congress and the vetoes of the President, acted with singular rapidity on the minds of democrats and on their nuwise policy here. and on their unwise policy here.

It is said that when disease seizes on the human body, it develops first in the weaker parts. Through the purse of democrats the weakness in the first place cropped out. The remedy was applied. An old-fashioned appropriation bill, shorn of all extraneous matter or political legislation, was at the extra session promptly prepared—one on which all parties struck hands, although it was an anomaly in form, omitting the usual appropriations for the judicial branch of the Government. It was hastily pushed through without a rider, and it received the executive approval.

the Government. It was hastily pushed through without a lider, and it received the executive approval.

The pay of members for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, being made certain, the old policy of coercion of the Executive was promptly returned to; a new Army appropriation bill was brought forward from the democratic caucus which contained a section restricting the right to use any of the money appropriated, to clothe, equip, or transport any portion of the Army to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election. We have the same amendment now before us; and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the pells at any election held within any State.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, this proposed amendment would, in my opinion, if literally carried out, have the effect to annul the appropriation for the Army to the extent that no part of it could be used to keep the peace at the polls. To use troops in aid of the civil power, all authorities concur in holding, is to use them as a police force. While troops of the United States are being so used, they may power, all authorities concur in holding, is to use them as a police force. While troops of the United States are being so used, they may possibly be said to be used as an army, but they are none the less used as a police force. The very language, Mr. Chairman, of the proposed amendment indicates that the soldiers are not to be transformed into policemen, but that they are simply prohibited from being used as a police force in keeping the peace.

One of the early struggles in the history of this Government was during the administration of President Washington, about the right to maintain a navy; and also as to how that navy was to be used. Alexander Hamilton, who was the leader of the federalists, maintained that it was the right and the duty of the Government to establish a strong navy; and, to use his own language, he said that "it ought to be established and maintained to be used on the high seas as a police force to protect our flag and our commerce." He did not mean by that the seamen were to be turned into policemen, but that our ships, properly manned, should patrol the seas "as a police force," and there maintain the majesty of our Government, &c. That great controversy, which lasted for years, between Alexander Hamilton and the great Secretary of the Treasury, Albert Gallatin, the leader of the then republican party, resulted in the question being settled (and since maintained) in favor of the United States having a navy to be used on the high seas as a police force. In this amendment is found the precise language used in that controversy. used on the high seas as a police force. In this amendment is found the precise language used in that controversy; it speaks of using the Army of the United States as a police force to keep the peace at the polls. But I will not dwell further on that point.

having performed its constitutional duty by appropriating the money necessary to carry on the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, and also without providing for the pay of the Army. The democratic party then embarked upon the policy of coercing the minority of the House of Representatives and a republican Senate and the President in the matter of important legislation. How far has it succeeded? The first bill of this Congress proposed to appropriate for the Army, only on condition that a section in it should be allowed to become a law making it a high crime to keep the peace at the polls on election day. That section was notice to the country that the democratic party in the future as in the past proposed, when necessary to accomplish its ends, to have riots and other breaches of the peace on election days at the polls. This legislation was shipwrecked by the veto of the President.

The second bill brought forward was designed to disarm the Executive and paralyze his power to enforce all laws of the United States as a police force to keep the policy of the Meel further on that point. Let us analyze this amendment. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that it is exactly the sixth section of the Army appropriation bill which was based at the extra session of this Congress, against which my friend here. [Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin] and a few others with myself voted. A fair construction of this proposition drives us to the conclusion that it inhibits the use of the Army at the polls to keep the peace and quell election riots, and that it is purposely gotten up to prevent a quiet and an honest election. By the very terms of the amendment the President of the United States, if he feels bound by it if enacted into a law, and I think it is our duty to oppose it as though the policy of the President.

The second bill brought forward was designed to disarm the Executive and paralyze his power to enforce all laws of the United States as shall not be used to put down riots on election day.

But let us

being held during the coming fiscal year; they are to have no equipments; they are to have no subsistence; they are to have no ammunition or arms; in other words, they are to go naked and hungry and without arms to put down a riot if there be one at the polls on election day. That is what we propose to say if we adopt this amendation. without arms to put down a riot if there be one at the polls on election day. That is what we propose to say if we adopt this amendment. I understand some gentlemen contend this does not prohibit the use of troops at the polls on election day, because it does not expressly repeal any law. I simply answer such persons by saying it prohibits their use at least to the extent that, if they are used, they are to go to the polls unclothed and unarmed by the Government of the United States, and they are not to eat at the Government expense while there, and while they perform that most important duty they are to be docked their pay.

It is claimed they are only prohibited from acting "as a police

It is claimed they are only prohibited from acting "as a police force." I repeat they cannot act in aid of the civil authorities at all unless they act as a police force. Some gentlemen claim that because men are soldiers they cannot act as a police force. The very terms of the amendment provide, not that they shall be transformed from soldiers to police, but as soldiers they shall not act as police to keep the peace at the polls on election day.

Passing from that, this amendment, Mr. Chairman, has the merit of conveying to the country by irresistible implication the willingness to allow the President of the United States to use the Army of the United States "as a police force to keep the peace" at all other places within the States and Territories—at all other times and places save at such times and places when and where an election is being held for Delegates and Representatives in Congress.

Nothing short of free fraud, free riot, and free crimes at elections is to be regarded as constitutional, according to democratic notions of constitutional law! Now, I do not propose to be misunderstood on this question. I have heard on both sides of this House the claim made that it was wrong to use the troops of the United States at the polls to regulate elections. I have heard gentlemen on both sides talk about this character of legislation as though it was intended to prevent interference in elections. On another occasion when I was permitted to have only about two minutes' time, I undertook to draw a distinction, which I beg leave to refer to again in this connection. I am opposed to the use of troops at the polls on election day to in any way interfere with the election officers or with the voters in the rightful exercise of their constitutional privilege.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the use of troops at the polls, or the use of any other force under the command of the Government, to interfere with the bad men who arm themselves and go to the polls to get up riots and interfere with the election officers in the honest discharge of their duties and to interfere with the right of the citiascharge of their duties and to interfere with the right of the citizen to cast his vote. That is the extent to which I would go in the use of physical force at the polls. What this legislation is aimed at is not to protect the voters or election officers on the day of election from being interfered with by the United States Army, but it is to prevent Ku-Klux bands, White-liners, and armed bands of whatever name, who propose to interfere with elections, from being interfered with by the Army when they are to prove that the general led by name, who propose to interfere with elections, from being interfered with by the Army when they are too powerful to be controlled by the civil authorities. The men who engage in fraud, in intimidation, in high crimes, and in the work of driving the honest voter from the polls, are the only ones to be shielded by the proposed law. Such is its avowed purpose. A republican Congress long since put upon the statute-books a law making it a crime for military, naval, or civil officers of the Government to in any manner by the use of troops interfere with elections. (Paying Statutes sections 2002 and 5595) omeers of the Government to in any manner by the use of troops interfere with elections. (Revised Statutes, sections 2002 and 5528.) The democratic party now desire to make it a crime for these officers to interfere with those who do interfere with elections. I contend that the Government should execute its laws on the subject of elections and that it should have ample power to enable it to execute them. We ought no longer to hear doubts expressed about the constitutionality of laws designed to enable the United States authorities to preserve the patiental authority at elections. ties to preserve the national authority at elections. A recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has authoritatively settled this constitutional question of governmental power in that regard.

I hope the House will pardon me while I read an extract from the syllabi in the case of Ex parte Seibold et al.

The National Government has the right to use physical force in any part of the United States to compel obedience to its laws and to carry into execution the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution.

The concurrent jurisdiction of the National Government with that of the States, which it has in the exercise of its powers of sovereignty in every part of the United States, is distinct from that exclusive jurisdiction which it has by the Constitution in the District of Columbia, and in those places acquired for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, &c.

The provisions adopted for compelling the State officers of election to observe the State laws regulating elections of Representatives, not altered by Congress, are within the supervisory powers of Congress over such elections. The duties to be performed in this behalf are owed to the United States as well as to the State; and their violation is an offense against the United States which Congress may rightfully inhibit and punish. This necessarily follows from the direct interest which the National Government has in the due election of its Representatives and from the power which the Constitution gives to Congress over this particular subject.

The right to use physical force in any part of the United States to compel obedience to the laws is thus authoritatively settled. This right must now be regarded as the fixed law of the land.

From the exhaustive opinion of Justice Bradley, who spoke for the court, I read further:

Court, I read further:

The more general reason assigned, to wit, that the nature of sovereignty is such as to preclude the joint co-operation of two sovereigns, even in a matter in which they are mutually concerned, is not, in our judgment, of sufficient force to prevent concurrent and harmonious action on the part of the national and State governments in the election of Representatives. It is at most an argument ab inconseniente. There is nothing in the Constitution to forbid such co-operation in this case. On the contrary, as already said, we think it clear that the clause of the Constitution relating to the regulation of such elections contemplates such co-operation whenever Congress deems it expedient to interfere merely to alter or add to existing regulations of the State. If the two governments had an entire equality of jurisdiction, there might be an intrinsic difficulty in such co-operation. Then the adoption by the State government of a system of regulations might exclude the action of Congress. By first taking jurisdiction of the subject, the State would acquire exclusive jurisdiction in virtue of a well-known principle applicable to courts having co-ordinate jurisdiction over the same matter. But no such equality exists in the present case. The power of Congress, as we have seen, is paramount, and may be exercised at any time, and to any extent which it deems expedient; and so far as it is exercised, and no further, the regulations effected supersede those of the State which are inconsistent therewith.

As a general rule it is no doubt expedient and wise that the operations of the State and National Governments should, as far as practicable, be conducted separately, in order to avoid undue jealousies and jars and conflicts of jurisdiction and power. But there is no reason for laying this down as a rule of universal application. It should never be made to override the plain and manifest dictates of the Constitution itself. We cannot yield to such a transcendental view of State sovereignty. The Consti

And quoting further from this opinion:

In exercising the power, however, we are bound to presume that Congress has done so in a judicious manner; that it has endeavored to guard as far as possible against any unnecessary interference with State laws and regulations, with the duties of State officers, or with local prejudices. It could not act at all so as to accomplish any beneficial object in preventing frauds and violence, and securing the faithful performance of duty at the elections, without providing for the presence of officers and agents to carry its regulations into effect. It is also difful to see how it could attain these objects without imposing proper sanctions and penalties against offenders

And in another place Justice Bradley, in the opinion, says:

Without the concurrent sovereignty referred to, the National Government would nothing but an advisory government. Its executive power would be absolutely

In speaking of the fair and obvious interpretation of the Constitution and the mode of reaching it, the judge says:

In speaking of the fair and obvious liferpression of the conservation and the mode of reaching it, the judge says:

We shall not have far to seek. We shall find it on the surface, and not in the profound depths of speculation.

The greatest difficulty in coming to a just conclusion arises from mistaken notions with regard to the relations which subsist between the State and National Governments. It seems to be often overlooked that a national constitution has been adopted in this country, establishing a real government therein, operating upon persons, and territory, and things; and which moreover is, or should be, as dear to every American citizen as his State government is. Whenever the true conception of the nature of this Government is once conceded, no real difficulty will arise in the just interpretation of its powers. But if we allow ourselves to regard it as a hostile organization, opposed to the proper sovereignty and dignity of the State governments, we shall continue to be vexed with difficulties as to its jurisdiction and authority. No greater jealousy is required to be exercised toward this Government in reference to the preservation of our liberties than is proper to be exercised toward the State governments. Its powers are limited in number and clearly defined, and its action within the scope of those powers is restrained by a sufficiently rigid bill of rights for the protection of its citizens from oppression.
The true interest of the people of this country requires that both the National and State governments should be allowed, without jealous interference on either side, to exercise all the powers which respectively belong to them according to a fair and practical construction of the Constitution. State rights and the rights of the United States should be equally respected. Both are essential to the preservation of our liberties and the perpetuity of our institutions. But in endeavoring to vindicate the one, we should not allow our zeal to nullify or impair the other.

I am tempted to read another extract from this most admirable exposition of the constitutional powers of this Government:

exposition of the constitutional powers of this Government:

It is argued that the preservation of peace and good order in society is not within the powers confided to the Government of the United States, but belongs exclusively to the States. Here, again, we are met with the theory that the Government of the United States does not rest upon the soil and territory of the country. We think that this theory is founded on an entire misconception of the nature and powers of that Government. We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent.

This power to enforce its laws and to execute its functions in all places does not derogate from the power of the State to execute its laws at the same time and in the same places. The one does not exclude the other except where both cannot be executed at the same time. In that case the words of the Constitution itself show which is to yield. "This Constitution and all laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof * * shall be the supreme law of the land."

And still another:

And still another:

And still another:

Why do we have marshals at all if they camot physically lay their hands on persons and things in the performance of their proper duties? What functions can they perform if they cannot use force! In executing the process of the courts must they call on the nearest constable for protection? must they rely on him to use the requisite compulsion and to keep the peace while they are soliciting and entreating the parties and bystanders to allow the law to take its course? This is the necessary consequence of the positions that are assumed. If we indulge in such impracticable views as these, and keep on refining and re-refining, we shall drive the National Government out of the United States, and relegate it to the District of Columbia, or perhaps to some foreign soil. We shall bring it back to a condition of greater helplessness than that of the old confederation.

The argument is based on a strained and impracticable view of the nature and powers of the National Government. It must execute its powers or it is no government. It must execute them on the land as well as on the sea, on things as well as on persons. And to do this, it must necessarily have power to command obedience, preserve order, and keep the peace; and no person or power in this land has the right to resist or question its authority so long as it keeps within the bounds of its jurisdiction. Without specifying other instances in which this power to preserve order and keep the peace unquestionably exists, take the very case in

There are other extracts which might be read to the same effect, but I will not stop to read them now.

The power to keep the peace at elections is here expressly recognized, and it is a necessary power; otherwise the foundations of our Republic would crumble away. A government without power to protect all of its people from lawlessness and violence at all times and places is unworthy to exist, and of all other times and places it should have and exercise the power of preserving the peace on election day at the polls.

On the necessity of this Government having ample power and the right to exercise it in all fundamental matters which concern its life I read a single extract further from Justice Bradley's opinion:

I read a single extract further from Justice Bradley's opinion:

The true doctrine, as we conceive, is this, that while the States are really sovereign as to all matters which have not been granted to the jurisdiction and control of the United States, the Constitution and constitutional laws of the latter are, as we have already said, the supreme law of the land; and when they conflict with the laws of the States, they are of paramount authority and obligation. This is the fundamental principle on which the authority of the Constitution is based, and unless it be conceded in practice, as well as theory, the fabric of our institutions, as it was contemplated by its founders, cannot stand. The questions involved have respect not more to the autonomy and existence of the States, than to the continued existence of the United States as a government to which every American citizen may look for security and protection in every part of the land.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in State sovereignty in purely State matters. But I believe in United States sovereignty in all United States matters. I believe States to be creatures of the Constitution, and in matters. I believe States to be creatures of the Constitution, and in all matters not reserved by the Constitution to the States they are subordinate to the United States. Some of these States the United States bought and paid for with both treasure and blood. We bought from the first Napoleon the territory comprised in the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, &c., and in due time we erected this once French territory into States. Later some of these States set up for themselves the pretense that the thing created was superior to their owner and creator. The Republic of Texas, not quite able to stand alone, knocked at the door of the United States, and it was admitted within the portals of the Union and habilitated with the garb of a State in the Union with a republican form of government; and in a few years she, too, proposed to turn the United States out and set up a new government. ment on the same mistaken notion that the created was superior to the creator.

Time, shot, shell, bullets, bayonets, powder, and spilled blood, in short, war, proved this a mistaken notion to eleven States in this Union that went into rebellion.

It should now be clear to the blindest of partisans, at least, that we have a nation. By stealth, or if I should not say that, under false colors, it is proposed fifteen years after the close of the war to accomplish by peaceable methods what the inexorable events of war failed to do. It is a marvelous and yet dangerous spectacle for the people of a great nation to look on and see a party which arrogates to itself the championship of liberty, struggling for the right to maintain violence and disorder on election days at the polls. If there is to be no disorder or no broken peace, what is the necessity of tying the hands of the General Government so that it cannot keep the peace or quell disorders at elections? The whole country is bound peace or queil disorders at elections? The whole country is bound to judge the democratic party for the future by its acts of preparation as well as its past deeds. The proposed action to-day is notice to the order-loving people of this country, North and South, that in the coming elections of members of the next Congress and also in the election of the next President of the United States, it is essential to democratic success that no force possessed of the requisite power shall be used to prevent the use of such violence as may be needed to secure democratic success against the will of the people when fairly and peaceably expressed. There will be no mistake made by the people in this matter. The republican party, a party of law and order, of course cannot fear the use of troops at the polls to keep the peace. The law is not a terror to those who do not expect to violate There would seem to be no necessity for struggling here from day to day and from month to month as we have been doing in this Congress to get an inhibition against the power of the Government to put down riots and disorder, if there were not a party somewhere in this Government that was in favor of organized riots and broken peace, especially on election day.

A little further review, Mr. Chairman, of the revolutionary legislation had and proposed may be valuable. I need hardly offer an excuse for reviewing the past. I think it throws light on the present. We find here that party that started off so defiantly in the latter days of February and the first days of March, 1879, claiming that this Government should not him should not have the present westerness. ernment should not live, should not have the necessary sustenance, unless these vicious measures were allowed to be adopted. We find to-day in the presence of debate and in the presence of a shocked to-day in the presence of debate and in the presence or a shocked people the members of that party hesitating and sitting mute in their seats. They were warned before we entered upon this general debate—perhaps in pleasantry, but certainly none the less a warning—that if any one indulged in debate on that side of the House he should be shot. Their tongues cleave to the roofs of their mouths in the presence of this combat. Why are they silent? Let it be noted in this land that they sit silent in their seats, unable if not unwilling to meet the context.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Cook,] who made the remark the other day in the purest spirit of jest and pleasantry, to which the gentleman from Ohio has adverted, is not in his seat. I do not think it is worthy of the gentleman from Ohio to make use of that remark in the way he does in his speech.

Mr. KEIFER. I said the remark might have been made in pleasantry, but it was none the less a warning, as the gentleman from Tennesses would have understood if he had been listening carefully. But if that remark was uttered in pleasantry, it had also a well-understood meaning

Gentlemen tried hard all through the extra session of Congress to convince the people of this country that it was the right of the majority in Congress, nay that it was patriotic to sit here and attempt to tear down the whole fabric of this Government, unless the President of the United States would lay at the feet of that party all his veto power and allow them to pass just such legislation as they deemed essential to their future success; and when their proposed legislation was spread out before the country it was all found to be vicious and in opposition to good order.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me I will call his attention to the fact that the gentleman from Georgia who said every one should be shot who spoke on this subject on the dem-said every one should be shot who spoke on this subject on the democratic side is now in his seat.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Georgia desires to rise and deny that statement, I will yield to him.

Mr. COOK. I will say that I had no thought of intimidating the gentlemen over there, not the least.

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir; the intimidation was meant for the gentleman that the wild the statement of the gentleman.

men on the other side who thought they had not enough of idle de-bate. The threat was not to shoot us down, but to shoot down his own colleagues if they were so foolish as to attempt hereafter to enter upon debate on a subject that they had already heard debated to their utter overthrow and disgust.

Mr. SPARKS. Well, I suppose you would like to see some of us

Mr. KEIFER. And then, Mr. Chairman, [Mr. Springer in the chair,] I know you have been quite impartial to-day and willing to recognize gentlemen over there. But with the single exception of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] who made a remark or two in explanation of his amendment, in which he did not enter upon the merits of this discussion, and who was so very clever as to yield fifty-five minutes of his hour's time to a gentleman on this side of the House—with that single exception they have all been silent to-day, and we understand that they promise to remain so and we understand that they promise to remain so.

I might say that some of the distinguished gentlemen who were in I might say that some of the distinguished gentlemen who were in the lead, who were in the van, who were early in the battle and sounded the charge in the extra session, are now out of their seats; they are otherwise engaged. Why are they away? Why do we not hear their clarion voices here? Has there been any edict of the democratic cancus to seal their lips or keep them out of the House for fear that in listening to this debate they would become excited and rise to their feet and say foolish things in the estimation of the country, and thus jeopardize the coming presidential election? [After a pause.] I have been a little deliberate, thinking that in the interval some of the leaders, some of those who with great readiness issue flats to that side of the House, might rise and say that they would take off the gag; but they are still silent. There are deeds so dark or so grave that they can only be done in silence.

I speak now for myself if not for my party. I have referred to the action of the democratic party to show that its members here do not desire to openly legislate on the merits of a measure. During the extra session the democratic party tried to menace the Executive into approval of appropriation bills containing vicious amendments, and when failure after failure had come to that party it abandoned pass-when failure after failure had come to that party it abandoned passing the usual bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government. It might be unkind if not unfair to say that the democrats of this Congress, who but a few months ago proposed to couple all kinds of extraneous legislation with appropriation bills, discovered their lack of ability to collect into one bill and intelligently act upon it the ordinary appropriations for the support of a single department of the Government. But time and presidential vetoes have done much to demoralize the democratic party in this Congress and I hope throughout the coun-

At the revolutionary or extra session of this Congress the appropriations for the judicial department of this Government had to be dropped from what is known as the legislative appropriation bill. The appropriations for that department had to be segregated, seem-

In appropriations for that department had to be segregated, seemingly to enable the democratic mind to grasp and comprehend them. It was of course reasonable to suppose at the close of the extra session that with the aid-of numerous deficiency bills to be passed at future sessions the several Departments of the Government would be provided for in some way in the ensuing fiscal year, save only the fees of United States marshals and their deputies, and also compensation for special deputy marshals provided for by statute, and whose duties are to aid supervisors of elections in the discharge of their duties under the United States election laws. We now know that these United der the United States election laws. We now know that these United States officers who performed their duties without pay are not to be paid unless the election laws of the United States are rendered wholly nugatory.

Mr. Chairman, it is always dangerous to prophesy; but it is generally safe to prophesy of the shortcomings of the democratic party. In the face of the knowledge that the so-called legislative appropriation bill, which became a law at the extra session, was not understood in its full scope by its authors or supporters in either House of Congress—and I mean no reflection upon the capacity to understand of any Senator or member of this body, for the bill was simply incomprehensible—the Government would be under constant embarrassment until Congress should give construction to that measure. It was an anom-

Congress should give construction to that measure. It was an anomaly in legislation.

The marshals bill vetoed at the extra session contained, as printed, five lines devoted to the appropriation of $600,000 for the payment of the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. The remaining twenty-seven lines of the bill were devoted to vicious legislation, all of which has received the disapproval of the President. Some of this objectionable legislation is now abandoned in the face of the judgment of the people and the decision of the Supreme Court.

I have another purpose in view in speaking to-day, and I cannot review fully the effect of the proposed legislation at the last session in relation to United States marshals. If the marshals bill had become a law, however, the effect of it could have been summarized come a law, however, the effect of it could have been used to pay any compensation or fees or expenses of any kind or character incurred under title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating under title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to elections. Second, it was proposed to make it unlawful for any Department or officer of the Government to incur any liability for the payment of money under the provisions of said title 26 until an appropriation had first been made by law; notwithstanding the provisions of the said title are as imperative on the judges, supervisors, marshals, and other officers as any law on the statute-book.

On proper application of a court or judge, who is sworn to obey the laws, he must act and appoint supervisors of election, and thus necessarily incur a liability on the part of the United States for compensation, expenses, &c. That bill enacted into a law would have made it unlawful for a judge or court to obey an imperative statute.

Third, the penalty which would have been incurred by a judge for acting in obedience to a mandatory law was subjection to a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding ave years, not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding five years, or by both fine and imprisonment for not exceeding ave years, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Gentlemen on the other side said at the last session of this Congress that the so-called marshals appropriation bill should typify the "last ditch," in guarding which they resolved to die. It was quite fitting. The purpose of the democratic party, so easily understood from the beginning, was quite prominently shown in that bill. The country noted it; and we had its verdict. It was then and still is proposed to withhold from the courts of the United States their sole executive to withhold from the courts of the United States their sole executive arm in enforcing their judgments, orders, and decrees; it was proposed that the marshals and their general deputies should go without payment of their lawful fees and the expenses incident to the performance of their duties unless the minority in this Congress and the President would yield assent to the vicious legislation already referred to. The duties of marshals and their general deputies are many and of the highest importance. They constitute the physical arm of the United States courts in the arrest of all violators of the law and in the execution of all processes.

Mr. Chairman I cannot refrain from occupying a few moments more.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot refrain from occupying a few moments more, with the indulgence of the House, in making some observations suggested to my mind in the course of the debate on the marshals appropriation bill at the close of the extra session. The member from New York [Mr. Cox] then took pains to have read an old resolution of his and the vote thereon relating to the issues settled by the late war.

My honorable friend from Michigan [Mr. Congen] had read in reply a like resolution of his and the vote thereon. It seems to me it is of more concern to know how members now stand on the issues made up and determined by the war. A close observer of the debate between and determined by the war. A close observer of the debate between my colleagues [Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. HURD] at the last session, on this marshals bill, would have had no trouble in discovering, with unerring certainty, how members regarded the war issues and their settlement. When my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] declared that the principle of national unity was perpetually and eternally settled by the war, free from the right of a State or any number of States ever to destroy it, applause went up in response from this side of the House; but gentlemen on the other side sat as mute and dumb as they do to-day. When my other colleague [Mr. HURD] declared his belief in the superior sovereignty of a State under the Constitution, that heresy which brought this country to the court of war, before which the Union shook from foundation to turret for more than four years. the Union shook from foundation to turret for more than four years, the Union shook from foundation to turret for more than four years, a general and spontaneous cheer went up from the democratic members of this House. My colleague [Mr. Hurd] undertook then to expound to us some other supposed constitutional law long since exploded. He then claimed that the Constitution and the Union were "the creature of the States," to use his own language, and he then read to us the tenth amendment of the Constitution. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, was found necessary to be adopted long after the Constitution went into operation, for the purpose of granting to the States or to the people such powers as they could not otherwise possess, and which were not expressly delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States. Had the gentleman begun by reading the preamble of the Constitution of the tleman begun by reading the preamble of the Constitution of the United States, he would have found out whose instrument it was he was talking about so inconsiderately. I quote that preamble and commend it to the gentlemen on the other side:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

You will note the opening language, "we, the people of the United States." In the judgment of the framers of the Constitution, "the people of the United States" ordained and established this instrument. It was not ordained by the States. The framers of the Constitution understood that the sovereignty of the States was merged in the Federal Government under the Constitution. In the letter of the convention, bearing date September 17, 1787, the day of the sign-ing of the Constitution by its framers, George Washington, speaking for the convention as its president, uses this language:

It is obviously impracticable in the Federal Government of these States to secure all rights of independent sovereignty to each, and yet provide for the individual safety of all. Individuals entering into society must give up a share of liberty to preserve the rest.

He further says in the same letter:

In all our deliberations on this subject, we kept steadily in our view that which appears to us the greatest interest of every true American, the consolidation of our Union, in which is involved our prosperity, felicity, safety, perhaps our national

I have not time to follow my colleague through all his other propositions of bad constitutional law. He still reiterates in this session of Congress his old theory of the right of this House—because of its constitutional right to originate money bills—to have grievances redressed before making appropriations to carry on the Government and to execute existing law. This theory has been so thoroughly exploded both by speeches and by the recent back-downs of democrats in both ends of the Capitol, that I need hardly comment on it now. When the cool judgments of men of both parties gain full sway, there will be no person found bold enough to announce the dread doctrine that it is the constitutional duty of this House of Representatives to destroy this nation's life by withholding needed appropriations, unless the party in the majority in the House for the time being, shall be allowed to dictate to the Senate and the President of the United allowed to dictate to the Senate and the President of the United States the passage of laws for the redress of real or supposed grievances. No legislative body of any country ever before undertook to destroy the nation which its members were sworn to support, unless some other brauch of the government of the same nation would assent to its dictation.

My colleague still adheres with characteristic obstinacy to the view that the measures to which the democratic party objected were un-constitutional. He still stands by his constitutional argument made constitutional. He still stands by his constitutional argument made early in the extra session to demonstrate that a law on the statute-book was unconstitutional because it did not make it a high crime for a civil, military, or naval officer of the United States to keep the peace at the polls. This was the doctrine announced by the gentleman in the extra session, and I understand him to adhere to it now as a constitutional proposition. Verily, we have developed strange expounders of constitutional law when it is declared that an act is inimical to the Constitution of the United States because it does not in terms make some act of the people a crime.

A confident appeal was made to English statutes to show that in Great Britain troops were not permitted to keep the peace at the polls. A statute which provided for the conduct of British soldiers not on duty was often read and referred to as proof of this. History, how-

A statute which provided for the conduct of British soldiers not on duty was often read and referred to as proof of this. History, however, reveals to us the fact that at no time up to the present has the government of Great Britain failed to use its military power to put down riots and to keep the peace at the polls in England as well as in Ireland and Scotland. Do gentlemen challenge that proposition? In the long, 'and sometimes angry, debates during the extra session of Congress, democrats have gone down before facts, principles, and arguments, until there may be some excuse for their present silence. I will notice another attempt at constitutional exposition by my colleague, [Mr. Hurd.] I quote from a speech of his, made in the last expiring hours of the extra session:

Strange to say, the President and his advisers and the gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to have lost sight of the constitutional provisior which gives the President the power to execute the laws. The language of that instrument is that the President of the United States may call upon the militia of the several States to execute the laws. There is the power given to him for the execution of the laws; not the Army, unless Congress says so, but the militia of the States, because the Constitution so provides.

Mr. Chairman, it must have distressed my friend's constituents

Mr. Chairman, it must have distressed my friend's constituents when, after reading his speech, they took down the old Constitution and read it through, and found it contained no such language as he attributed to it. The Constitution nowhere, in terms, authorizes or empowers the President to call out the militia of the United States. empowers the President to call out the militia of the United States. Section 8, article 1, which gives Congress power to raise and support armies, grants to it power "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion." The President, it is true, is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into actual service of the United States; and Congress has the same power over the organization of the militia in actual service that it has over the creation of a regular Army, except the right is reserved by the Constitution to the States to appoint the officers and to raise and train the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

I commend, then, the re-reading of the Constitution to my colleague. He, with others, still insists if Congress does take from the President his right to use the Army the duty still rests upon him to "take care that the laws are faithfully executed" as required by the Constituthat the laws are latellitury executed as required by the first and his oath of office.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, in order to promote the comfort of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIPER,] and without the slightest fear of doing any detriment to free elections by the presence of troops at the polls, I move his time be indefinitely extended.

Mr. KEIFER. I am always thankful to my friend for any favors.

I suggest, however, I only want a minute and a half.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This side is more than willing to give him an

Mr. KEIFER. I only need a minute and a half.

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the time of the gentleman from Ohio is extended.

Mr. KEIFER. While I thank my honorable friend from Kentucky for his great consideration for me, I feel very glad that by anything I have said, whether it has been pleasing to his ears or otherwise, that I have at least brought him to his feet. [Laughter.]
Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I must be frank enough to state that I have not been induced to listen to what the gentleman from Ohio has said; I am fortunate in having been absent from the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I have in the course of my remarks included the gentleman from Kentucky among those who were absent, and one of those who may have been regarded on the other side as unsafe to have present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman knew my good taste. Mr. KEIFER. And your proneness to give utterance to your pe-

Mr. BLACKBURN. Thank you.

Mr. KEIFER. I was referring when my time expired to some propositions which were maintained or insisted upon by my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.] Let me add he with others still insists that if Congress does take from the President his right to use the Army, the duty still rests upon him to see that the laws are faithfully exerted at the constitution of the United States is by the Constitution. cuted, as the executive power of the United States is by the Constitution of the United States vested in him.

We are cautioned to remember that to take away the right to use the Army does not withdraw any constitutional power or duty from the President. Granting this to be true, how will the President execute the law if the instrumentalities by which he may do it are taken from him, as is proposed by the present amendment? It is proposed to strip the President of all means with which to enforce the laws of to strip the President of all means with which to enforce the laws of the United States, and then in mockery point out to him his duties under the Constitution. The logic of the proposed amendment to this bill would require the President to go in person to execute the laws; require him to go on election day in person to keep the peace at all polls where riots raged or were threatened. We were told at the extra session that party issues were made up. I concur in this, and await complacently the verdict of the whole country. We have recently had the verdict of the people in my own State. Until the people have declared that civil liberty is endangered by not allowing fraud intimidation, hallot-hox stuffing, riots, and bloodshed at the fraud, intimidation, ballot-box stuffing, riots, and bloodshed at the polls, I shall have full faith in them and in my country's future. [Applause.] Mr. FRYE.

Mr. Chairman, I had an idea of occupying an hour-

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Chairman, I had an idea of occupying an hour—Mr. COX. Take the hour.
Mr. FRYE. I have no doubt that if I did I should do the gentleman from New York an infinite amount of good. [Laughter.] I have no doubt I should have made a very fine speech. But under the circumstances, and for reasons which seem to me to be perfectly good, I shall not make the speech I intended to make, but will yield my time to various gentlemen. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa for ten

Mr. McCOID addressed the Committee. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. FRYE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas,

[Mr. HASKELL.]

Mr. HASKELL. I am almost sorry I had any time reserved for me. I have very little to say on this amendment. For once in my life, after some years of service in this House, I must confess my belief personally that the democratic side of it was wisest this day in keeping still. If ever there was an absolutely empty nothing to be discussed, still. If ever there was an absolutely empty nothing to be discussed, it is this democratic amendment to the Army appropriation bill.

A MEMBER. Why talk on it, then?

Mr. HASKELL. Just to say that. Just to say there is nothing in it. To say that it is an old dead horse. To say when after long debate, after the democratic party in this House had for weeks and months tried to strip the statute-books of the power that is lodged in the hands of the Executive to enforce the laws, they failed at the end of that time, and Providence or some other power very kindly opened to their discernment this little back-door out of which the democratic party filed from a most disastrous defeat.

What does this amendment say? It says in effect merely this—and it is the only construction that can be put upon this amendment;

it is the only construction that can be put upon this amendment; you may torture it into one form or another—it simply says that no soldier of the United States shall be used as a policeman is used to keep the peace at the polls. That is all there is in it.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] says that this word "police" is a word of far wider reach than this. I grant that it is. If you use the term in its broad, general sense and significance, the Army of the United States in time of peace performs simply police duty. But when you put these words into the statute-book directing the control or the use of this Army, and you say that it shall not be used as a police force is used, you put upon it the narrow, literal, every-day, honest intent and interpretation that every man will take when he first reads it over, that the Army shall not be used as a police force. There is not a statute to-day in existence that permits the Army to be used as a police force. It never has been used as a police force. I stand here to-day to assert that at any time, around any poll, whenever it becomes apparent that the civil authorities of the United States find themselves unable to preserve the peace, and that the disturbance has gone beyond the ordinary realm of the jurisdiction and care of civil officers, and becomes a riot and insurrection and rebellion, or a bit of domestic violence, in spite of your amendment, under the Constitution and under the law the President of the United States will have the power to call out the military and suppress that riot and put down that insurrec-out the minitary and suppress that riot and put down that insurrection and disperse those mobs; and he will not be using the Army to do that as a police force to keep the peace at the polls either.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask my friend from Kansas a question. In what way was the Army used by Mr. Buchanan in Kansas?

Mr. HASKELL. Never as a police force; never in the world. The civil processes in the enforcement of which the Army was called in the State of Kenses were always averaged by sivil efficers. to aid, in the State of Kansas, were always executed by civil officers, sometimes a posse of them. Behind these men, in order from a democratic stand-point to preserve the Territory from what the democrats were pleased to term an insurrection and violence, the Army was located in that Territory for that purpose. No military officer ever served anybody's process that I recollect. And so far as the free-State men of Kansas were concerned, I do not know of the man in that Territory that ever asked to have the Army withdrawn from the then Territory of Kansas

It was a request made by our eastern friends, who thought that the Army was being used to oppress the free-State men in that Territory. As a matter of fact, my old friend from Virginia, General Johnston, was in command of a part of the Federal Army in the Territory of Kansas, and that Army was practically a blessing to us, and many times served as our shield and defense.

But I come back to the old pressition that whenever sixty.

But I come back to the old proposition that whenever a riot occurs, or an insurrection, or a piece of domestic violence, even if a poll is located right in the center of it, notwithstanding you may have this provision on your statute-books, you will find that the Chief Executive of the United States is armed with the authority to suppress that insurrection; I do not care whether it occurs on election day or not, or whether there be a poll in the center of that insurrection district or not; and when the President thus uses the Army to put down that insurrection and that domestic violence, I insist that he does not use it as a police force to keep the peace at the polls, and I insist that not a single soldier thus used acts as a policeman to keep the peace at the

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman if the majority of this House pass that law, and do so with the express declaration that it is to keep the soldiers of the United States away from the polls under any pretense

Mr. HASKELL. Oh, I admit that. Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman if he says that when

Mr. CONCER. I desire to ask the gentleman it he says that when they pass such a law and put in it as a part of the explanation of it that no soldier shall approach the polls for any purpose whatever—

Mr. HASKELL. I understand what the intendment of my democratic friends on my left here has been all along. I understand what their intendment was at the extra session. I understand the position their intendment was at the extra session. I understand the position which the State-rights men took during that debate. I am not by any means excusing the democratic party in this matter. I understand perfectly well that they would like to have this little tom-fool arrangement, which they have flung up to the surface, made to mean a great deal more than it does mean; because the honorable gentleman who brought it in here has stated to the House that if he could have his way he would go a great deal further. And I suppose that every one of our democratic friends would like to deprive the Executive of every ticle of power to do that which he can do to-day. But if they think, which I doubt, that this little foolish amendment accomplishes anything, then in my judgment they are wonderfully deceived; but I do not believe they are deceived.

Mr. CONGER. Then why do they insist upon it so strongly, if they

Mr. CONGER. Then why do they insist upon it so strongly, if they do not think it means more than you say it means?

Mr. HASKELL. It is because they got into an exceedingly tight place at the extra session; an exceedingly tight place. They had been whipped from every battle-ground; they had met veto after veto; they had been absolutely crushed and annihilated before the people. And when this little trap-door of escape was opened to them, they all filed through it in a grand mad rush to escape. Of course they would like to deceive the country with the idea that this little trap-door they have escaped through means more than they know it

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand the gentleman to agree that this amendment is susceptible of more than one construction.

Mr. HASKELL. Oh, I know some claim that one construction is that the Army of the United States cannot be used at all for any purpose.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understood the gentleman to say that the amendment presented to the House is susceptible of more than one construction.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not think there was ever a sentence of English written in the world that some idiot could not construe differently from what a sensible man would construe it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It seems to me you are the one who is giving it an idiotic construction.

Mr. CONGER. I insist—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONGER. I insist that while the gentlemen on the other side are dumb and have nobody to answer for them the gentleman from Kansas shall not use such epithets as he has used about them. [Laugh-

Mr. TUCKER. Do I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to require that the words of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] shall be taken down? [Laughter.]

Mr. HASKELL. I can illustrate this case a great deal better in regard to this matter than by a long argument, if I should explain what I conceive to be the exact condition of the democratic party with reference.

ence to this amendment.

I will illustrate it in this way: the State-rights men of the United States made an attack in the extra session of Congress upon the United States Government as a Federal Government. They made war upon States Government as a Federal Government. They made war upon that Government, to which in homely phrase we have given the name of "Uncle Sam," as though it was an individual. They started in with great bluster to take the life of Uncle Samuel, but they failed to do it. Then they said they would burn his house, but we whipped them out of that idea. Then they said they would cut down his shrubbery and plow up his front yard; and we prevented them from doing that. Then, as they retreated down the back way of the old man's grounds, they commenced picking up the bricks of his side-walk for the purpose of destroying that, and we whipped them out of that.

Then they sneaked over the back fence and called a halt for consultation, and one of them produced this little bucket of slops and slush and said if we would permit them to smear the fences of Uncle Samuel they would then stop and go away; and for the sake of peace slush and said if we would permit them to smear the fences of Uncle Samuel they would then stop and go away; and for the sake of peace we agreed to their proposition and to the nuisance they proposed to perpetrate. Now after a year this army has come back again, not with efforts against Uncle Samuel's life, or against his house, or his shrubbery, but they again produce the old slush-pot, with the same old stuff that was in it a year ago, and propose to smear Uncle Sam's fences again—dirty business, out of place, but entirely harmless. That is all there is of this amendment—an excuse, an apology, a cover for the complete back-down of the extra session. I will vote against it now, as I did before. I shall vote against it because it is a political rider. I shall vote against it because it is out of place here, because it is useless, because the original intendment behind all these riders was of such a character that it met my hearty disapproval; but not because this rider in and of itself, properly construed, can possibly because this rider in and of itself, properly construed, can possibly work injury to any one or in any way impede the legitimate and needful action of the President in executing, "carefully" executing, the laws of the land.

Mr. FROST. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The floor belongs to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE;] the Chair does not control it.

Mr. CONGER. I hope that the gentleman from Maine, if any gentleman on the other side wishes to say a word or two, will yield some of his time.

Mr. FROST. I merely asked that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended. We wanted to hear more from him.

Mr. BAYNE. I should think so.

Mr. CLYMER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield the remainder of his time to any one?

Mr. FRYE. I have not done so.

Mr. CLYMER. Does the gentleman desire to occupy his time?

Mr. FRYE. Some portion of it.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman give way for a motion that the committee rise?

the committee rise?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no; I shall probably occupy only five minutes. I do not care to discuss a question when the talk is all on one side; there is no fun in that kind of a fight. I should be very happy to yield all my time to gentlemen on the other side if they would occupy it.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman want somebody to move that he have leave to print?

Mr. FRYE. No, I thank you. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention in the first place to my text for a speech of five or perhaps ten minutes. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Sparks,] chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, used this language to-day in introducing the subject for discussion:

This value cowardly amendment.

courageous gentleman from Illinois—the father, at any rate the puta-tive father, of a "vain, cowardly amendment?" What shall we say of a Military Committee that spends its time and finally brings forth a "vain, cowardly amendment?"

I agree with the gentleman fully and completely. The amendment is a coward and a sneak beyond any question. I have nothing to say of its origin except this: it was born a long while ago, and has not grown a particle since it was born. It was born in the eventful extra session, when the democratic party met in solemn caucus in this magnificent Hall and determined that no officer of the Army or the Navy nificent Hall and determined that no officer of the Army or the Navy and no civil officer of the United States should keep the peace at the polls with armed men. That was bold—bad, I admit, but bold—worthy of a bold but a bad party. This is "vain" and "cowardly." Mr. SPARKS. "Tame," not "vain" was the word I used. Mr. FRYE. Well, "tame and cowardly," there is very little difference. Now, gentlemen, if you could have compelled this Congress to recognize and enact into law that proposition of your caucus, it would have been a most magnificent victory for the democratic party. How New York would have gone next fall, with Samuel J. Tilden or Horatio Seymour or any other gentleman you might name as a candidate, no man could have the slightest doubt. It would have been no loss to your party whatever that those two distinguished demono loss to your party whatever that those two distinguished demo-cratic patriots, Judge McCunn and Judge Barnard, had been impeached and driven from the bench; no loss that they could not once peached and driven from the bench; no loss that they could not once more naturalize citizens and send them to the voting precincts at the rate of one thousand to fifteen hundred a day. It would have been no loss that they could not summon men into their court and administer the oath of citizenship to one hundred and fifty in a batch. It would have been no loss that the democracy could not have had assisting them the twenty-two rum-shops that were discovered in the city of New York peddling out blank naturalization certificates to the extent of over eleven thousand in some twenty days.

oh, gentlemen, if you could have enacted into law this bold, bad amendment that no military or civil officer should keep the peace at the polls, you might well forego William M. Tweed and Samuel J. Tilden and Judge McCunn and Judge Barnard, and all the rest of the great lights in that magnificent campaign of yours won in 1868, the great lights in that magnificent campaign of yours won in 1868, for under this amendment as a law all on earth that you would have needed would have been simply to let your democratic "bummers" and ruffians, mobbists and thieves in the city of New York arm themselves with bludgeons, go to the voting precincts, drive away every respectable man who sought to cast his vote, and completely, with a reign of terror, control the city of New York on election day. With such a law, gentlemen, you could have carried New York City, as you did before in 1868, by sixty thousand majority without the slightest difficulty.

such a law, gentlemen, you could have carried New York City, as you did before in 1868, by sixty thousand majority without the slightest difficulty.

You fought for it like men. You stood here and for three months fought like heroes—no! like democrats [laughter]—and then you passed it through this House. Then it passed the Senate, went to the President, and he, a republican, vetoed it; and you had not power enough to pass it and make it a law over his veto. You met once more in caucus; you met in this magnificent Hall, in the night-time; you locked the doors, double-locked them, and you hunted every nook and cranny of this whole broad Chamber to see whether there was a listening ear or peering eye. Then you stationed sentinels, who stalked through the darkened corridors, to keep away every transgressing newspaper man. Then something took place.

Why, Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] read that wonderful description of the birth of the baby elephant the other day? [Laughter.] Oh, it was magnificent as a matter of description. It was night-time; there was a great widespread tent; beneath it, and right in the center of it, was this mother elephant chained. Around her were a score of huge elephant forms swaying to and fro in chains. There were sleeping lions there, snarling hyenas there, and crouching tigers.

Mr. COX. Do not point at Conger. [Great laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. And the baby elephant was born. Then the elephants lifted their trunks and trumpeted, the lions roared, the tigers shrieked, the hyenas yelled. Oh, it was magnificent; it was fitting; it was proper; it was a perfect scene in all its parts; the baby born was an elephant.

Mr. COX. What about the giraffe? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. What about the giraffe? [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. Clearly he was not from New York. [Laughter.] But here, at your caucus, when your democratic party was in travail, and the doors were locked, and the lights were dim, and the sentinels were placed on duty, there, too, was a birth; and the doors were opened, and the lights were let in upon it. What was it? Oh, there never was a mountain in all the wide world that labored and brought forth such a little, contemptible mouse, as your democratic party brought forth in that caucus. [Laughter.] A mouse sans teeth, sans eyes, sans everything but tail and a little soft fur. [Laughter. Here was no such eternal fitness of things as at the elephantine birth. birth.

Mr. FRYE. No, I thank you. [Laughter.]
Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention in the first place to my text or a speech of five or perhaps ten minutes. The gentleman from linois, [Mr. Sparks,] chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, sed this language to-day in introducing the subject for discussion:
This vain, cowardly amendment.

How is that for the Military Committee? How is that for the not let us. You mounted it on your appropriation bill. It rode through the House, rode through the Senate, then up to the President, and he, with a microscope, could not see it, and so it became the law. We thought the little mouse would die then of starvation. We thought thought the little mouse would die then of starvation. We thought it was so small it could not possibly survive. But lo and behold, the mouse was put out to nurse; he was put in the charge of the chairman of the Military Committee, the fighting committee of the House. [Laughter.] He was to be made the child of the regiment. [Renewed laughter.] The chairman of the Military Committee, after nursing him now for six months, tenderly brings him into this House and passes him over no larger than when he took him. He is still sans teeth, sans eyes, and sans everything but tail. Even this father who brought him in says he is "a vain, cowardly little shrimp." [Great laughter.]

[Great laughter.]
Oh, you wicked republicans! I do not believe this little miserable rider, this birth of the democratic party in travail—surely it cannot injure you very much. It is their only one, if it is so little; then can you not let them have it when it will amuse them so? [Laughter] and applause.]

I yield now to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I do not intend to debate. I want to have a descriptive scene to illustrate this afternoon in the House read from the Georgia Scenes, written by Judge Longstreet, to show what a one-sided fight we have had.

Mr. FRYE. How much of it?

Mr. COX. Not very long, but it is interesting.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to yield my remaining time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COX. But you yielded to me.
Mr. FRYE. I yielded to the gentleman for a speech.
Mr. COX. This is part of my speech.
Mr. FRYE. The gentleman can speak so much better than a book,
I wish to hear him. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"] Well, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York to make a speech by

Mr. COX. The "gentleman from New York" prefers to make a speech by Cox-y. [Laughter.] I send my speech to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Rapt with the enchantment of the season and the scenery around me, I was slowly rising the slope, when I was startled by loud, profane, and boisterous voices, which seemed to proceed from a thick covert of undergrowth about two hundred yards in the advance of me and about one hundred to the right of my road.

"You kin, kin you?"

"Yes, I kin, and am able to do it! Boo-oo-oo! Oh wake snakes, and walk your chalks! Brimstone and —fire! Don't hold me, Nick Stoval! The fight's made up, and let's go at it; — my soul if I don't jump down his throat and gallop every chitterling out of him before you can say 'quit!"

"Now, Nick, don't hold him! Jist let the wild cat come, and I'll tame him. Ned 'll see me a fair fight; won't you, Ned?"

"Oh, yes; I'll see you a fair fight, blast my old shoes if I don't."

"Thus't sufficient, as Tom Haynes said when he saw the elephant. Now let him come!"

"That's sufficient, as Tom Haynes said when he saw the elephant. Now let him come!"
Thus they went on, with countless oaths interspersed, which I dare not even hint at, and with much that I could not distinctly hear.

In mercy's name, thought I, what band of ruffians has selected this holy season and this heavenly retreat for such Pandemonian riots! I quickened my gait, and had come nearly opposite to the thick grove whence the voice proceeded, when my eye caught, indistinctly and at intervals through the foliage of the dwarf-oaks and hickories which intervened, glimpses of a man or men who seemed to be in a violent struggle; and I could occasionally catch those deep-drawn, emplatic oaths which men in conflict utter when they deal blows. I dismounted, and hurried to the spot with all speed. I had overcome about half the space which separated it from me, when I saw the combatants come to the ground, and, after a short struggle, I saw the uppermost one (for I could not see the other) make a heavy plunge with both his thumbs, and at the same instant I heard a cry in the accent of the keenest torture, "Enough; my eye's out!"

I was so completely horror-struck that I stood transfixed for a moment to the spot where the cry met me. The accomplices in the hellish deed which had been perpetrated had all fied at my approach; at least I supposed so, for they were not to be seen.

"Now, blast your corn-shucking soul," said the victor, (a youth about eighteen years old,) as he rose from the ground, "come cutt'n your shines bout me agin, next time I come to the court-house, will you! Get your owl-eye in agin, if you an!"

At this moment he saw me for the first time. He looked excessively embarnext time I come to the court-house, will you! Get your owl-eye in agin, if you can!"

At this moment he saw me for the first time. He looked excessively embarrassed, and was moving off, when I called to him in a tone emboldened by the sacredness of my office and the injustive of his crime, "Come back, you brute, and assist me in relieving your fellow-mortal whom you have ruined forever!"

My rudeness subdued his embarrassment in an instant; and, with a taunting curl of the nose, he replied: "You needn't kick before you're spurred. There a'nt nobody there, nor ha'nt been nother—I was jist seein' how I could 'a' fout." So saying, he bounded to his plow, which stood in the corner of the fence about fifty yards beyond the battle-ground.

I went to the ground from which he had risen, and there were the prints of his two thumbs, plunged up to the balls in the mellow earth, about the distance of a man's eyes apart; and the ground around was broken up as if two stags had been engaged upon it.

[Great laughter and applause.]
Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I had thought in my own mind after the severe remarks of my colleague on this side and after the utter paralysis of the democracy [laughter on the democratic side] when no one came to the rescue, that it behooved me to say a word or two as some excuse, some apology to the country why they had thus become so cowardly, so paralyzed, so utterly unfit and unwilling to defend what they defended so strenuously six or eight months ago. I feel much sympathy for them; I feel sympathy to see the great giant democracy of this House lay down utterly prostrated and so utterly paralyzed.

But, sir, there was a man from the South, who used southern language, and who can make his vindication so much more complete in the ears of southern men than any language that I have, and whom my distinguished friend from New York has picked out and selected as a defender for his party—that worthless party, that party gone, that party which has not even the semblance of a man to gouge it, [laughter]—I say that he used that language so much better than I can, and used it in general debate, too, and has not yet been shot for dainy it that I rise here simply for the research of the seminatory. doing it, that I rise here simply for the purpose of saying that the vindication was triumphant. The language is beautiful. [Laughter.] The author is unknown to me, but its sponsor, the gentleman from New York, presents it here as the only vindication of that side of the House for the paralysis which has stricken his brethren here on these House for the paralysis which has stricken his brethren here on these weighty and serious wrongs and charges made against the democracy of cowardice, of unwillingness to debate, that I desire to add nothing further. [Great laughter and applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. FRYE. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL.]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman to yield to the other side to reply. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. I would gladly yield to gentlemen on the other side, but they do not want to reply.

but they do not want to reply.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move the committee now rise.

Mr. CASWELL. I will yield for a motion that the committee rise, reserving my time.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SPARKS. Do gentlemen on the other side want any further time for debate? If not, my motion would be that the committee rise and end this discussion; but if the gentleman wishes to proceed this evening I hope he will do so.

Mr. FRYE. It would be just as well to let the gentleman from Wisconsin finish. He will only occupy fifteen minutes.

Mr. SPARKS. That is what we want.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to say again, I will yield for a motion for the committee to rise.

the committee to rise

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the gentleman finish his speech

Mr. CASWELL. If it is the wish of the committee I will proceed

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields to me for a motion that the committee rise; I make that motion.

Mr. ROBESON. Before the committee rises I desire to have an amendment read for information.

Mr. SPARKS. Does that require unanimous consent? The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.
Mr. ROBESON. Will not the gentleman hear it read?
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the motion that the committee rise.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 78.
Mr. CONGER. A quorum has not voted.
The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required on a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required on a motion that the committee rise. It is equivalent in that respect to a motion in the House to adjourn.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, at the extra session held one year ago the election laws passed by Congress from time to time, making provisions for the appointment of supervisors to attend election preducts with the aid of deputy marshals and the military force, if need be, to keep the peace, were assailed upon the other side of this Chamber with great vigor. More than one-half of the democratic members of this House made elaborate speeches against the constitutionality of these laws. They insisted that they were an encroachment upon the rights reserved to the States, and that Federal officers had no right to interfere. They held that an election for any purpose was a local proceeding, to be conducted under State without the intervention of Federal authority. Upon the theory that the General Government had no interest in elections, not even for choosing members of Congress, they denied the right of the Federal Government to exercise any control over them. While upon this side of the House it was insisted that we are a nation with power to oversee and superit was insisted that we are a nation with power to oversee and supervise all measures pertaining to the General Government, with authority to execute the laws of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution on every inch of soil under the jurisdiction of the States. The issue thus joined between the two parties gave rise to that session, and for three and a half months we discussed these questions.

sion, and for three and a half months we discussed these questions. After that long-protracted session, extending far into the fiscal year for which the appropriations were being made, a rider to that bill, making provision for the support of the Army, in the same form as that now offered to this bill, was adopted, receiving the votes of several republicans upon this side of the Chamber, though I was not one of them, yielding as they did to the coercion exercised by the majority rather than lengthen the session, creating an enormous expense and deficiency, which have followed and embarrassed us to the present day. There was also no well-founded belief that the Army, or any portion of it, would be needed at any election to be held during the year for which these appropriations were to be made; for in no State except in California were congressional elections to be held. It is well known that every republican who voted for that bill was It is well known that every republican who voted for that bill was opposed to the rider which was attached, and it comes with little force for gentlemen to taunt this side of the House for having given the measure some support, attached as it was to an appropriation bill. It illustrates the mischief of such legislation.

Since that session, however, the Supreme Court has held these election laws to be constitutional and valid, and has removed all doubt, if any existed, as to the right of Congress to enact laws supervising the elections of members of Congress. On this subject the court say:

The State may make regulations on the subject; Congress may make regulations on the same subject, or may alter or add to those already made. The paramount character of those made by Congress has the effect to supersede those made by the State, so far as the two are inconsistent, and no further.

The regulations of Congress being constitutionally paramount, the duties imposed thereby upon the officers of the United States, so far as they have respect to the same matters, must necessarily be paramount to those to be performed by the officers of the State. If both cannot be performed, the latter are pro tanto superseded and cease to be duties.

The court also say:

We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to keep the peace to that extent.

By the highest judicial tribunal of this country have the validity of these laws and the authority of the Government to enforce them and to preserve the peace when necessary to their due execution and observance been set at rest

During the year for which this appropriation is to be made there will be held elections for members of Congress in every State of the Union, except in California. We are on the eve also of a presidential election, and all the powers of the Federal as well as State governments should be brought into requisition if necessary to secure a fair elec-tion by the people. No arm of either branch of the Government should be paralyzed, but fraud, violence, and intimidation should be put down if it takes the combined force of both Federal and State governments. The liberties of the people depend upon it. The perpetuity of our institutions and the protection of our homes, our fortunes, and lives depend upon it. Every arm should be outstretched, every voice should be raised in the interest of peace and good order. The ballot-box is the medium through which the people are heard. The ballot-box is the medium through which the people are heard. By it abuses are put down, dishonesty overthrown, and a pure government maintained. It is the voice by which the people are heard, and is a prerogative above all others. If we endanger the elective franchise, if we render its exercise doubtful, our Government will soon go to pieces. How important, then, that every possible safeguard should be thrown around the ballot-box, and the people left free to express their will through it.

We must have a Congress to provide means for the support of the Government. Without a legislative branch we shall perish. We must have a President to see that the laws are executed. Elections in the several States must be held for the selection of members of Congress. several States must be held for the selection of members of Congress and a President of the United States. If a State government be sufficient to insure a fair and free expression of the will of the people, no interposition on the part of Federal officers will be necessary and none will take place. This every man knows who holds a seat in this House. But if the State authority be insufficient or not disposed to protect the citizen in the exercise of the elective franchise, and according to his own will and convictions, whenever a congressional election is to be held the General Government may and ought to extend its protecting power to every voting precipet in the land and tend its protecting power to every voting precinct in the land, and by the aid of its marshals and troops, if necessary, enable the people to hold their elections.

On such protection may depend the election of a Congress at all. State authority may be opposed to such elections, and may desire to extinguish the National Government, remanding all power to the States, and it may be that by the strong arm of the Federal Government alone can a Congress be secured. We know, too, that fraud, wielence, and intimidation have been practiced in some of the States to an extent which should alarm every well-disposed citizen and receive his condemnation. The people have held elections, cast their votes in apparent security, but by some pretext, or through some fraud their votes were never counted, but oftentimes destroyed.

Upon the present basis of representation in this House, there are in each congressional district throughout the United States about twenty-five thousand lawful voters. In ordinary elections, when the people are left free to exercise their choice, each member of Congress receives from twelve to fifteen thousand votes. But if we turn to some of the Southern States, we find there are three members of this House holding seats who received less than three thousand votes are. each. There are three others who received less than four thousand votes; six others less than five thousand; and four others who re-ceived less than six thousand; all democrats. Gentlemen may tell us they had no opposition, and the vote in these districts was therefore us they had no opposition, and the vote in these districts was therefore small. This may be true. But in the name of freedom and the laws which shall protect the people of this country in the free exercise of their political rights, I ask what has become of the republican party in those States. But a short time ago the republicans carried some of these States, where this small vote now appears, by a majority of thirty thousand. Have our democratic friends converted the people to their faith. to their faith; if so, why do they not east their vote with and for them? No, Mr. Chairman, they are not converted, they are there with the same political belief, but disfranchised, intimidated, and driven from the polls. If not that, they are proscribed, disgraced, threatened, and often driven from their homes, until they dare not assert their political views, and they stay away from elections.

Three years ago Congress was kept in continuous session for thirty days to determine questions of fraud and intimidation practiced in some of these States in the election of President. We should bring some of these States in the election of President. We should bring to our aid every department of the Government to avoid a repetition of a like occurrence. We then found ourselves involved in a difficulty never anticipated by our fathers who framed the Constitution. A violation of the elective franchise to such an extent was never contemplated by the most far-seeing statesmen, and Congress for the first templated by the most far-seeing statesmen, and Congress for the first time in the history of the Government was obliged to adopt a new plan of determining the result of an election, and did, I fear, usurp the prerogative of the President of the Senate in counting the electoral vote. Instead, however, of adopting means to avoid a repetition of these troubles our democratic friends on the very eve of an election so important as to affect every State in the Union and at which the members of this House are to be chosen as well as a President, now propose to restrict the use of any military force whatever, however great the emergency, and prohibit the use of soldiers in preserving the peace or in the execution of the laws made for the protection of the ballot.

They say by this amendment that no money therein appropriated shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, or transportation of any portion of the Army to be used as a police force to keep peace at the polls at any election held within any State. By this we understand they are to withhold from the troops all money which might be due them while in the execution of such duties and in pursuance of law and their obligations as soldiers to obey their commander. We must meet this proposition this scheme to canture the Government, upon meet this proposition, this scheme to capture the Government, upon the broad plane for which it is intended. It amounts to a prohibition the broad plane for which it is intended. It amounts to a prohibition of the use of the military forces to restrain armed bodies, leaving violence to have its sway on election days. Armed forces may patrol the streets, visit the voting precincts, break up and destroy elections and ballot-boxes at will, and there is to be no remedy. Federal troops may be within reach, but they must remain idle, powerless, and let the riot proceed, notwithstanding the National Government has a direct interest in the result. direct interest in the result.

Why the democratic party wish this restraint upon the Army I canwhy the democratic party wish this restraint upon the Army I cannot conceive. If they desire fair elections it is difficult to discover why they do not also desire peace and good order. A soldier under strict discipline, as he is, and oftentimes non-partisan, is the last person to interfere in elections, except to preserve order. It will not do for gentlemen to say the voters of the South are in the least intimidated by the presence of one or more, or any number of soldiers who might be present at the polls under orders to preserve the peace. The men who could meet our soldiers in battle, as they often did at the cannon's mouth, are not the men who are intimidated by a harmless soldier with unloaded musket.

There never was any force to that argument, and there never can be, for it is unfounded in fact or reason. What, then, is the cause of their anxiety to keep away officers of the peace, or soldiers, who can preserve it? Does a quiet election embarrass them? Does it lessen their prospects of success. If they are in the minority, I confess a fair election would bring them defeat. Do they wish to allow armed men to surround ballot-boxes, break up and destroy them? If so, they do not want the presence of soldiers to prevent them. If they want a fair election, the greater the force stationed at the polls for the purpose of keeping order the more certain they would be to have it. But there is another reason why I am opposed to this amendment. Any proposition, whether it be a rider to an appropriation bill, as in this case, or a bill standing alone, which in any way interferes with the President of the United States in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, made so by the Constitution, or imposes restrictions upon him in the movement of troops to such parts of the country as in his judgment he shall deem for the safety of the people, will try as in his judgment he shall deem for the safety of the people, will never have my support while I am a member of this House.

To the President is committed a trust more important than all others. He is the special guardian of the public peace. To him is intrusted the security of the whole country. The Army is placed at his disposal. They are his police and should obey his commands. He must be left free to act and send it where he will. No rational man supposes the Army will be detailed for police duties at elections unless the public safety requires it, and not until every prospect of securing peace from the local authorities has been exhausted. If in any State it be obvious that no election for members of Congress can be held with safety by reason of violent composition, will it be conbe held with safety by reason of violent opposition, will it be contended that the General Government may not send a force into that State sufficient to protect those who wish to hold such elections? not, the election of a Congress may be wholly defeated. Shall the Executive witness the overthrow of the National Legislature by a factious opposition in the States and the Government broken up and dissolved because it has not the means or the authority from Congress to send troops into such States to preserve order during the elections? By this amendment he would find himself virtually forbidden. Is there danger that the Executive will violate the trust reposed in him by the people? Is it supposed he will become the oppressor of the people because he has an unlimited control of the Army? We must not forget he is selected above all others from the body of the people because of his wisdom, his judgment, and love of justice, and we must trust him in the exercise of those powers with which the Constitution has clothed him.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPARKS. The object of that motion, I presume, would be that the House may limit debate. Is there any further disposition to debate this question? Why not vote upon the amendment now and

Mr. BAYNE. There is some further disposition to debate this question; and it was understood that those who thought there was something in this amendment should have an opportunity of being heard

Mr. SPARKS. Cannot we now vote upon this proposition and

Mr. SPARKS. Cannot we now vote upon this proposition and dispose of this appropriation bill and get to some other business?

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. ROBESON. In order to settle definitely whether or not there is anything in this proposition which it seems gentlemen on the other side generally wish to speak upon, I have an amendment to offer which should settle that; and if I am allowed to read it now gentlemen can study it till to morrow morning.

Mr. SPARKS. To-morrow will be Sunday.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well, they can study it with prayerful consideration on Sunday and come back with right minds on Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the com-

Mr. ROBESON. I ask unanimous consent to have read the amendment which I propose to introduce at the proper time.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. BRAGG objected.

Mr. ROBESON. I appeal to the gentleman from Missouri not to insist on his objection. I meant to read the amendment as a part of my speech but forgot.

Mr. BLAND. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. FRYE. Allow me to call the attention of the gentleman from

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FRYE. I wish merely to suggest to my friend that the bill cannot pass without coming again into Committee of the Whole and no power can prevent the gentleman from offering his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Until general debate is closed by order of the House it is not in order to move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from New Jersey desires to put in his amendment for Sunday reading.

Mr. ROBESON. It reads like the Proverbs.

Mr. SPARKS. I hope it will be inserted in the motion that the committee rise that it is for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh no; it is for the purpose of adjournment.

The question being put on the motion that the committee rise, nere were—ayes 57, noes 78.

Mr. CONGER. A quorum has not voted. I demand that the roll be called.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not need a quorum to decide the motion

Mr. CONGER. I think there is not a quorum present. The rule says that when it appears there is not a quorum in the Committee of the Whole the roll shall be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise and the names of the absentees shall be reported to the House.

Mr. ATKINS. Let us have tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We are willing to allow discussion to go on.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that when it appears there is no quorum present in Committee of the Whole then the roll shall be

The CHAIRMAN. But it is the duty of the Chair to order tellers when a quorum does not vote. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to act as tellers.

A MEMBER. They are on the same side.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] who made the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. CONGER. I will trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his count.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 43, noes 81.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And I make the point of order that it does not require a quorum to determine the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that a motion that the committee rise, that motion being equivalent to a motion in the House to adjourn, does not require a quorum to determine it, and if the committee determines to rise, the question of a quorum is not important. But if the committee does not determine to rise, or if in the House the motion to adjourn be not agreed to, and on that motion no quorum votes, then in the House the only motion in order is for a call of the House; and in the Committee of the Whole the second clause of the new Rule XXIII applies, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows: The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed to call the roll, as provided for in the rule.

Mr. CLYMER. It seems to me that it is impossible to get along further with this bill to-day; and why should we waste time at this late hour of Saturday in calling the roll?

Mr. ATKINS. How much time do gentlemen on the other side want to discuss this amendment?

Mr. CALKINS. We can fix that on Monday.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the House ought to settle now how much time shall be consumed on this amendment. It is very important that appropriation bills shall be passed through the House so that the Senate may have something to do. There is nothing before the Senate now, and they are waiting upon this body. If we expect to get these appropriation bills through before the 1st of August, it is important that we go on with them now. I do not want to limit debate unnecessarily, but I hope gentlemen on the other side will make up their essarily; but I hope gentlemen on the other side will make up their essarily; but I hope gentlemen on the other side will make up their minds how much time they want on this amendment, and I hope this side will give it to them. We want none ourselves.

Mr. CALKINS. Let us rise now, and then we can fix it on Monday. Mr. SPARKS. Why not fix it now? There is an evident disposition to give all the time that gentlemen want.

Mr. CALKINS. Allow me to make this suggestion—

Mr. SPARKS. We want to know now how much time is wanted. Mr. ROBESON. Permit me to make a suggestion which I think will stop all this difficulty.

Mr. FARR. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask permission to make a suggestion.

Mr. SPARKS. I am willing for the gentleman to make it.

Many Members. Regular order!

Mr. SPAKKS. I am willing for the gentleman to make it.
Many Members. Regular order!
Mr. DUNNELL. I ask consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] be allowed to make a statement.
The CHAIRMAN. That is objected to.
Mr. CLYMER. Is there objection to my making a statement?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question to the committee. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] making a statement? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLYMER. I make this suggestion: that we agree by common consent—I understand that we can do nothing in committee that will consent—I understand that we can do nothing in committee that will bind anybody—that we agree by common consent to fix some hour of Monday next when we shall take the final vote on this bill. I would suggest that it be agreed that at four o'clock on Monday next the previous question shall be called on the bill and amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. You cannot do that in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLYMER. I understand that. I stated when I commenced my remarks that the Committee of the Whole could not bind anybody. I am talking about what shall be done by the House. I merely make the suggestion that it now be agreed by common consent among us that at four o'clock on Monday next the previous question shall be ordered in the House on this bill and the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. That will give no length of time for debate on Monday, because under the new rules all of Monday can be occupied until five o'clock—

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman will recollect that next Monday will

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman will recollect that next Monday will be the second Monday of the month, and under the new rules it is for regular business. Only the first and third Mondays of the month are regular business. Only the rules. Next Monday will be for regular business, except the call of States for the introduction of bills.

Mr. CONGER. And I say that that call may take all day long. We on this side object to fixing the time for closing this debate until gentlemen who have prepared their remarks and desire to speak shall themen who have prepared their remarks and desire to speak shall have an opportunity to do so. When no time is desired on the other side, there seems to be no reason why there should not be some liberality shown to this side.

Mr. CLYMER. I grant that all the time allowed for debate may be used by my friends on the other side. And I will say that we are here now ready to listen to gentlemen on the other side, and to wait for their speeches from now until four o'clock on Monday next, if necessary.

Mr. ATKINS. I would suggest to gentlemen on the other side that we agree to take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. CONGER. I would be glad to do that if I did not recollect that three or four hours yesterday were spent on the Madison Day claim without our hearing a word against it from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ATKINS. Yesterday was private bill day.
Mr. CONGER. I know that.
Mr. ATKINS. And the Committee on Appropriations were voted down; and I expect the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] helped to do it. [Laughter.]
Mr. FROST. There is no doubt of it.
Mr. CONGER. Is there any other gentleman who wants to make a remark?

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think it worth while for our friends of the majority to undertake to compel us to say now just when we shall be willing to close debate. We cannot say for the reason that there are, as I know, several gentlemen on our side who desire to speak; I know of at least one prominent gentleman who wishes to take part in the debate, and who is now out of town. This talk of continuing the debate as long as we may desire this evening is mere trifling; and it seems to me it would be of no use to take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday morning. Let us adjourn regularly until Monday; and as soon as debate has reached a reasonable extent we will agree with gentlemen on the other side in closing it.

Mr. ATKINS and others objected to debate.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to make a proposition.
The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole having found itself without a quorum, the Chair, under the rules, must now direct that the roll be called.

The CHAIRMAN. No motion is in order during the roll-call.

Mr. BROWNE. Is it not in order to move that the further call of the roll be dispensed with?

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing can interrupt the roll-call.

The call of the roll was resumed and concluded.

The committee rose; and Mr. Cox having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Springer reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the absentees to the House.

resumes its session.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the House now adjourn.

EVASION OF STAMP-TAX.

Mr. TUCKER. In the concurrent resolution of the Senate which was adopted by the House this morning three words were omitted, which I desire now to have inserted in the fourth line of the resolu-

on. [Cries of "Agreed!"]
Mr. FRYE. In order to have the record right, is it not nec that the gentleman should move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to reconsider was made and laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. Then the resolution can be amended by unanimous consent. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Cierk read as Iollows:

Before the words "the Ways and Means Committee" insert "three members of;" so as to make the resolution read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That a joint committee, consisting of two members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and three members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, be appointed by the respective presiding officers, to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on cigars and other articles subject to excise duties, what remedy can be provided by law, and with power to recommend such measures as they may deem proper by bill or otherwise.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was agreed to. Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I have moved to adjourn; but I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Frost.]

MONUMENT TO GENERAL FRANCIS P. BLAIR.

Mr. FROST. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for immediate passage a bill from the Senate donat Francis P. Blair, formerly a Senator from the State of Missouri.

There was no objection; and the bill (S. No. 837) to donate twelve condemned bronze cannon to the Blair Monument Association of Saint Louis, Missouri, was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time

and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to deliver to the Blair Monument Association, of Saint Louis, Missouri, or its proper officers, twelve condemned bronze cannon, if the same can be spared without injury to the public service, for the purpose of aiding in the erection of a monument to the late Major-General Francis P. Blair, jr., at the city of Saint Louis, Missouri.

Mr. FROST. I ask to print some remarks on this bill.

There was no objection. [See Appendix.]
The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FROST moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. VALEN-TINE, until Wednesday next, on account of important business

ANSON MILES.

On motion of Mr. EVINS, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Anson Miles, there being no adverse report.

FIRE-PROOF ROOF, WINDER'S BUILDING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendation of an appropriation for a fire-proof roof to Winder's Building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 5048) relating to justices of the peace in the Territories; when the Speaker signed the same.

UNITED STATES COURT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. MULDROW, under authority heretofore granted, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on the Territories on the bill (H. R. No. 5634) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 755, accompanying said bill.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, under authority heretofore granted, submitted a report (No. 1117) in writing, to accompany the bill (S. No. 316) for the relief of homestead settlers on the public lands, reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, and referred to the House Calendar; which report was ordered to be printed, and referred to the same calendar.

ABSENTEES.

Mr. ROBESON. Do the names of the absentees go into the RECORD and the Journal

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules they do.
Mr. ROBESON. Then I am bound to state that the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Carlisle, was too ill to stay here and, before leaving, paired with me.
Mr. NICHOLLS. I wish to announce that Mr. Persons is paired with Mr. FORSYTHE.

Mr. NEW. It is also proper I should state that my colleague, Mr. HOSTETLER, was too ill to remain.

And then, on motion of Mr. CALKINS, (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 12, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communica-tion from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers in relation to the bill (S. No. 1439) to confirm the Stratton survey of the pueblo of San Francisco, and the bill (H. R. No. 4928) to confirm the survey of the pueblo of San Francisco, and suggesting certain amendments thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of John M. Goodhue, of Worcester, Massachusetts, late major Eleventh Infantry, United States Army, praying the passage of an act restoring him to the Army and placing him upon the retired list; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. I also present the petition of Nathaniel Wales and others, some thirty or forty persons, residents of Massachusetts and officers in the late war, some of them officers in the regular Army and Navy, but most of them officers in the volunteer service, praying that there be no partisan action in reference to the case of Fitz-John Por-I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Chantry, late of the Thirtieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 257) to amend the act incorporating the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company, reported it with an amendment. He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1381) to amend the act giving approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 387) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1493) to regulate the use and prevent the waste of Potomac water in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia,

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of tramps in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879.

I will state in one moment the substance of the report, which is in the hands of the Secretary. Section 2 of the bill which was sent from the Senate to the House of Representatives provided that the schedule of returns to be made by the enumerators should omit statistics as to naturalization and also as to the ownership of the public debt. The House disagreed to that section of the bill entirely, but the debt. The House disagreed to that section of the bill entirely, but the committee of conference have recommended that the House recede from its disagreement and that an amendment be made to the section providing that the statistics of the ownership of the debt shall be gathered by special agents and experts rather than by the enumerators.

Section 6 of the bill as it passed the Senate provided that means should be adopted for the correction of the returns of the enumerators by posting up the lists in certain public places in each district and giving notice to the population, and that the enumerator should be present for the purpose of hearing complaints either as to omissions or other errors. It also provided that a copy of the returns should be made in order that they might be sent to the secretary of state of the respective States. The House refused to concur in that section of the bill. The committee of conference recommend that there be a recession by the House from the disagreement to so much of the section as requires copies to be made and to be sent to the secretary of state of the State, but they concur in an amendment which omits all that provision, leaving the methods for the correction of the returns to stand as it was in the Senate bill.

This amendment necessitates a change in the amount of appropri-Section 6 of the bill as it passed the Senate provided that means reduced from $350,000 to $125,000.

The House provided by an additional section to the bill for taking the census in Alaska, and in this amendment the committee of conference recommend that the Senate concur.

Those are the only provisions embraced in the disagreeing votes of the two Houses

Mr. PLUMB. Before any action is taken on the report, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio to state what is the effect of the conference report upon that provision of the bill as it passed the Senate which provided for making copies for the use of the several

Mr. PENDLETON. It provides that no copies shall be made. The reasons why the committee of conference came to that conclusion were two or three; first, that the making of copies is a very expensive operation, very much more so than Senators would for a moment susoperation, very much more so than Senators would for a moment suspect. Next, the Superintendent of the Census, upon conference with him, thought, and the committee thought very truly, that he could furnish the statistics from this point at an earlier date and in more correct form than they could be furnished by the enumerators through the supervisors of the respective States. Another reason which was very potent was that two votes by yeas and nays had been taken on that provision in the House and it had been rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought not to be stated.

Mr. PLUMB. The reason in reference—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio to let it lie aside for an hour or two. I shall not object to its being taken up at any time, but I should like to look at it.

Mr. PENDLETON. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can finish it to-day, undoubtedly; and the Senator from Kansas can look at it, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish the report read now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not at this moment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1614) to regulate the promotion and fix the rank of line officers in the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1615) granting a pension to Henry Schreder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1616) for the relief of Henry B. Brown; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1617) for the relief of Jules Baratier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1618) to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1619) to reimburse the colored depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

AMENDMENTS TO THE POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PLUMB, and Mr CAMERON of Wisconsin, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia. I do not think it will take long.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER The Senator will pardon me one moment. I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of early action upon this matter. [A pause.] Upon the representation of Senators near me that the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] desires to submit some remarks upon the Geneva award bill, I shall not press this matter further than to say that I trust at the very earliest possible moment the Senate will take up and consider this important question. important question.

Mr. McDONALD. I have risen for the purpose of requesting the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the Geneva award bill as informally before the Senate, to enable me to submit some remarks upon it, as I am compelled to leave the city to-night to go home.

Mr. MAXEY. I shall not object to the Senator from Indiana speaking under the circumstances, and I know what they are, but I beg to say that a bill has been up in the morning hour twice heretofore, which has been postponed for the accommodation of Senators who had special cases, and I shall ask after to-day that the bill (S. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDowald has the floor.

moneys of the Geneva award, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] has the floor.

Mr. McDonald]. Mr. President, the treaty of Washington was signed on the 8th day of May, 1871. The treaty provided for the settlement of all the pending controversies at that time between the United States and Great Britain, and among other things formulated certain rules of international law known as "the three rules," and confided the settlement of what were commonly called the Alabama claims to a tribunal of arbitration composed of five members, one representing the Kingdom of Great Britain, one representing the representing the Kingdom of Great Britain, one representing the United States of America, and the other three appointed by certain other great powers. This tribunal assembled at Geneva on the 15th day of December, 1871, and continued in session until its final award was made on the 14th day of September, 1872. This award was signed by four of the five members, the member of the board of arbitration representing Great Britain having declined to sign it.

As covering what were known as the Alabama claims, the arbitrators awarded a sum in gross amounting to $15,500,000 in gold. This sum was paid by Great Britain to the United States in full, according to the stipulations of the treaty. On the 23d day of June, 1874, Congress passed an act to provide for the distribution of this fund to those having the first equities, as then regarded and understood. This act provided for the full extent of their losses, and it provided that such payments should be made in full of their claims. Any part of the sum remaining after the act had been executed was for further distribution.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the language of the act of 1874. First, in regard to those claims whose payment was provided for in the act, in section 14 will be found the fol-

That if the sum of all the judgments rendered by the said court, together with interest, shall exceed the amount received into the Treasury of the United States as proceeds of the sum to be paid by Great Britain. by virtue of the said decision and award, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute, in ratable proportions, among the parties in whose favor judgments shall have been rendered, or to their legal representatives, such moneys as have been received into the Treasury, according to the proportions which their respective judgments shall bear to the whole amount received into the Treasury as aforesaid, which payments shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of such claims and judgments.

And as to the residue of the fund, if any, it is provided in the fifteenth section, as follows:

And after the payment of the said judgments, and the re-imbursement of the expenses as herein provided, if there shall remain any part of the said money, the same shall be and remain a fund from which Congress may hereafter authorize the payment of other claims thereon.

"Shall be and remain a fund from which Congress may hereafter authorize the payment of other claims thereon." The court of commissioners of Alabama claims, consisting of five members, organized July 22, 1874, and continued to sit, under extensions from time to time as authorized by Congress, until the 1st of January, 1877. The court passed upon two thousand and sixty-eight claims, and awarded judgments amounting to $9,316,120.25. The balance of the fund, with the accumulated interest, amounting to about $10,000,000, remains for distribution.

Two propositions are now before the Senate, the one embraced in Two propositions are now before the Senate, the one embraced in the report of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary repealing so much of the act of 1874 as required insurance companies to account for profits on war risks; the other providing for the distribution of the balance of the fund in the payment of other claims as set forth in the substitute moved by myself, and in various amendments that have been offered thereto. Which of these propositions is right? What is the nature and the character of the fund we are ments that have been offered thereto. Which of these propositions is right? What is the nature and the character of the fund we are called upon to distribute? Those who contend for the bill reported by the majority of the committee insist that it is a legal fund which has come into the possession of the United States as a trustee, and that it belongs to certain specified parties, their representatives and privies. The provisions of the bill are inconsistent with the theory of its supporters, which is that the whole amount recovered on account of vessels and properties destroyed by the inculpated cruisers, as they are called, has been collected by the United States as agents for the parties representing those losses.

The three inculpated cruisers, namely, the Florida, the Alabama, and the Shenandoah after she left Melbourne, destroyed one hundred and thirty-five vessels. The bill, if the theory of its supporters is correct, should simply provide for the ascertainment of how much the United States have received for each of those vessels and the property on board, and pay over that amount. If the United States Government is a trustee, she has no right to contend with her cestuic que trusts that the damages suffered are not so great as the amount recovered. On the other hand, I contend that the fund is a national indemnity collected by the United States as a nation from Great Britain a vertical the states as a nation from Great Britain and the property of the contend with her cestuic que trusts.

covered. On the other hand, I contend that the fund is a national indemnity collected by the United States as a nation from Great Britain as a nation. In this respect the settlement differs from the settlement proposed in the Stanley-Johnson negotiation and in the Clarendon-Johnson treaty rejected by the Senate, which proposed no more than to secure indemnity to citizens. That I may be seen to be correct on that point, let me quote from the papers known as the Geneva Award Papers, on that subject, volume 3, page 193. In speaking of the difference between the Clarendon-Johnson treaty and the treaty at Washington, attention is called to this fact:

As the first result of these negotiations a convention known as the StanleyJohnson convention was signed at London on the 10th of November, 1868. It proved to be unacceptable to the Government of the United States. Negotiations were at once resumed, and resulted, on the 14th of January, 1869, in the treaty known as the Johnson-Clarendon convention.

This latter convention provided for the organization of a mixed commission, with jurisdiction over "all claims on the part of citizens of the United States upon the government of her Britannic Majesty, including the so-called Alabama claims, and all claims on the part of subjects of Her Britannic Majesty upon the Government of the United States which may have been presented to either government for its interposition with the other since the 26th of July, 1853, and which yet remain unsettled."

So that it will be seen that the Johnson-Clarendon treaty, which the Senate was not willing to ratify, did treat these cases as claims of individuals, and treated them in that light only. It did not provide or undertake to provide for the settlement of great international questions or the formulation of great international principles of law; it did not undertake to cover the ground that was covered by the treaty of Washington which succeeded it.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have started out with the assumption that this settlement, differing as it did from the Clarendon-Johnson treaty, was a settlement between nations in regard to not merely loss and damage that might have been sustained but in respect to great questions of international law that might connect themselves with these injuries; and hence it became a national claim on the part of the United States against Great Britain as a nation.

The treaty of Washington gave the Geneva tribunal no jurisdiction over the claims of citizens as private citizens. That is very clearly shown from the first article of the treaty itself, to which I shall ask the attention of the Senate. The introduction to the articles referring to the Geneva tribunal is:

Whereas a treaty, between the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, concerning the settlement of all causes of difference between the two countries, was concluded and signed at Washington by the high commissioners and plenipotentiaries of the respective governments on the 8th day of May last; which treaty is, word for word, as follows:

as follows:

"A treaty concerning the settlement of all causes of difference.
"A treaty concerning the settlement of all causes of difference. Not the claims of citizens, as was mentioned in the Johnson-Clarendon treaty, or providing for jurisdiction of those claims, but a treaty that covered "all causes of difference" between the United States and the Kingdom of Great Britain; and the first article declares that:

Whereas differences have arisen between the Government of the United States and the government of Her Britannic Majesty, and still exist, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the "Alabama claims."

Providing for the submission of those claims. These differences arose between the two countries, these two sovereignties. Complaint was made by the United States against the government of Great Britain, not of any acts of commission, but of acts of omission; not because she had depredated upon the property of our citizens directly herself, but that she had so conducted herself with respect to her assumed position of neutrality that she had permitted these injuries

I said that the treaty of Washington gave to the tribunal of Geneva no jurisdiction of claims of citizens, as private citizens. That this was the understanding of both countries is quite clear from what has been said at various times by the representatives of those countries.

And first as to the view which the government of Great Britain took of that question. After the Geneva tribunal had made its award declaring that $15,500,000 in gold should be paid to the United States, persons in England thought it was necessary and proper to inquire of the prime minister, the representative of the British government upon all questions of this kind, why if Great Britain had provided for the payment of citizens of the United States for injuries that had accrued on account of these or any vessels that had been sailing under the flag of the Confederate States, she should not also provide for indemnifying her own citizens, why they should be the only sufferers. In response to that inquiry Mr. Gladstone in Parliament made use of this language:

It appears to be implied that the government submitted the claims of certain persons, not subjects of Her Majesty, to arbitration. This is altogether a mistake. No claims of individuals have been submitted to arbitration in relation to the Alabama. What was submitted to arbitration was entirely a question between the two governments.

But that does not rest upon the declaration of the prime minister of Great Britain merely, for it is to be found in the instructions under which the distinguished attorneys selected to represent the United States before the board of arbitrators were acting. In a letter dated "Department of State, Washington, December 8, 1871," the then Secretary of State, Mr. Fish, gave these instructions to the Hon. Caleb Cushing, William M. Evarts, and R. M. Waite:

GENTLEMEN: * * * In the discussion of this question, and in the treatment of the entire case, you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded, or what may be recovered in the event of the appointment of the board of assessors mentioned in the tenth article of the treaty.

It was not incumbent on this board of arbitrators to make any award after having settled the true meaning and construction to be given to the three rules propounded to them. They were not required to make an award of any amount. If they stopped at the point of simple construction and went no further, then the tenth article of the treaty provided for a different kind of board to assess the special and particular damages that might result, and therefore this letter covers both points.

It is possible that there may be duplicate claims for some of the property alleged to have been captured and destroyed, as in the case of insurers and insured. The Government wishes to hold itself free to decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case. If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government, without committal as to the mode of distribution. It is expected that all such committal be avoided in the argument of counsel.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. CALEB CUSHING, WILLIAM M. EVARTS, and M. R. WAITE

And so both Great Britain and the United States understood that the United States did not stand there as the mere agent and representative of parties claiming to have suffered, but she stood there as a nation claiming that she had been injured by the neglect of duty on the part of a neutral, and that she had a right to demand indem-nity for the past and security for the future.

But it is claimed that because the basis of the damages assessed in this case was the direct destruction of certain property by the three inculpated cruisers, therefore the owners of that property are the only sufferers, that they are entitled to whatever was recovered under this treaty by the decision of the board of arbitrators. It has been said that such was the action of this board of arbitrators that no other claims were taken into consideration. When the board organized and the American case was stated it embraced the following classes

American case as stated by our counsel, volume 1, page 185.
First. The claims for direct losses growing out of the destruction of vessels and their cargoes by insurgent cruisers.
Second. National expenditures in pursuit of those cruisers.
Third. The loss in the transfer of American commercial marine to the British flag.

Fourth. In the enhanced payment of insurance.

Fourth. In the enhanced payment of insurance.

Fifth. The prolongation of the war, and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war, and the suppression of the rebellion.

In glancing over that list I am struck very forcibly with one of the propositions, which is, "the loss in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag," a loss that we have intensified, if it was a damage then, by ever since ostracizing the vessels that made the transfer. We have perpetuated this wrong upon ourselves by from that time forth refusing by our laws to permit those vessels to come again under the American flag without having an American register. If Great Britain could have foreseen the course of our own legislation upon that subject she might very well have said to our own legislation upon that subject she might very well have said to us, "we might claim a set-off there; in place of setting that up as a cause of damage you seem to rather rejoice in the fact that you have got clear of that amount of your commercial marine, because you will not permit it again to return to your flag." But it was one of the causes of complaint and one of the grounds of damage insisted upon at the Geneva convention.

In examining the proceedings of that board we learn that the three last of these causes were held by the board not to be the subject of international claims; that whether they were embraced within the three rules or not; whether they had been submitted under the provisions of the treaty to this board of arbitrators for their determination or not, they did not constitute within themselves any ground of national complaint. The decision of the board on that subject is as follows:

The arbitrators think it right to state that, after the most careful perusal of all that has been urged on the part of the Government of the United States in respect of these claims, they have arrived, individually and collectively, at the conclusion that these claims do not constitute, upon the principles of international law applicable to such cases, good foundation for an award of compensation or computation of damages between nations, and should, upon such principles, be wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal in making its award, even if there were no disagreement between the two governments as to the competency of the tribunal to decide thereon.

The United States had urged them, Great Britain had objected to them, and they therefore stood in direct antagonism upon these propositions. But so far as the action of the board of arbitrators was conreceived, the question was disposed of by simply saying that these three propositions could not be considered because they were not within the principles of international law; not that the damage had not been suffered; not that persons had not been injured; but that they did not come within the principles that entitle one nation to hold another responsible for such losses.

The second wavenessitions of damage that is for the retired expenditure of the principles and the principles are that is for the retired expenditure of the principles are that is for the retired expenditure of the principles are that is for the retired expenditure.

The second proposition of damage, that is, for the national expendi-The second proposition of damage, that is, for the national expenditure in the pursuit of the rebel cruisers, was also held not to be a subject of consideration by this board, for the reason that they said it was a part of the general expenses of the war that could not be separated from them, and could not therefore be presented in an item or considered in an item as any ground of national grievance by itself.

Having disposed of all, so far as the board were concerned, except the first class—that is, for direct damage and losses sustained by the destruction of vessels and property by the rebel cruisers—the board then examined the question that was specifically submitted to them; for in the statement and argument of this question I want to present it clearly and as it presents itself to me; and in that they de-termined, finally and effectually, that there were but three vessels that the conduct of Great Britain had been such with reference to as made her responsible under the terms of the three rules, and their tenders were said, of course, to belong to them. They took no particular distinction, and, of course, the tenders were included. But these three vessels and their tenders, as my friend from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] suggests, were those for whose acts Great Britain was held responsible, and one of these only from the time she had been supplied and aided and assisted at Melbourne.

But, Mr. President, while that was the conclusion arrived at by the board, it is equally clear and conclusive that when they came to form their estimate of damages they did not undertake to separate or to ascertain with anything like exactness (nor was it their purpose to do so) the amount of loss or destruction that had been caused by these three vessels to the one hundred and thirty-five vessels destroyed by the street of the second street of t by them. That it was referred to as constituting an element of damage, and a very large one, there can be no doubt whatever. It was undoubtedly necessary under this treaty for the board of arbitrators to find that Great Britain had in some respects in regard to some of these vessels so conducted herself as to make her liable to the United these vessels so conducted herself as to make her liable to the United States for a breach of her neutrality, not by acts of commission but by such acts of omission and negligence as would, in the judgment of this august board, bring her within the terms of that treaty.

It is also true, that having arrived at the fact that there were three vessels with their tenders that had been so aided and assisted by the people of Great Britain, with such knowledge and consent at least of the authorities as to make that government responsible for negligence, the lowest measure of damage that this board were authorized to assess in a case of that kind would be the value of the property thus destroyed. That would have been its lowest measure, but they were not limited to that. The principle that governed that tribunal as not limited to that. The principle that governed that tribunal as well as all others was that when you come to deal with a tort-feasor you are bound to assess the actual damage that he has caused; but then you are not limited to that actual damage and can go further; you can take into consideration the circumstances and all other facts that connected themselves with this wrong, and add to the ass ment on account of them.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Indiana yield ?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Did the Senator ever hear or see of a case of Mr. THURMAN. Did the Senator ever hear or see of a case of punitive or vindictive damages imposed upon a man whose whole fault was omission of duty or negligence? Is there any case in the books of international law or common law in which a man has been made to suffer punitive damages in a case of mere negligence? Mr. McDONALD. Gross negligence? Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to see it.

Mr. McDONALD. When you have established the fact that the party complained of is a wrong-doer, whenever he is presented in that attitude punitive damages may be awarded.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to make one suggestion in answer to the Senator from Ohio's question? Persons are indictable and convictable of manslaughter for mere negligence—are indictable and convictable of manslaughter for mere negligence-not merely held for vindictive damages, but as criminals.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to ask is not that by express statute always?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; at common law.

Mr. KERNAN. It is by statute in my State.

Mr. HOAR. A person charged with the support of an infant child is obliged to protect it, and if by his negligence it loses its life he is punishable for manslaughter, and so a common carrier dealing with passengers. And this without regard to the statute.

Mr. KERNAN. In my State we had to pass a law that a railroad engineer or conductor who by negligence kills a person shall be liable for manslaughter.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana has but a few moments, and I think that these interruptions will not enable him to get through.

Mr. HOAR. That is certainly a question in the discretion of the centleman who interrupts, and not in the discretion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Indiana stated to me a moment ago that he could not get through in the time limited if he were interrupted. The Senator from Massachusetts is very touchy whenever I speak upon anything.

Mr. McDONALD. My answer to all these questions is a very simple one. I repeat the proposition, for I desire to have it considered, that whenever you have established the fact that the party complained of is a tort-feasor, a wrong-doer, then the question of damages is governed by the circumstances of the case with all its surroundings, and it was necessary before we could recover one cent from Her Britannic Majesty to establish that her government was a wrong-doer; and I say further, that in a case of that kind the rule is well settled that the least measure of damages is the actual loss or injury, and that it may be enhanced according to the circumstances as the judgment and discretion of the tribunal trying the case shall award.

But, Mr. President, I wish to state another proposition in this connection. Although these arbitrators found under the provisions of the treaty that this infringement of the rights of a neutral by Great Britain, or rather this violation of her own neutral obligations more properly speaking, could only attach to three of the vessels and their tenders, and although they had before them the estimate of the damage done to the one hundred and thirty-five vessels and the value of their cargoes as fixed by the United States, and also had before them their cargoes as fixed by the United States, and also had before them the estimate put upon the same property by the Board of Trade of Great Britain, to which it was referred by the representative of Great Britain before the tribunal for the purpose of aiding his judgment on the subject; and these two statements differed as widely as the poles. The amount named by the American representatives, with the addition that they finally made to it, ran up to nearly $19,000,000, while the estimate fixed upon the same losses of property through the medium of the Board of Trade of Great Britain and present hy through the medium of the Board of Trade of Great Britain and present hy the dium of the Board of Trade of Great Britain and presented by the agent of that government before the commission was a little over $7,000,000. When they had got through with considering all these questions, it appears from their report, but it does not appear in anything that occurred in the proceedings of the commission, that the amount they arrived at did not embrace and was not intended to embrace the exact value of the property thus destroyed or anything of the kind.

Now, Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate to the construction which has already been given to that very question by the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, in the consideration of the cases submitted to them. I have here their report to the Secretary of State, embracing their opinions and decisions on the various cases submitted. In the case of Charles Pratt Williams vs. The United States, No. 45, in the opinion rendered by Judge Porter, the following language occurs:

How the amount of the award obtained at Geneva was made up, what precise species of losses it was intended to cover, or even how the interest was computed, is not now known, and a careful study of the opinions of the several arbitrators has shown us that it was not intended to be known outside of the tribunal itself. The Government of the United States accepted the sum awarded in full settlement of all the claims comprehended in the terms of the treaty, and soon afterward Congress passed the act providing for its distribution among the claimants, which is to be our chief guide in the actual work of distribution. It is clear to us that the Government had the right to prescribe the terms on which claimants should present their claims. They were not strong enough to compel the payment of the money by Great Britain, and when this Government obtained it the claimants had no power to demand it, and no legal right to it, except that which the Government by its own acts chose to accord. They must, therefore, take their respective shares of it subject to all the conditions which the Government has thought fit to appoint, or not take them at all.

I have read this more especially for the purpose of showing that the judges constituting the commissioners of Alabama claims, whose duty it was to examine all these questions with care, have deliberately stated that there was nothing to determine how this award was made up as to the specific data or the particulars of any one claim, and the same declaration is repeated by this court, in other cases, in almost the same language, as it was their governing rule. In fact it was the act of 1874; it was the first declaration of Congress in regard to the character of this fund when it assumed to dispose of it, and has been the action of this Government down to the present time.

Mr. Davis, the American representative, in his report of the proceedings of the arbitration to the Secretary of State, declares in express terms that there were no special or specific damages assessed, and none intended to be, and that the arbitrators had given, as it had been the purpose of the American agent and attorneys to obtain, if possible, a gross sum to the United States. I read from the report of the agent of the United States, Mr. Davis, to the State Department, of the proceedings before the board and the conclusions finally reached in reference to this assessment of damages.

The neutral arbitrators and Mr. Adams, from the beginning of the proceedings, were convinced of the policy of awarding a sum in gross. For some weeks before the decision was given, I felt sure that the arbitrators would not consent to send the case to assessors until they should have exhausted all efforts to agree themselves upon the sum to be paid. We therefore devoted our energies toward securing such a sum as should be practically an indemnity to the sufferers. Whether we have or have not been successful can be determined only by the final division of the sum of the sum

So that when the arbitrators had arrived at the conclusion to make an award in gross, the representatives of our Government directed their energies and aimed their purposes at obtaining such a sum as would indemnify the sufferers, and when that award came to be made it was made under the terms and conditions of the treaty which required that whatever was given, whatever sum should be arrived at by this board of arbitrators, was to be a sum in full. Accordingly, we find that they made their report upon this point in this language:

The tribunal, making use of the authority conferred upon it by Article VII of the said treaty, by a majority of four voices to one, awards to the United States a sum of $15,500,000 in gold, as the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States, for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal, conformably to the provisions contained in Article VII of the aforesaid

Not in full consideration of the destruction of one hundred and thirty-five vessels destroyed by the three inculpated cruisers, as they are called, and their tenders, but it was to be in full satisfaction "of all the claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal, conformably to the provisions contained in Article VII of the aforesaid treaty." And then, to make it still more specific, they further declare:

And, in accordance with the terms of Article XI of the said treaty, the tribunal declares that "all the claims referred to in the treaty as submitted to the tribunal are hereby fully, perfectly, and finally settled."

"All the claims," " all causes of difference" that could in any manner grow out of war as against Great Britain, termed the Alabama claims-that is, the loss and destruction arising from the presence of rebel cruisers upon the high seas-were settled. Furthermore it was declared by the tribunal:

Furthermore it declares that "each and every one of the said claims, whether the same may or may not have been presented to the notice of, or made, preferred, or laid before the tribunal, shall henceforth be considered and treated as finally settled, barred, and inadmissible."

That sum of $15,500,000 was paid over. In receiving it we gave to Great Britain a final receipt and acquittance, not merely for the particular claims that arose in regard to the three inculpated cruisers, but for all claims for all damages. We had undertaken to stand there, not as the agent of private parties who had suffered losses, but as representing this nation to make a final and complete settlement of this question, and we received this money and signed away all right, title, and claim, if any one had any, of every American citizen that had received injury on the high seas by reason of the presence of rebel cruisers in the war.

The purpose of the United States in negotiating the treaty of Washington was twofold: First, it was to establish the true intent and meaning of the three rules; for the high character of the tribunal, the representative character of that tribunal as representing the civilized nations, made it fit and proper for such a purpose as that. But it had a second purpose, and that was to secure indemnity to the sufferers; and therefore whatever might have been the basis of the estimate of damage the Government reserved the final right to determine as between herself and her own citizens who had suffered, as the rights of all were surrendered.

I do not think that the proposition can be gainsaid that when we agreed to accept this $15,500,000 as a complete indemnity and satisfaction, so far as money could give it, and took it into our hands, we took it reserving to ourselves the right to determine who these sufferers were and to provide for them—the final right to determine all that; and therefore the most potent question before us now is, Who were these sufferers?

I am free to admit that standing in the front door of equity as en-titled to first consideration were the owners of the one hundred and thirty-five vessels and their cargoes, who had the legal right to claim to be sufferers. But I insist that the act of 1874 provided for them. All that any just demand could require from this Government was there embraced. The owner, if it was a total loss to him, got the value, not as to what we had secured from England, not as a portion of this $15,500,000 that was supposed to be represented by his vessel, but what he could prove before this court that his vessel was worth. That is what we gave him. We did not say to him, "We have collected $150,000 for your vessel; here it is;" but we said to him, "We have a fund in our hands, paid over to us as a national indemnity for our demands upon Great Britain by the award of this high tribunal, and now prove in this new court that we have organized how much your vessel was worth, and we will pay it—that is, we will pay you to the extent of your loss; if you have received money from other sources in the form of in. extent of your loss; if you have received money from other sources in the form of insurance, &c., deduct that from the loss and we will make you whole." That is what we said to him, and we said to the insurer, "If in this business of war risks, although you were engaged in it as a legitimate business, or at least you called it so, you have suffered on the whole face of your business in that connection, to the extent of that suffering we will pay you."

That is what the act of 1874 said, and if these two sums should be in excess of the amount we had thus collected we said we would divide it ratably between these classes according to their respective interests and shares in it, and they were to receive that in full satisfaction of their claims or demands, whatever they might be; and then we said in that same act—and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to it again:

And after the payment of the said judgments, and the reimbursement of the expenses as herein provided, if there shall remain any part of the said money, the same shall be and remain a fund from which Congress may hereafter authorize the payment of other claims thereon.

"Other claims thereon." Under that law over $9,000,000 in judgments were rendered up against the fund and paid, and the remainder of the fund now is here for distribution among the other sufferers, and the very first thing that we are asked to do is to repeal the provision by which we undertook to equalize the loss and damage of those who were engaged in the business of insuring war risks, and to give them the full measure of the amount that they paid upon the particular loss, without any regard whatever to the profits that they may have made upon the one hundred vessels they took that went safe. The theory is that they are the sufferers! Why Mr. President, what is war insurance?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Indiana may be allowed to proceed, and that the hour of three o'clock may be postponed accordingly.

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to add that. Let the Senator from Indiana proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. If he occupies half an hour, it will be half past three o'clock when we commence voting on the Indian bill instead of Mr. HOAR. The same length of time?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; the same length of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Indiana be allowed to proceed, and that by as much time as he shall occupy the time for taking the vote on the Ute Indian bill shall be postponed. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. Would the passage of the bill reported by the majority of the committee, and now before the Senate, affect in any way the principle of distribution adopted by the act of 1874?

Mr. McDONALD. Undoubtedly. It would change the whole spirit and principle of that act. The overative section of the bill reported.

and principle of that act. The operative section of the bill reported by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary is as follows:

SEC. 4. That so much of the twelfth section of the said act-

That is the act I have before meas provides that "no claim shall be admissible or allowed by said court by or in behalf of any insurance company or insurer, either in its or his own right or as assignee, or otherwise, in the right of a person or party insured, as aforesaid, unless such claimant shall show to the satisfaction of said court that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses in respect to its or his war risks exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war risks; and in case of any such allowance, the same shall not be greater than such excess of loss," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

That any claimant excluded by the provision hereby repealed shall have the like period of time within which to present, file, and prove its or his claim after the passage of this act as he could have had after the passage of the first class.

Right here let me remark that the very point that the Senator from Right here let me remark that the very point that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] has privately called my attention to is provided for in the substitute; that is, carrying forward by supplemental legislation the principles of the act of 1874. It provides:

That the first class shall be for claims not already adjudicated upon their merits, resulting from damage to property done on the high seas by confederate cruisers during the late rebellion, &c.

That allows them to come in yet on the same terms they could come in in 1874 if they had preferred their claims. This allows all persons, whether included or not, whose claims have not been adjudicated, to stand just as they would have stood if they had preferred their claims, except that they are to take under the provisions and principles of the act of 1874.

Now, let us look for a moment at the equities of the class of claimants who ask for this sweeping repeal of the act of 1874 and full indemnity. In the first place those who did not acquire authority from the Legislatures that had given them their corporate existence to engage in war risks were exercising power ultra vires. The ordinary power to engage in marine insurance in ordinary classes of risks does not embrace war risks, and every company that was engaged in this business that did not have authority in its charter covering that class of risks, or did not obtain authority from the Legislature that had created it, was engaged in this business ultra vires without au-

What was the business? It was the insurance of ships and cargoes against the presence and the dangers caused by the presence of rebel against the presence and the dangers caused by the presence of rebel cruisers on the high seas. It was special in its character. It was a business that the war created, without which it could not exist. It was a business which the close of the war terminated, and, therefore, they had a right to complain of the close of the war, because it destroyed their business. We complained of Great Britain because she had prolonged the war. The insurance companies certainly never joined in that complaint. They were not parties to that, because they had no grievance to complain of on that account.

What further? They watched the course of these cruisers over the ocean; they had the charts of the ocean; and every means of communication or information that could be possibly brought into service in their behalf was utilized by them, and they directed their course from day to day, and raised their premiums according to the increase in the risk, until their war premiums ran up in some instances

They engaged in it for gain—not for risk, but for gain. And when we got this money in our hands we proposed to pay them their losses. But they are not satisfied with that. They say: Add to our profits out of this fund. The reason that so few claims of insurers were presented before the Alabama claims commission is, perhaps, owing to the fact that there were but very few who could present any such claims under the act of 1874. I have here a letter from a member of one of these companies, informing me that his company out of war risks made a profit of over $300,000, with a loss of $100,000.

Now, Mr. President, in reference to this class of traffickers who were engaged in this business, it is claimed that the United States made her complaints against Great Britain during the war and after the close of the war on account of these depredations, and that we finally brought her to book by the treaty of Washington almost under a threat of war, and that we were doing it as the agents of these insurance companies to pile up their profits, whose only complaint was that the war ended too soon. And this is called an equitable claim because the right of subrogation is said to be an equitable right, and it is sought to be ingrafted upon the doctrine of subrogation. I say it is a legal right, brought into our system, however, from the rules of the civil law, and has therefore been exercised through our courts of equity rather than our courts of law; but it ought to assimilate when it comes into a court of equity to the principles of equity, whatever may have been its origin, and especially when it comes to us the representatives of this country, the representatives of this nation, and asks us out of this fund thus obtained, in which these principles of international law have been established and all claims surrendered and given up, to enforce what is called a legal right upon a purely equitable fund which we have in our possession and which it is our bounden duty to administer and distribute upon the principles of high equity, and that is the only obligation resting upon us. The fund legally belongs to the United States. She was not standing before the Geneva tribunal as the agent of any one except the people of the United States whom she represented. It came into her possession legally as a fund belonging to her, impressed with principles of equity, however, in behalf of certain parties who had suffered, and in 1874 we provided for those who had the first equity.

It would have been wrong not to do that. We did provide for them, and we said to them: "We have made this provision; we have them, and we said to them: "We have made this provision; we have in doing this followed out the principle that guided and governed our representative before the Geneva tribunal, not to commit us as to the distribution of the fund; we do this because we have surrendered all claim against Great Britain on account of the war, and her failure to comply with her obligations in it, and admitted this to be a full satisfaction of them, and now we propose simply to make an equitable distribution of it among the sufferers."

Who were the sufferers then? Certainly not the insurance companies, unless they suffered because their business was stopped by the close of the war. We put in a claim for damages in the statement of close of the war. We put in a claim for damages in the statement of the American case because England had prolonged the war. Did that represent the interests of the insurance companies? Had they any principle involved in that settlement that could be affected by such a claim as that? Surely not.

Then I ask again, who were the sufferers? The men whose property was destroyed on the high seas, who come in after we have made proper compensation to those who stand in the foreground, in the front door of equity, to receive what we think it proper they should receive. Take for illustration the case of one of these vessels, the Shenandoah, built and fitted out with everything except her armament in the ports of Great Britain and in her dock-yards, armed by a tender that went to sea for the purpose of carrying the armament to her and the men, but she did not enter any other British port or receive any other aid until she reached Melbourne. On her course there she destroyed seven vessels. She entered the port of Melbourne, there received additional aid, and recruited additional forces and started out. The arbitrators said that from that time Great Britain was liable for her acts; that is, that the conduct of her authorities at that point connected her with the destiny of the Shenandoah, and made her liable to us as having committed the breach of faith that the tribunal had to find against her in order that we might get any damages at all.

Now, will you say that the seven owners of the seven vessels who were killed—yes, "killed," that is the proper term for them, for there was no taking these vessels into harbors there to be treated before was no taking these vessels into harbors there to be treated before prize courts or in any other way; the necessity that forced their capture forced their destruction—will you say that the seven men who owned those seven vessels, if they were owned by seven different men, are no sufferers by reason of this matter brought to the attention and embraced in and settled by the award made at Geneva, and have we not surrendered their claims? Did we not by giving a receipt for this $15,500,000 in gold give a full receipt for the destruction of these seven vessels, and so of any others that were destroyed by any other of the cruisers anywhere in the war? We receipted for all. When we reserved the express power to determine here upon the distribution of the fund, have we no right to consider these things and provide

Again, have not the men suffered who paid war premiums for the purpose of protecting their property as far as possible? The Geneva tribunal said that their losses were not within the principles of international law, and that, therefore, they could not take them into special account; but when we received this money we receipted and gave a full and complete acquittance for these losses. Oh, it is said, if they paid war premiums they enhanced the price of their goods; they were enabled to put on an additional price on that account. Let us see how that works. I have a table here that shows the practical working of that argument, compiled from the files of the New York Shipping and Commercial List, embracing the rates of freights from the rates 1861 down to 1865 the rates. year 1861 down to 1865, the rates on American vessels and on the year 1861 down to 1865, the rates on American vessels and on foreign vessels, and you will see that right away, as soon as it became more dangerous to ship on American vessels than on foreign vessels, the freights on American vessels went down and the freights on foreign vessels went up. That is, the man who had goods in London or Liverpool and wished to ship them to this country, finding two vessels, one under a flag that would be respected by the rebel cruisers, another under the American flag that would be subject to capture, preferred shipping on the safe vessel, and the man who had the safe vessel knew perfectly well his advantage and added to the price. Let me present the table:

Discriminating rates of freight in favor of foreign vessels during years 1861 to 1865, inclusive, compiled from the files of the New York Shipping and Commercial List.

April 27.—English bottoms have a decided preference on account of the war clause in their insurance policies. Letter from Captain Remington, of bark Mustang, at Havana, states that Spanish merchants were alraid to ship by American vessels, owing to existing difficulties, and were giving French and English the preference. May 25.—Corn to London: American vessels, 9d.; foreign vessels, 10d.
May 29.—Foreign vessels command the highest rates, most of the orders received here from England being restricted to foreign bottoms. The discrimination in favor, 1d. to 2½d. Wheat to Liverpool: American vessels, 8d.; foreign vessels, 10½d. June 1.—Freight rates lower, but foreign bottoms still have the preference. June 5.—Wheat to Liverpool: American vessels, 7d. to 3½d.; foreign vessels, ₹d. to 9½d. Murdoch & Smythe's circular of this date says: Neutral flags command 15 to 20 per cent. over quotations for American vessels. 9d.; foreign vessels, 11d. August 7.—Corn to Liverpool: American vessels, $\frac{1}{2}\text{d}$, to 9½d.; foreign vessels, 9d. to 9½d.

September 11.—Rye to Antwerp: American vessels, 13½d.; foreign vessels, 14½d. October 26.—Flour to London: American vessels, 3s. 9d.; foreign vessels, 3.1½d. December 4.—Flour to Liverpool: American vessels, 2s. 3d. to 2s. 6d.; foreign vessels, 2s. 9d. to 3s. Wheat to Liverpool: American vessels, 8½d. to 9½d.; foreign vessels, 10d. 1862.

January 1.—Flour to Liverpool: American vessels, 2s. 6d.; foreign vessels, 3s. 3d. February 1.—Flour to London: American vessels, 2s. 9d. to 3s.; foreign vessels, 32. 43d. March 1.—Flour to Liverpool: American vessels, 2s. to 2s. 13d.; foreign vessels, 2s. 3d. Corn to Liverpool: American vessels, 62d.; foreign vessels, 3d. April 2.—Flour to London: American vessels, 1s. 103d.; foreign vessels, 2s. May 3.—Flour to Liverpool: American vessels, 2s. 3d. to 2s. 43d.; foreign vessels, 2s. 5d.

October 18.—Vessels under foreign flags command higher rates, in consequence of the reported seizure and destruction of American vessels by the rebel steamer "290." October 25.—Shipments making almost entire in foreign bottoms, American vessels being in disfavor.
October 29.—Shipments to Liverpool and London by American vessels small, and makes for grain lower, but by foreign bottoms there is a fair business at full previous rates. Wheat to London: American vessels, 10d. to 10½d.; foreign vessels, ous rates. Wheat to London: American vessels, 2s. 44d. to 2s. 6d.; foreign vessels 104d. November 15.—Flour to London: American vessels, 2s. 44d. to 2s. 6d.; foreign vessels, 104d.

Sels, 3s. to 3s. 6d.

December 10.—Wheat to London: American vessels, 9d.; foreign vessels, Flour to London: American vessels, 2s. 4†d.; foreign vessels, 3s. to 3s. 1‡d.

1863. January 3.—Flour to Liverpool: American vessels, 1s. 9d. to 1s. 101d.; foreign January 3.—Flour to Liverpool: American vessels, 1s. 9d. to 1s. 104d.; foreign vessels, 2s. February 4.—Flour to Liverpool: American vessels, 1s. 104d. to 2s.; fereign vessels, 2s. 9d. Bacon and lard to Liverpool: American vessels, 20s.; foreign vessels, 2s. 6d. to 30s.

1865.

January 7.—Neutral flags continue to monopolize the bulk of the business to-foreign ports, and the fact that two more rebel pirates, the Shenandoah and Olus-tee, are depredating upon our commerce is not likely to help matters. Logwood to Liverpool: American vessels, 2s. 6d.; foreign vessels, 10s. February 4.—Bacon to Liverpool: American vessels, 10s.; foreign vessels, 15s. March 29.—Provisions to Liverpool: American vessels, 2s.; foreign vessels, 5s.

EXPLANATIONS.

The rate on flour is by English shillings per barrel.
The rate on grain is by English pence per bushel.
The rate on provisions and tallow is by English shillings per ton.

Mr. President, this is a very instructive table, and it shows just exactly under what disadvantages American vessels had to labor and struggle for any kind of business during those times, and it shows struggle for any kind of business during those times, and it shows very clearly why so many of our vessels broke their American registry and registered under the British flag; and we have kept there ever since by way of decreasing our commercial marine.

Mr. President, in looking over the classes of cases that, in my judgment, commend themselves to us, I think the next class of persons who are entitled to consideration at our hands, if we follow what has been marked out by the act of 1874, and make this distribution to other sufferers, are the owners of those vessels and cargoes that were destroyed by what are termed the exculpated cruisers and the Shenandoah, before she reached Melbourne. I have taken some pains to ascertain as near as I could how this list of sufferers stood. I have already said that the inculpated cruisers destroyed one hundred and already said that the inculpated cruisers destroyed one hundred and thirty-five vessels. The exculpated cruisers destroyed about sixty-five, thirty-five vessels. The exculpated cruisers destroyed about sixty-five, about one-half in number, and I embrace in this now the seven destroyed by the Shenandoah before she reached Melbourne, but the value of these sixty-five does not bear the proportion to the value of the one hundred and thirty-five that their number does. On the contrary, the value of the sixty-five destroyed by the exculpated cruisers may be said to be about one-fifth of that of those destroyed by the inculpated cruisers, for you remember that the Shenandoah after she left Melbourne passed up into the Northern Pacific and committed such havoc in our whaling fleets that to this day the whaling interest has not recovered itself.

Following them, as I have already indicated, I think that those men who paid what are termed war risks, requiring them to deduct whatever they have received by way of profit upon those risks, are the next parties in suffering. I do not believe in adding profit to any one, but, if possible, to seek and find out those who have suffered, and provide for them as far as this indemnity fund will enable us to do. When we have accomplished that, if there should remain any more of this fund in the Treasury, I have no hesitation in saying it belongs to the United States. When Great Britain paid it over to us, and received our receipt in full for all claims that we had marshaled against her our receipt in full for all claims that we had marshaled against her to be considered by the Geneva tribunal, she parted with it forever, reserved no legal right, no equitable claim to any part of that fund. If we should not distribute it all among the sufferers here, it is ours, not hers any longer, for she has simply paid a judgment rendered by this high tribunal upon the claims that we preferred against her, and tried her for, and convicted her.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5053) granting relief to William Turman, guardian of William W. Brewer, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

COMMITTEE ON EXCISE REVENUE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the appointment of a joint committee consisting of two members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on cigars and other articles subject to excise

Mr. VOORHEES. There was an unintentional omission that marred the resolution when it left the Senate, and I move that the House amendment be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the amendment of the House of Representatives to the resolution of the Senate be concurred in. The amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was, in line 4, after the word "and," to insert "three members of;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That a joint committee, consisting of two members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and three members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, be appointed by the respective presiding officers, to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on cigars and other articles subject to excise duties, what remedy can be provided by law, and with power to recommend such measures as they may deem proper by bill or attempting.

The amendment was concurred in.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. VEST. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government at Cleveland, Ohio, be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the recommitment of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is recommitted.

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of the Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same

The PRESIDENT protempore. General debate on this bill will close at half past three o'clock, and on all amendments offered after that a five-minute debate is allowable.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the bill, but

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the bill, but to move an amendment on page 6 of the bill as printed. I move to strike out, in lines 105 and 106, the words "or subject to taxation of any character," and, in line 107, to strike out the words "and not subject to taxation." That will simply, if adopted, leave the lands subject to taxation—the question that was raised just before the Senate adjourned on Friday night. If these words are stricken out, of course the lands will be subject to taxation, which I insist they must be, if they are held in severalty in the way designated in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not take much interest in this bill, but it is

Mr. MORRILL. I do not take much interest in this bill, but it is obvious that if the State should have power to tax this land before the parties can reap any benefit from it themselves, it will result in driving the owners of the soil away and the confiscation of their property. It seems to me that the amendment would defeat the whole purpose of the bill. If these Indians are to go there and remain there, they must have some sort of favor until they learn the duties and the rights and privileges of citizenship, and also learn the industrial arts, or at least the agricultural part of them, so far as to enable them to support themselves. If they are to be subject to taxation, of course these lands will soon be forfeited, and they will not own a ord of land in the territory they propose to occupy.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks Congress has any power to exempt this land from taxation after having destroyed the tribal relation and given the Indians the land in sever-

Mr. MORRILL. I have no doubt about the power so far as an Indian reservation is concerned.

Mr. TELLER. This is not to be an Indian reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. of the Senator from Colorado. The question is on the amendment

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays. It is a question of law purely.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me that the Senator from Colorado is acting somewhat in opposition to the interest of the State that he represents in proposing this amendment. If this agreement is not adopted in some shape and the right of occupation by these Indians is not relinquished, there will be twelve million acres of land wholly within the limits of the State of Colorado exempt from taxation by the consent of everybody for an indefinite period of time. By this agreement those twelve million acres are relinquished, and in lieu thereof a portion of these Indians retain a certain small tract of land within the limits of Colorado which it is proposed shall be exempt from taxation for a period of twenty-five years. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] suggests, if local and municipal and State authorities are allowed to tax this land with its concomitant powers of sale for non-payment, it would be but a short time before the Indians would be divested of title and expelled and again become homeless wanderers on the face of the earth, unless there should be a provision incorporated here that the United States Government shall assume to pay to Colorado the taxes which would become due on the land. Assuming that the United States Government has a title to this land, as the State of Colorado has already expressly agreed by accepting the terms of the enabling act that she will not impose any tax upon and belonging to the United States, she is estopped; so that in any way you may view this, whether as a question affecting the interest of the people of Colorado, who obtain a vast tract of land, twelve million acres, upon which they can impose taxes, in exchange for a few scattering tracts that will be exempt for a short period of time, or whether you regard the obligation the State has entered into, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorada out that the headerthal orado ought not to be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt it is greatly to be regretted that the honorable Senator does not represent Colorado. If he did, I have no doubt it would be very much better represented. No doubt, at least, that is the opinion of the Senator from Kansas; in fact, I think he could fill the bill for most of the Senate. But it is a question of law that is presented to the Senate, and I want the opinion of the Senate upon it, whether, when you have destroyed the tribal relation as you propose to do, you can still exempt the lands occupied by Indians individually. If you have not destroyed their tribal relations, I admit that we cannot tax their land; and if these Indians are to be put upon this land, I admit that to tax it will defeat the very purpose in view. That is what I say of the bill which came from the committee of which the honorable Senator from Kansas is a member. I say, having destroyed the tribal relations, we have thrown these people out of the protection of law.

I have called attention to this matter so that the Senate may go to of the states have a right to tax the land. I am only asking to make the bill consistent.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Colorado displays a little unnecessary temper about this subject this morning. I have no desire to represent the State of Colorado, and I am sure that I would not dispute with him as to the question of his ability to do so, but it certainly is a novel theory to advance that because I am not a resident of the State of Colorado I have no right to comment upon the provisions of the bill, especially as the question before the Senate is, as the Senator himself admits, a question of law and not a question of fact. A question of law involving the title of the United States to a certain tract of land is a question that a Senator can discuss, whether he represents Colorado or any other State in the Union.

I do not admit, as the Senator from Colorado assumes, that this agreement breaks up and abrogates the tribal relation of the Ute Indians. When he assumes that this bill does break up and destroy the tribal relation he is assuming what, as one member of the committee, I do not assent to. The whole bill proceeds upon the theory that the tribal relation continues to exist. The agreement is madewith the chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of the Ute-Indians, and that political affiliation is to continue; it is not changed by the fact that these men take their lands in severalty, that allotments are made to them, and that they live in different portions of Colorado and New Mexico and Utah.

As the Senator from Colorado suggests, this is a question of law; and if it is a question of law, a vote of the Senate cannot change it.

The whole Senate might vote unanimously upon one side or the other as to their interpretation of this question of law, and when it comes to be decided by the courts that expression may be entirely disre-garded. Therefore, assuming that the Senator is right in his statement that this is a question of law, his amendment is idle and nugatory, because the Senate can in no event decide a question of law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Col-question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I expressed some doubt about this question of taxation the other day, and I still feel some doubt about it. If the tribal relation of these Indians continues, if they are still to be regarded as a tribe of Indians with that degree of independence or autonomy that we have heretofore accorded to them, under the protection of the United States, and these lands which are to be set apart to them are to be regarded as lands belonging to members of a distinct and independent tribe, (that is, as independent as a tribe of Indians can be,) then I see no serious difficulty, in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court, in exempting these lands from taxation. But if their tribal relation is to be absolutely broken up and they are to become citizens of the United States under the fourteenth amendment, and in all respects subject to the laws of the State, then I do not know where Congress finds the authority to exempt their property from State taxation.

I am assured by the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs that the tribal relation will continue; that that is the purpose of the bill; and that the case is therefore brought distinctly within the decisions of the Supreme Court upon this subject. Under those circumstances, if that be so, it is competent to pass the provision which

Mr. TELLER. Then it ought to be left, if that is so.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, if that is so, the Senator himself says the clause ought to be left. Deferring to the judgment of the gentleman who framed this bill, I can vote against this amendment, although I do not like the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the amendment, and the Secretary will call the roll. The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 5, nays 40; as follows:

VEAS_5. Butler, Jones of Florida, Teller. Kirkwood, Morgan, NAYS-40.

Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Baldwin, Bayard, Blair, Bruce, Burnside, Call, Cameron of Wis., Coke, Davis of Illinois, Farley, Ferry, Garland, Hamlin Hampton,

Harris, Hereford, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Kernan

McMillan, McPherson, Maxey, Morrill, Pendleton, Platt, Pryor, Saunders, Slater, Thurman, Vest, Voorhees, Williams, Windom.

ABSENT-31.

Beck. Blaine, Booth, Cameron of Pa., Conkling, Davis of W. Va., Eaton.

Edmunds. Gordon, Groome, Grover, Hill of Georgia, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kellogg, Lamar, Logan, McDonald, Paddock, Plumb. Randolph, Ransom, Rollins, Saulsbury, Sharon, Vance, Walker, Wallace,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. On page 6 of the bill, commencing after the word "Utes," in line 126, there is a provision—I do not know whether the "Utes," in line 126, there is a provision—I do not know whether the committee will object to my proposition or not—that the agricultural implements, wagons, and so forth, that shall be provided by the Government shall be divided in a certain manner. It seems to me to be unwise to make such a provision at this time and, without knowing where these Indians will settle or how many will settle in one place to say how this property shall be distributed. It seems to me that is a matter that ought to be left under the control of the Government. a matter that ought to be left under the control of the Government. The Government furnishes these goods, and the Government ought to distribute them as they are needed. If the Senator from Kansas will look at the provision he will see that it certainly will not work any injury to the bill to strike it out, and it may work embarrassment to leave it in in dealing with these Indians. Therefore I move to strike out, after the word "Utes," in line 126, down to and including the word "reservation," in line 129, in the following words:

In the following manner: One-third to those who settle on the La Plata River and vicinity, one-half to those settling on Grand River and vicinity, and one-sixth to those settling on the Uintah reservation.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

As the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

That will leave the appropriation still to be made by the Government under the control of the Secretary of the Interior as to its distribution. Then, if the Secretary of the Interior thinks that the Uintah Utes have need of more agricultural implements than the Uncompahgres, he may give them more. As the provision is here, one-third is fixed to those who settle on the La Plata and vicinity, one-half to those settling on Grand River and vicinity, and one-sixth to those settling on the Uintah reservation. It is a matter in which the Indians have very little concern and the Government a great deal.

Mr. INGALLS. To make the amendment harmonious with the rest of the section it should read "the President" instead of "the Secretary of the Interior."

'Mr. TELLER. I have no objection at all to that modification.
Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will see that what he proposes is a modification of the agreement. I think no harm would result from allowing the provision to remain as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. On page 15 I move to strike out section 8. Mr. HAMLIN. Let the section be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the hot springs located in what is known as "The Uncompangre Park," in the Uncompangre Valley, and four square miles of land surrounding said springs and within said valley, are hereby reserved, and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or sale, under the laws of the United States, and dedicated and set apart for the benefit and enjoyment of the people; and, so far as practicable, the provisions of sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes are hereby made applicable to said tract.

Mr. TELLER. I will only say that that is a matter in which the Indians have not the slightest interest in the world, so that Senators who are anxious to please these Indians need not be afraid to strike out this section. It is a matter that probably concerns six or eight settlers who have gone down there and settled on this land, under the circumstances which I detailed to the Senate some days ago, when it was practically understood by everybody to be outside of the It is a simple question whether these settlers there on reservation. It is a simple question whether these settlers their houses, and everything that they have got probably in the world. I suppose the sum total, if it were put up and sold at public auction in the State of Colorado, after six months' notice, would not bring more than state of Colorado, after six months notice, would not bring more than three or four thousand dollars at the most, and that is probably a high figure. These settlers are not people of any great distinction; they are laboring people. I think they are foreigners from the names that I saw on the affidavits. I guess all, or nearly all, of them are foreigners. They are common people and very poor people who are living there. There cannot be any political capital on my part in eigners. They are common to any political capital on my part in living there. There cannot be any political capital on my part in moving to strike out this section, because their votes are insignificant and they always go, I think, for the democratic party. From their names I conclude that they are all democrats. They are certainly all Irishmen, or nearly so, unless their names are misnomers.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the character of these springs?

Mr. INGALLS. What is the character of these springs?
Mr. TELLER. These springs, like a great many others in the vicinity, are small springs that are really of no value. The Government never will make anything by reserving them. They are of no earthly consequence. The effect of the provision will be simply to disturb a few people who are hardy, honest working people and deprive them of their homes.

Mr. INGALLS. Is this valley within the limits of the present Ute reservation?

Mr. TELLER. This valley is within the limits of the Ute reserva-tion as declared by an executive order issued on the 18th of August,

Mr. INGALLS. It will become public land in case this agreement is adopted?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I contend that it never ought to have been in the reservation; that these people went there in perfect good faith. I submit that it will be a great hardship to them. Their number is small; but notwithstanding it would be a great outrage on them to drive them from this land. If the Senate wants to do it, very well.

Mr. ALLISON. The papers, letters, and documents in the office of the Secretary of the Interior disclose that these springs are valuable; how valuable of course we cannot ascertain. The Interior Department made several efforts to purchase these springs. It actually made a treaty with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course with the Indians for the purchase of the spring for the sum of the course we cannot ascertain. of $10,000 with lands surrounding it. Instead of being four miles square, however, they purchased four square miles. The committee thought that this spring and the lands surrounding it were of so much value that they should be withdrawn from settlement, at least for the present. Of course if these springs turn out to be not valuable at any time it is within the control of Congress to either grant the lands to these settlers or to sell them. The only effect of the eighth section is to reserve for the present this small tract of land surrounding these hot springs. I think the provision had better remain in the

There is no doubt about the fact that these people, if they are there, are there in violation of the treaty and every provision of it. They have been warned off over and over again, but they still cling to this small region of country, evidently having in view the fact that these springs either now or in the near future will be very valuable, though springs either now or in the near future will be very valuable, though the committee thought they should be exempted from the general provisions of the bill to open up all this land to public settlement.

Mr. TELLER. They are not there in violation of law. They are there as they had a right to go, under the very terms and stipulations of the treaty. But the President had a right to make by an executive order that a part and parcel of an Indian reservation. He saw fit to do that without these people being heard. They did not go there for the benefit of the springs. They went there to make little farms. I suppose there is not one of them who has got over forty acres of land that is arable in one of those little farms. It is an exacres of land that is arable in one of those little farms. It is an exceedingly small thing for the United States Senate to do to deprive them of their farms; but of course it can be done. You have the power to do it, you have the might; but it ought not to be done. The You have the springs are of no value. In the town of Ouray there are hot springs; a few miles above there are hot springs of much more importance, and I am told that down below there are other springs. I do not know about it; I never was there on the ground.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information ?

Mr. TELLER.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator says that the settlers there had a right to be there. Is not this tract within the Indian reservation?

Mr. TELLER. It is not within the Indian reservation. The provision in the treaty was that if the Uncompahgre Park fell south of the line that was supposed to be the south line, then the Government should make a deed to include this tract. The Uncompahgre Park proper fell eight or nine miles north of the line. The Indians insisted that they can all the Uncompany Park and there were a the that they owned all the Uncompahgre Park, and thereupon, on the agent making a representation to the President that it was a part of the Uncompahgre Park, he included it by an executive order.

Mr. ALLISON. In the map of Hayden the Uncompahgre Park seems to be located right on this reservation.

Mr. TELLER. But the whole controversy grew up before the map

Mr. BRUCE. I desire to ask the Senator a question, as I did not hear his explanation fully. I wish to ask him whether the territory which is now settled upon was embraced in the Indian reservation by the President before the settlers went upon this land or afterward?

Mr. TELLER. The Government ran the line and put up their monuments showing that this little valley, which contains two thousand acres of arable land perhaps, was south of the line. After the monuments were established these settlers went in there and built their cabins. After they went there, without any notice to them, the agent wrote down to Washington that the line was improperly run. The Commissioner of the Land Office declared that from all the evidence he could get the line was properly run and that the park was north of the reservation; but the President of the United States at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made a special executive reservation, as he might do, and included these men in it months after they had gone there and when they were farming their lands. It is of very little value to the Government but of a good deal to these people.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It will be public land again, then?

Mr. TELLER. It will be.
Mr. ALLISON. I only want to say one word in reply to the Senator from Colorado. It is true that the surveyer who ran this line, who was a man by the name of Miller, not only made an improper survey there, as the Indians claim, but he ran another line several miles outside of what was agreed to by the treaty. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in a general way, adopted his survey, but as soon as the President of the United States discovered that this had been done in violation of the Indian treaty, he, by an executive order, set apart this small tract of land, and it has remained as a part of the reservation by executive order from that time to this.

reservation by executive order from that time to this.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Colorado states that before the executive order was issued, these settlers had gone on the land.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that is true. They jumped in upon this valuable tract of land—I do not know when—perhaps immediately after the survey was made by this Mr. Miller, who was employed by the Land Office to run the boundary.

Mr. TELLER. I beg the Senator's pardon; it was six months after the line was established before a settler went there.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask him whether these settlers had the right to go there when they did? That is the point I want to understand.

Mr. ALLISON. They had not the right, of course. They went there in absolute violation of the treaty.

Mr. PLUMB. This section does not seem to be germane to the bill. It would be just as pertinent, I think, to require to be set apart all

Mr. PLUMB. This section does not seem to be germane to the bill. It would be just as pertinent, I think, to require to be set apart all the hot springs and soap springs and iron springs that are there.

Mr. ALLISON. They ought to be so set apart, I assert.

Mr. PLUMB. If we should set apart a large body of public land we should get into hot water, I suggest, if we kept on defining land that was reserved. I think that on principle, without any regard to the merits of the controversy between the settlers and the Government, this section should go out of the bill, because it is not in any sense germane. The bill relates to the Utes and the partition of land to them, and not to the possession of lands claimed by settlers. It not only embarrasses the bill for nothing, but introduces a new element of controversy regarding that tract of land. Setting apart that tract of land will simply make it an eye-sore in that valley and a constant temptation to the settlers, who will be put off it, and who certainly will not feel well toward the Government when Congress had a chance by a vacation of the Indian title to restore it to them, and did not do so. Therefore I hope the amendment of the Senator from Colorado will prevail. Colorado will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before I vote on this question I want to understand exactly what the rights of these parties are. If these are persons who had a right to go to this place and settle upon these lands as public lands of the United States, then I think the amendment of the Senator from Colorado should be adopted; otherwise I should vote against it. As I understand it, any lands of the United States, surveyed or unsurveyed, if they are not within some reservation by the General Government, can be settled upon, and title to the lands acquired by settlement. As I understand the facts in this particular case, these lands were not within the Indian reservation at the time these settlers went upon them: but subsequent to the time they went these settlers went upon them; but subsequent to the time they went upon them the President of the United States issued an executive order under the terms of an Indian treaty, embracing within the reservation the lands upon which these people had settled.

Mr. INGALLS. While the Senator is on that point—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MANULLAN Vent Land vent to be a senator from the senator from Minnesota wield to the senator f

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; I merely want to have correct information

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; I merely want to have correct information on this point, so that I can vote intelligently.

Mr. INGALLS. Let me call the Senator's attention to the provision of the act of April 29, 1874, ratifying an agreement with the Ute Indians, by which they relinquished a portion of their reservation in Colorado. It appears that there had been a controversy between the commissioners and Indians as to this identical tract of land. It was one of the frequented places of the Indians, one of their places of resort for religious purposes, and a very beautiful valley, inclosed between ranges of mountains, lying just below the present settlement of Ouray, and is at this time the source from which they derive a large portion of their supplies, in the way of vegetables, and so forth. In the treaty that was made it was expressly provided in the

That if any part of the Uncompangre Park shall be found to extend south of the north line of said described country, the same is not intended to be included therein, and is hereby reserved and retained as a portion of the Ute reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. They understood it so all the time.
Mr. INGALLS. All the parties understood that. There was a spe-Mr. INGALLS. All the parties understood that. There was a special exception made in favor of the reservation of this particular tract of land. Accordingly, after the line had been run by this man Miller, to whom the Senator from Iowa has referred, it was discovered that the line did run north of this reservation so as not to include it. Thereupon a new survey was made by which the line was diverted so as to include this particular tract, which was subsequently set apart by the President through an executive order in compliance with this article of the treaty. Therefore when that had been done it became a portion of the Ute reservation; and if any white man is there to-day he is plainly a trespasser, and is upon the ground in violation of law. It seems to me that the Senate would hardly be doing justice to recognize the rights of men who are admitted to be wrong-

So far as the Senator from Colorado is concerned, I agree with him in believing that the policy of reserving these hot springs in that portion of the country is without much value, because that whole region is penetrated with hot springs. There are thousands of them in the neighborhood on the land that this treaty refers to, and along the whole course of the Rocky Mountains. If every thermal spring were to be reserved and the land to be reserved around about it, the country would be marked with executive reservations that would be country would be marked with executive reservations that would be of no special value to anybody.

Mr. TELLER. I should like just to make one statement upon this point. It is a matter that I think the Senator might understand and ought to understand. There is the provision read by the Senator with reference to the Uncompahgre Park. This was comparatively an unknown region; there were no settlers in the vicinity; none in the park. The question might have arisen, of course, what was the Uncompahgre Park? The Senators who are on the committee assume now that there is no question but what the Uncompahgre Park is the four miles reservation; yet the Commissioner of the General Land Office, after he had examined it, declared that the evidence was satisfactory to him that the other park, which is much larger, much Office, after he had examined it, declared that the evidence was satisfactory to him that the other park, which is much larger, much finer, much more valuable, eight or nine miles farther down the stream, is what was intended by the Uncompangre Park. Mr. Fogg, a citizen of Ouray, formerly a citizen of Saint Louis, (I read his letter here the other day to the Senate,) wrote to the Secretary of the Interior that this was not the Uncompangre Park at all; that the Uncompanders Park was still forther partly Interior that this was not the Uncompangre Park at all; that the Uncompangre Park was still farther north.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course I sympathize with the Senator, but I want to ask him if this is not what the Indians understood by the Uncompangre Park, and what they wanted to reserve?

Mr. TELLER. No one being there or understanding anything about the Uncompangre Park at all, the Government went to work and ran the Uncompangre Park at all, the Government went to work and ran this line. It ran it and established its monuments, large monuments that everybody could see. That survey was approved in January, 1875, having been made the previous fall, and the monuments put up. Nobody had gone there. Everybody was waiting to see where the line was to be. When it ran across this park, Mr. Miller said he saw nothing that he thought indicated a park; that the Indians did not claim that this was a park; and therefore he ran the line supposing the park to be where yet think it now is vertibely the park to be where we think it now is, north. But the monuments were put up after the approval by the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the survey, and after this had been declared thereby to be public

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator mean to say that the Uncompangre Park is north?

Mr. TELLER. I mean to say that the Uncompangre Park is north.

That is my understanding.

Mr. ALLISON. Then to carry out the provisions of this treaty there ought to have been still a larger reservation, because the Utes understood when the treaty was made that this particular country should be reserved for their use.

Mr. TELLER, [indicating on a map.] Here is the Uncompangre

Mr. ALLISON. Then the reservation ought to be there, [indicating.] Mr. TELLER. But that is in the reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator mistakes; the Uncompangre Park is in the reservation. Then after all this was done, in the spring the settlers went in there and established their homes, as I have stated. It cannot be said that they were there in violation of law, at least if they were they had been misled by the action of the Government. I saw affidavits on file from these men (and I do not know what particular men are now touched by this reservation) in which they said if compelled to leave this ground everything they had in the world would be swept from them; that in making their little homes and building be swept from them; that in making their little homes and building their cabins they had expended every dollar they had in the world. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] says the matter is of no account, that there are plenty of thermal springs there; and yet it seems to be considered, when the Indians have nothing to do with it, that these men should be deprived of their homes. Every Senator who has given attention to the United States land laws understands that they had a right there if it was a part of the public domain, and yet we understand that the President of the United States had the right to include them in the reservation if he say fit. the right to include them in the reservation if he saw fit; up to the time that they had entered their lands at the land office the power existed. These men have been living there on the sufferance of the Government ever since, raising a few vegetables and taking them up to the town of Ouray to sell. Personally I do not know a man living on the tract; I could not pick out the names of the many men whose affidavits I have filed, but I know it affects some men, I know they are poor men, and I know that nothing is gained either to the Indians or to the white men of the nation by the withdrawal of this land from settlement except to give these men trouble and to cause us trouble in the future.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The question, as I understand, is not between the settlers and the Indians. The Utes have no claim, if this agreement is carried out, to this four-mile strip?

Mr. ALLISON. None at all.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The naked question to-day is as to whether a number of settlers who went on there, as they supposed they had a right to do, in good faith, and made little homes for themselves, shall be compelled to get up and get out for the sake of setting apart a piece of land there for a pleasure-ground hereafter for some people who may go into that Territory to live. It is not a question between the white man and the Utes at all, but it is a question whether men who went there and made their homes, as many did in Iowa, shall be allowed to remain. Many men went to Iowa and made their homes there before the Indian title was divested. Many men have settled in Kansas and elsewhere all through the west, and made little homes for themselves, perhaps not strictly within the technical meaning of the law, but in advance of the law. The question is whether for the purpose of saving a reservation for a pleasure-ground, to be used perhaps a century hence, those men shall be compelled to get out of there. That is all there is of it, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I move to add at the end of the bill the following as an additional section:

That compensation for depredations heretofore committed by the Ute Indians shall be made to the parties suffering from such depredations out of the money to be paid said Indians; the amount so to be paid to be determined and ascertained by the commission herein named, and reported to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall retain the amount so reported out of the money to be paid to the band guilty of such depredations.

I will say that that is strictly in keeping with the provisions of the treaty of 1868, which provides that for any depredations they commit they shall pay out of their annuities. I have provided that the commission to be appointed shall make an estimate of the depredations. I do not desire to discuss the amendment. I should like to have a vote on it, and I should like to have the vote by yeas and nays, if the Senate will give it to me.

Mr. INGALLS. If these depredations are provided for in the treaty of 1868, which the Senator states, and in which I concur with him, the amendment is entirely unnecessary, because in the agreement that we are now acting upon it is expressly declared and agreed that all the provisions of that treaty shall remain and be in full force and effect unless they are altered by the terms of this agreement.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not so understand the treaty, and I want it on the record whether the Senate propose to make this provision or whether they do not wish to do so. In this matter I suppose Senators will not go against the committee if the committee op-pose the amendment, but I want the amendment made. It is the fairest way to determine it; it is the only way to determine it. I want the yeas and nays; I do not desire any delay.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether there is any provision now existing under which the Ute Indians can be compelled to pay the parties who have been depredated upon, out of their annuities, for damages done by them?

Mr. TELLER. The treaty provides that complaint shall be made to their agent; but inasmuch as they have killed their agent, I do not know how the persons seeking indemnity are to proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment proposes merely to substitute the commission in place of the agent?

Mr. TELLER. That is what it amounts to.
Mr. ALLISON. What agent did the Indians kill?
Mr. TELLER. Their agent.
Mr. ALLISON. There are agents for all these Ute tribes. There is an agent for the White River Utes.
Mr. TELLER. Who is he?
Mr. ALLISON. His nomination was sent here.
Mr. TELLER. That was for the Uncompanders, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. ALLISON. The one sent here?

Mr. ALLISON. Another name was sent for the White River Utes.

Mr. TELLER. If so he is not confirmed, and we do not know that he will be

Mr. INGALLS. Let me read a portion of article 5 of the treaty of 1868, which is declared by this agreement to be and remain in full force and effect:

In all cases of depredation on person or property, they shall cause the evidence to be taken in writing and forwarded, together with their finding, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose decision, subject to the revision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be binding on the parties to this treaty.

That article is declared expressly to be in full force and effect by the agreement now under consideration.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator show me the clause in the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. It is as follows:

All provisions of the treaty of March 2, 1868, and the act of Congress approved April 29, 1874, not altered by this agreement, shall continue in force.

April 29, 1874, not altered by this agreement, shall continue in force.

Page 7 of the bill, paragraph 5, lines 150 to 153.

Mr. TELLER. That is in the bill, I admit, but the only provision that seems to be expressly reaffirmed is the provision with reference to the payment of these Utes. I am satisfied that whenever the people who have suffered by depredations come here they will be met with the statement that this matter is now settled by a new treaty, and I want to provide for it as we go along.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. No provision is made in the bill for a failure on the part of the Utes to ratify this agreement. If they should negative this legislation and refuse, there is no provision for the disposal of the controversy that everybody admits is going on. I do not know how long a time the committee think that the Interior Department ought to have to secure the approval of the Indians or to determine that they had disapproved of this legislation. I have thought that ninety days was long enough. If the committee think it is not, I have no objection to modifying my amendment. I have prepared an amendment that if these Indians shall refuse after ninety days to accept this agreement, the negotiation shall be terminated, at least that the War Department shall take charge of them until such time as they shall consent to agree to it. I therefore move to add as an additional section the following:

If the Ute Indians refuse to ratify the agreement herein within ninety days, the War Department shall have the control and management of the several bands of Ute Indians now in the State of Colorado until such time as three-fourths of the said adult Indians of said bands signify their approval of the agreement herein.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How would it do to modify that amendment, by striking out the word "control" and inserting the word "protection," and then adding at the end of it that the War Department shall defend them in the possession of the territory that by treaty they are now entitled to? With that amendment to the amendment, I am not sure but that I should be glad to go for it.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator assumes that they are entitled to this reservation. I think if he had given as much attention to this subject as he ordinarily does to matters here he would have concluded that there might be some question whether they were entitled to anything after their conduct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have given attention to that particular branch of the subject. I wish I had the treaty of 1868 here now to see just how that stands.

Mr. INGALLS. Here it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is worth while thinking of, if we care anything about the honor of the United States as we used to do; and I presume in the change of politics our disposition to care for that has not grown any less. One provision of the treaty is:

That the United States now solemnly agree that no persons, except those herein authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employés of the Government as may be authorized to enter upon Indian reservations in discharge of duties enjoined by law, shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described in this article, except as herein otherwise provided.

The "otherwise provided" refers to the building of roads and railroads, which the Indians agreed might be done. Then we come to the case of misconduct on the part of these Indians or any of them. It is in the last article.

That if any chief of either of the confederated bands make war against the people of the United States, or in any manner violate this treaty in any essential part, said chief shall forfeit his position as chief and all rights to any of the benefits of this treaty. But provided further, Any Indian of either of these confederated bands who shall remain at peace, and abide by the terms of this treaty in all its essentials, shall be entitled to its benefits and provisions, notwithstanding his particular chief and band may have forfeited their rights thereto.

It is said that one of these bands, the White River band, committed wrongs, contrary to the spirit of this treaty, against the people of the United States. This amendment provides, as a consequence of that, that the War Department, in spite of this treaty, shall take the control of the whole of these people, the innocent as well as the guilty, the separate bands. The bill itself provides, in carrying out this agreement, for making this new agreement as a consequence of the alleged misconduct of one of these bands. The frame of the bill is such that apparently a majority of all the bands taken together may have the effect to remove two of these peaceable bands, who have not made any war at all or done anything else that is complained of, from the places where the treaty of 1868 says that if they stay at peace they shall be entitled to stay and be protected by the United States. If that is what we call keeping the faith of the United States, I think we had better get a new book of definitions as early as possible. It It is said that one of these bands, the White River band, committed we had better get a new book of definitions as early as possible. It looks to me as if it were exactly the other way.

As I say, therefore, in serious earnest it might be a very good thing to adopt the amendment of my friend from Colorado with the change that in case this agreement is not carried into effect within ninety days or thirty days it shall be the duty of the Department of Way days or thirty days, it shall be the duty of the Department of War to uphold the treaty of 1868 and keep people from violating the sure-ties of exclusion provided by that treaty and leave these peaceable bands of Indians at least in the place that the faith of the United States, as the treaty expresses it, is solemnly pledged that they shall be left.

Mr. TELLER. There are a great many people in the United States the United States who have studied the Indian question very carefully who believe that it is a mercy to the Indians to turn them over to the control of the War Department. If any man who studies the history of Indian affairs for the last three years does not come to that conclusion I shall wonder very much at the constitution of his mind and his heart both, for wrongs and wicked things have been percentaged. for wrongs and wicked things have been perpetrated upon the In-dians within the last three years that I am satisfied would never have been inflicted upon them had they been under the control of the War Department. There are a great many men whose hearts beat warmly for the Indians who believe that the only salvation of the Indians is to put them under the control of the War Department. I believe that it is the sentiment of the people on the frontier who have studied the question most carefully that nothing else will save the Indian from utter extinction in your day and mine, if we live to the age of our fathers, but the strong hand of the War Department.

I have not offered the amendment in a spirit of cruelty, but because I believe it is to the interest of the Indians that they should be put under the control of a department and a branch of the Government that has the ability and the inclination to do justice to the whites and the Indians on the frontier alike.

Mr. President, I know there is such a provision as the Senator has mr. President, I know there is such a provision as the Senator has read. I know that if the men who have committed wrongs are turned over to the tribal authorities to be punished by their band the band is exonerated; but I know that all of the bands have refused to do it. I know that the man who led the troops against Thornburgh came I know that the man who led the troops against Inorhourgh came here and was petted and petted and sent off to become what? The head chief of the White Rivers; and I know, too, that the man who had given Meeker more aid, more assistance, had made greater attempts at the civilization of his tribe than any other White River Indian, is in Fort Leavenworth. I know that he was less culpable and less guilty than Captain Jack, and yet Captain Jack is to be made head chief of the White Rivers.

Now Mr. President, there must be some disposition made of this case. There must be something done. When these Indians sign the treaty, of course there is a provision for carrying it out. If they do not sign it, if they refuse, what are you going to do with them? Who is to control them? I say that it is a mercy to them and to us to give the control to the War Department; and if it is the duty of the War Department to keep the people off that reservation, the War Department alone can do it, the Interior Department cannot do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the duty of the President.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. It will be the duty of the War Department and the duty of the President. There must be some provision made for a failure to carry out this treaty. Something ought to be done if they say they will not accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. Now Mr. President, there must be some disposition made of this

of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to offer an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama to withdraw his amendment until the Senator from Colorado gets through.

Mr. TELLER. No; go on.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. TELLER. No; but go on.

Mr. MORGAN. At the end of the bill I move to add:

If the agreement as amended in this act is not ratified by three-fourths of the adult male Indians of the Ute tribe on or before the 1st day of July, 1880, this act shall cease to be of effect after that date.

As I understand the act-if I am incorrect the committee can correct me—there is no period at which the act ceases in the event of the failure or refusal of the Indians to ratify this treaty, if I may so call it. There is no period fixed beyond which or after which ratification may not take place. It seems to me there ought to be a period provided when the pay of these commissioners and their office shall cease, and when we ought to come to an understanding as to whether this and when we ought to come to an understanding as to whether this-law is to be effectual or not. I do not see but what the Indians and the commissioners may protract this thing for a long time. Inasmuch-as this peculiar proposition is for the first time presented to the con-sideration of the Senate, there having been nothing like it before that I have ever heard of, and inasmuch as we are legislating now not upon a contract made with Indians but upon a proposition to make a contract with them, it seems to me there ought to be some period of time absolutely fixed as a limit beyond which the negotiations shall not extend. If this was a treaty in its ordinary form submitted to us for ratification, we should understand that as soon as we ratified it and the Indians had ratified it it would go into effect. Now, here there is no ratification provided for at all except by this board of commissioners. They may withhold obtaining the ratification as long as they think proper to do so. They may continue their negotiations as long as they choose to do so. We are just at their mercy on this subject. We pay $10 a day each and all their expenses for five men to continue these negotiations just as long as it may suit their convenience to do it.

Mr. EATON. Allow me to suggest to my friend from Alabama that I entirely agree with the spirit of his amendment, but if I heard it aright it fixes the 1st day of July, 1880-

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EATON. It seems to me if it takes as long in the other Houseto consider the bill as it has taken here, it may be the 1st of July, 1880, before the bill is finished. Would it not be better to say the "1st day of August?"

Mr. COKE. "The 1st day of January next."

Mr. EATON. The 1st day of January would be too long.

Mr. ALLISON. Would it not be better to say "the 1st day of July, 1881?"

Mr. MORGAN. The bill has been pushed down the throat of the Senate on the ground of emergency in order to get the Indians into a new country this spring so that they may begin to cultivate the land. Now, one gentleman of the committee suggests the 1st of January next, and another the 1st of July, 1881. That answers all the argument of the transfer of this country and the suggests.

ment about the urgency of this measure.

Mr. HARRIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Alabama that, instead of fixing the 1st day of July, 1880 or 1881, the amendment be so modified as to say "sixty days" or "ninety days after the approval of the act."

Mr. MORGAN. I have no difficulty about that. I will take it in that form, "ninety days after the passage of the act." I modify my amendment to that effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I would suggest to the Senator to make it "four months." I quite agree with him, and so does the committee, that this ought to be facilitated as rapidly as possible. Mr. MORGAN. Well, I have no objection to "four months," only

I do not like to see the argument made here for a week broken down in that way by the committee itself—the argument as to urgency.

Mr. ALLISON. That is rather unfortunate.

Mr. MORGAN. I will take "four months" rather than no time at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported as

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that there are one or two things that need further amendment; one, for example, is that these commissioners will have to be continued in the exercise of their duties after the Indians ratify the agreement. The committee will quite agree with the Senator in the propriety of providing a limitation and preparing such a limitation as will cover all

Mr. MORGAN. Let the amendment be reported as now modified. The Chief Clerk read the amendment as modified, as follows:

If the agreement as modified in this act is not ratified by three-fourths of the adult male Indians of the Ute tribe within four months from the approval of this act, the same shall be of no effect after that date.

Mr. MORGAN. That is my amendment.
Mr. INGALLS. Would the Senator from Alabama consent to a still further modification in words like these: "In case of the failure of three-fourths of said Ute Nation to ratify the said agreement, the United States Government shall protect them in the full and peaceable enjoyment of their present reservation?"

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that. That is exactly what I desire the Government to do.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that amendment then to the amendment effered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. EATON. The United States, without that amendment, is bound to protect them by the treaty.

Mr. INGALLS. The Indians will understand that the Senate believe that it is the duty and obligation of the Government to do it. If it is put in as an amendment to this bill, it will bring it more fully and clearly before the minds of the Indians, and I think we cannot repeat these guarantees too often in view of the lessons of the past.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas would alter the law or improve the bill at all; yet I am willing to accept it, because I understand this bill to the nothing else than a mere talk to the Indians, and I want to make them understand it, if I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as modified by him.

Mr. PLUMB. That amendment, I think, would be a fair notice to the Indians that they are under no obligation to do this thing at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are they? Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Vermont asks if they are. I think they are, myself. I am not speaking of the letter of the law, but speaking of some of the experience of the United States Government with the Indians within the last few years. I remember when the discovery of gold was made in the Deadwood country the military discovery of gold was made in the Deadwood country the military were sent out to that country to protect it against the immigration of settlers. I remember the result of that. The obligation on the part of the Government in that case was as sacred as it is in the case of the Utes, and it might as well be accepted first as last as a fact, that this reservation now existing in the State of Colorado will be trespassed upon whether we desire it to be or not.

We are talking now not about what the law is or what it ought to be; we are talking about the propriety of an agreement with the Utes, and upon the theory that that agreement will be made, as I have no doubt it will if the proper authorities apply themselves to the making of the agreement at the proper time and under the proper circumstances and in the proper way; but to go to them and say, "If you do not ratify this we renew the promise we have heretofore made, that you shall stop where you are notwithstanding the fact that you yourselves have violated the treaty under which you are on these lands," is giving them fair notice that we do not care much whether they ratify this new contract or not. I think it would be a burden upon the proposition likely to operate very disastrously.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as modified by him.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be reported again as modified. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

If the agreement, as amended, in this act is not ratified by three-fourths of the adult male Indians of the Ute tribe within four months from the approval of this act, the same shall be of no effect after that date.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. What was read did not contain the whole amend-

Mr. INGALLS. I thought the Senator from Alabama accepted the amendment I proposed.

Mr. HARRIS. The question was put on the original amendment of the Senator from Alabama without the modification proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama accepted the amendment, but the Clerk understood that the Senator from Kansas offered another amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read what he omitted to read before.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And in case of the failure of three-fourths of the said tribe to ratify the said agreement, the United States Government shall protect the Ute Nation in the full and peaceable possession of their present reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood incorrectly that the modification was included in what was first read by the Clerk. He put the question on what was read alone, supposing it included the whole amendment. That was an error. The question is on the amendment just read.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past three having arrived, general debate has closed. On all amendments hereafter offered a five-minute debate will be allowed.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment which I think the committee ought to accept, and probably will. The amendment which I now propose provides simply that if the Indians are dissatisfied with this agreement as made and any of them desire to go to the Uintah reservation—it is now provided that only a certain class may go to the Uintah reservation-any of the others may go there if they wish to go. I do not know whether the committee will object to that; I think not, though. I offer it as an additional section:

That nothing herein contained shall prevent the settlement of the Southern Utes or the Uncompalagre Utes on the lands of the Uintah reservation in Utah if any of the said Indians desire to settle there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I offer another amendment which I commend to the attention of the committee. I do not know but that they may object to a word here, and, if so, I will change it. I have prepared an amendment that the commissioners shall, before allotting said lands—I say "take from the Indians;" if it is preferable to put in the term

"purchase from the Indians," I will change it; and perhaps it would be. I offer it as an additional section:

The commissioners shall, before allotting said lands, purchase from the Indians all rifles and muskets now owned by them, and shall pay the said Indians the full cash value thereof at the time of taking the same; and the sum of $$50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose they will not sell them?

Mr. TELLER. Then we cannot buy them. It is useless to talk about civilizing these Indians if you allow them each to keep his rifle and roam over the country. I have also another amendment which I shall propose that shall enable the commission to buy their horses. The great objection and obstruction and obstacle to civil-izing Indians is the fact that they have arms and ponies.

Mr. COKE. Suppose the Indians refuse to sell their rifles and muskets, what then?

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose you can buy them. My amendment says "purchase." If they say they will not sell them, that is the end of it; but if they are going to settle down and are willing to sell their muskets and rifles, we should buy them.

Mr. ALLISON. Would not the Senator consent to an additional amendment that with the proceeds they may buy other horses and other rifles?

Mr. TELLER. It is useless to talk about civilizing these Indians with their rifles and their horses. We had that experience with the Sioux; and when we took their rifles and took their horses by force that the starting them on the road to civilization. I have not any idea that the committee will accept this amendment, because it is really looking toward the settlement of the difficulty, and they have steadily objected to anything that looked toward the settlement of this trouble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I offer another amendment. These Indians have, I suppose, about eight or ten thousand horses; and I want the commission to buy these horses. These are not horses that can cultivate land; they are war ponies; they are too small for land cultivation; and the Secretary stated before the committee that they had to have other horses to cultivate their land. The amendment is to add as a new section:

The commissioners are authorized to negotiate and buy of the Indians their horses, paying for them a fair price, if they will sell at a fair price; and the sum of $50,000, or so much as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I offer the following amendment as an additional section.

The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of constructing irrigating ditches on the land allotted to said Indians, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I offer another amendment, to come in as an additional section:

That any Ute Indian, being the owner of land that he desires to sell, may appear in any circuit court of the United States within the district where said land is situated and make application to the court, in such manner as the court shall provide, to sell his land, or any part thereof; and if the court, after due examination into the matter, shall be of the opinion that the interests of said Indian require the said land or any part thereof to be sold, it shall, by decree, order such sale and the manner and terms thereof: Provided, however, That no such sale shall be ordered to pay any debts of the said Indian; and no decree shall be made except in the presence of said Indian, after the same shall have been fully explained to him by the court and his consent to such decree given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr, TELLER. I offer an additional section:

That if after the allotment of said lands in severalty as herein provided the Indians shall abandon the same or refuse to live thereon, the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President, may sell such lands not occupied and use the proceeds thereof for the benefit of the Indians, or may exchange the said lands for lands outside of the State of Colorado, on which the Indians shall be located if they consent thereto.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I think is in the interest of the Indians and I think the committee ought to accept it. It is to add as a new section:

SEC —. The Secretary of the Interior may, with the consent of the Indians and with the approval of the President of the United States, exchange any lands so allotted to the Indians for lands in the Unitah reservation on such terms as shall be agreed on between the Secretary and the Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. The Secretary of War has sent to the Senate a statement that it is necessary to erect a post in the vicinity of the mouth of the Gunnison River, which is in the vicinity of these Indians. I think it is necessary before the land is allotted that the Government should reserve a piece of land for that purpose. It is very clear to everybody that after the land is allotted it will be difficult to put the troops on lands belonging to the Indians; and therefore I offer as an additional section the following amendment:

That before any lands shall be selected the commissioners shall designate not less than two sections nor more than five, which shall not be allotted to the Indians, but shall be reserved to the Government for the use of the Government if it is desirable to establish a military post at such place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in regard to the construction of the fourth clause of this agreement on page 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will observe to the Senator from Kansas that general debate being closed, and there being no debate allowable except on amendments, there is nothing pending was which there can be debate under the agreement of the Senator upon which there can be debate under the agreement of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I will then propose an amendment which I had intended to offer after my inquiry had been made. I propose to insert on page 7, in line 145, "not exceeding five years." When I first read this provision I supposed this was not cumulative, that is to say, that this did not add to the appropriations provided for in the subsequent portion of the bill. Under the provisions of this bill the Government agrees to pay these Indians $75,000 a year in addition to the various sums given them to set up housekeeping upon; but I find that in this contract, in section 4, it is provided that the Government shall also maintain and support them so long as they are unable to support themselves, there being no limit of time whatever. I think that is a very great discouragement under which to support these Indians. Certainly if they are expected to support themselves they ought not to be set leose upon a promise that the Government will support them as long as they fail to support themselves. I know a great many white people who under a provision of that kind would never arrive at a self-supporting point.

This is said to be a new departure in the Indian policy. The Indian is to be put upon a self-supporting basis; and yet we start him out this provision I supposed this was not cumulative, that is to say, that is to be put upon a self-supporting basis; and yet we start him out with a statement that if he never does arrive at that point, we will always continue to support him, and in addition to that pay him $75,000 a year for not supporting himself. I think that there ought to be a limitation upon this obligation of the Government. I do not know that such an obligation exists in the treaty that has been referred to, the treaty of 1868; but if it does, I think it ought to be modified especially as we increase the sums of money which are going to these Indians per annum.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator one question? Suppose it should turn out as a matter of fact that at the end of five years they cannot support themselves

Mr. PLUMB. That will be a fact which can then be made the subject of legislation; but we shall find Senators rising on this floor forty or fifty years from now, probably, and asserting that this is an agreement which cannot be avoided on the part of the Government, and that as these parties have been encouraged in idleness by the promise of the Government, the Government is bound by the letter of this contract to keep them in idleness.

It is always time to consider what we will do with paupers when we have them. If the Utes are not able to take care of themselves at the end of five years, the question will then be before us as a practical question; but in the mean time I find that we appropriate

$350,000 to furnish them stock, houses, establish schools, build mills and agency buildings, and furnish agricultural implements, &c.; that we pay them down $75,000; that in addition to that we agree to that we pay them down $75,000; that in addition to that we agree to pay them $75,000 per annum; and on top of all that we say: if this does not support you we will give you such other sum as will be necessary to accomplish that purpose.

As I said before, I think this is discouraging these Indians from ever arriving at the self-supporting position. I think there ought to be some limit of time within which the Government will say to them at least very in making this greener, whetever it more do become least now in making this agreement, whatever it may do hereafter, least now in making this agreement, whatever it may do hereafter, "We will cut you loose from the protecting and fostering care of the Government, except so far as it may relate to this $75,000, and after that you must take care of yourselves." This will be no solution of the Indian problem if we are to go on with this assumption of guardianship over them, with this obligation to support them so long as they may live. It will simply be perpetuating the worst features of the cell system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb.]

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. As the yeas and nays are to be called on this amendment I desire to say just one word.

This is a provision of the agreement made with these Ute tribes, that the Government agrees to maintain these Utes until such time as they shall be self-supporting. It is all the time within the control and direction of the Congress of the United States to facilitate them in becoming self-supporting. That may take one year; it may take two years; it may take five, and it may take ten. Now I submit to the Senator from Kansas that it is not a wise thing to place this limitation now in the agreement. Whatever limitation we may make here, if at the end (f five years it shall turn out that these people are not self-supporting, this Government will not permit them to starve because they are not able to support themselves. It will, if it pursues because they are not able to support themselves. It will, if it pursues the policy it is now pursuing, by appropriations make provision for their support. We are to-day supporting numbers of Indians with whom we have no treaty stipulations for their support. How are they to live from year to year and from time to time? Their hunting-grounds have been occupied by the white people. They are no longer able to support themselves in many portions of the country except by agricultural or pastoral pursuits. Now, if these people by the aid we propose to give them are not able at the end of five years, either by means of agriculture or by means of pastoral pursuits to support themselves, there is no way by which they can be supported except by the action of the Government of the United States. Therefore, whether it be one, two, or three years. I think it should be left to whether it be one, two, or three years, I think it should be left to Congress from time to time to settle that question. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. If I may be permitted—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has spoken five minutes on this question.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to say a few words in reply to what the Senator from Iowa has said.

Mr. HOAR, (to Mr. Plumb.) Move to amend that amendment by striking out the last word.
Mr. Plumb. Mr. President, I desire to have this matter left in the position-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot enforce this understanding. The Chair will submit to the Senate whether it gives unanimous consent to the Senator from Kansas proceeding, he having occupied five minutes.

Mr. FERRY. Has not the Senator a right to move to amend the amendment?

amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not offered to do so.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest that he can move to amend the amendment, and then speak five minutes on that.

Mr. MAXEY. I am in favor of the general principle of this bill. I believe that the purpose is to break up the tribal relation and place these people ultimately in a self-supporting position. In the carrying out of that the committee have provided for agricultural implements, cattle, &c. Now, it does seem to me the time has come when we should regard these people as being fit for the experiment of selfwe should regard these people as being fit for the experiment of selfsupport. There ought to be a limit, and I think the limitation of five years a good and wise provision. It shows these people that they must be doing something in the direction of self-support. If at the end of this time it is found that they still need the fostering hand of the Government, doubtless it will be extended; but it will be very good notice to them that the Government of the United States intends that they shall support themselves by their own labor, as we have to sup-they shall support themselves by their own labor, as we have to support ourselves by our labor. Hence I believe the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas is in the right direction, and is carrying out the real spirit and purpose of this bill, which is to make these Indians self-supporting.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have no doubt that some period of time ought to be fixed in the bill beyond which the Government will not pledge itself to support these Indians. This morning, on another committee, I examined under oath a gentleman who has spent some fifteen or twenty years among the Ponca tribe of Indians, a very excellent tribe of people. I asked him the question whether or not the Ponca Indians if returned to their reservation would be self-sustaining with the assistance the Government proposed to give to them. taining with the assistance the Government proposed to give to them. He said they would after a while if we did not put in some provision of a treaty or act of Congress which would require them or induce them to lean on the Government entirely; that if we commenced issuing rations to them and went on without limit or stint in that direction they would never become self-sustaining.

Mr. TELLER. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Kansas by making the time ten years, and I do it for the express purpose and only that the Senator may have a chance to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves to amend the amendment by striking out "five" and inserting

Mr. PLUMB. I am indebted to the courtesy of the Senator from Colorado for his amendment, and I should propose now to say what I purposed saying before in reply to what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said, except for the fact that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] have anticipated a certain portion of it.

My own belief is founded on experience that as long as the Indian is in the receipt of any considerable bounty from the Government he will never be self-supporting or anywhere near it; that he will not only spend all the Government gives him, but will be in need of as only spend all the Government gives him, but will be in need of as much more. One little incident that has recently occurred under my observation during the past two years satisfies me on that point fully. Several years ago the Government purchased of the Sac and Fox Indians in the State of Kansas a reservation, and sent those Indians to the Indian Territory. All but two families went there. A portion of those families went back to the State of Iowa, where they are now residing, and the remainder of them staid within the limits of their all reservation is the State of Vareas. The Government has their old reservation in the State of Kansas. The Government has never paid one dollar of annuity or contributed a single cent to the support of any of those Indians that did not go to the Indian Territory. The Indians residing in the State of Iowa and those who have remained in Kansas from that time to the present have supported themselves. They have been as absolutely self-supporting by means of their labor as almost anybody else has been. I do not mean to or their labor as almost anybody else has been. I do not mean to say that they have not committed some little thefts, but they have not disturbed the peace, or what they have done in that direction has not been conspicuous. They have floated around in the neighborhood where they formerly resided. They have husked corn for the farmers and done odd jobs at different times, and to-day they are living there and prefer to live there in that way, supporting themselves, rather than to go to the Indian Territory and receive the annuity which the Government pays to that portion of the tribe which did go there. I believe to-day that if the Government were to put the Indians of the United States in some position whereby they could reasonably do as these Indians have done they would do it. I believe that if instead of giving to these Indians $75,000 a year, and providing for their support indefinitely, we were simply to put in their charge or in charge of persons for them, for a stated period of time, sufficient stock, they might make use of the pasturage which surrounds the location to which they are going, and that within a few years' time they would become able to take care of themselves. They would not get a classical education; they would not cultivate the æsthetic tastes, of which the Senator from Ohio spoke a few days ago; they would lack a good deal of being white men, or at least of being civilized as white men are, but the burden of the Indian question would be rolled say that they have not committed some little thefts, but they have white men are, but the burden of the Indian question would be rolled from off the shoulders of the Government; they would not be a drain upon the Treasury of the United States. Their treatment, growing out of the conduct of the Government, would not be a reproach to the civilization of the country; they would be taking care of them-the civilization of the country; they would be taking care of themselves in that simple and pastoral way for which alone they are fitted, and for which alone they will ever be fitted.

By just so much as we give them money year by year we encourage them in their idleness and in their pauperism. They are no more entitled to it as a matter of humanity than any other paupers in the United States. It is a discrimination against the blacks; it is discrimination against the blacks; it is discrimination against the states. United States. It is a discrimination against the blacks; it is discriminating against the paupers around your cities and all parts of the country, while we are constantly legislating in favor of the Indian. In addition to that, as I said before, it is not practicable. It is wholly and entirely impracticable. It is simply depleting the Treasury of the United States in order that these people may remain in an idleness that is not necessary to a people who can support themselves; because to-day they are just as well qualified to do it as the Navajoe Indians in New Mexico, who live on their herds. These Indians will live on their sheep and cattle just as completely and fully and just as well in every respect as the Navajoes do, when they get a chance.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it is wrong to speak of these Indians as paupers. If left alone and where they now are they would be one of the richest communities in the United States. If not interfered with, they could support themselves by the chase; they could derive large annuities by the lease of their lands. I venture to say that men could be found within a day's ride of Washington who would be glad could be found within a day's ride of Washington who would be glad to give twenty million dollars for that reservation. They are in the rightful, peaceable possession of it. They are the owners, and they alone, so far as its use and occupation are concerned, if the faith of the United States is good for anything, so long as they see fit to stay there. What justice is there in saying that these men are paupers; that they are dependent upon the beneficence of the Government; that they are stipendiaries; that whatever we give them is a depletion of the United States Treasury?

Mr. President, the United States gets a great deal more from these Indians than it gives them. If what these Indians surrender were put into the United States Treasury; they would be rich beyond the dreams of avarice. They are asked to cede their rights. In return for that we give them a resting-place; we propose to put them in pos-dreams of avarice. They are asked to cede their rights. In return for that we give them a resting place; we propose to put them in possession of the means so far as possible of gaining a subsistence; and in order to avoid even that, after we have wrenched from them this great magnificent principality, we now propose to say that at the end of ten years we will do nothing for them whatever. The policy of the Government about Indians has always been shiftless; it has been a policy of expedients. We have dealt with emergencies. It is no use to say that we will not support these Indians after five years; it is no use to say we will not support them after ten years, because everybody knows that if they need support we shall have to support them. It is better to do as we have always done and trust to the justice of Congress to say what shall be done with the Indians whenever the emergency arises. ever the emergency arises.

I hope, therefore, that neither of these amendments will pass, sim-

I hope, therefore, that neither of these amendments will pass, simply because they would be nugatory and idle.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] are in keeping with those made by other gentlemen on this floor and made through the press. The honorable Senator says there are people who would give $20,000,000 for this reservation. He might put it up in Wall street to-morrow, and if men would go to work to understand what the title is he could not sell it for $500, for all it is good for is as a game preserve. The Supreme Court has said they cannot dig a pound of ore on it; the Supreme Court has said they cannot cut a saw-log to sell to a white man, or to manufacture a board or a shingle to sell to a white man. What is their right there? If it is undisputed, unquestioned, the highest Indian title existing on If it is undisputed, unquestioned, the highest Indian title existing on the continent, it is the right to roam over it, the right, if they see fit, to sit down and cultivate the soil, and cut off the trees and pile up the logs that are in there—that and nothing more. The Supreme Court, in the case of The United States vs. Cook, declared that when Court, in the case of The United States vs. Cook, declared that when Indians went on their reservations, and cut saw-logs and sold them, no title was acquired. It has said here that they cannot extract a pound of ore from the land.

Mr. INGALLS. But I did not say—
Mr. TELLER. But the honorable Senator said they could lease it.
Mr. INGALLS. I said if they could lease it they would be rich beyond the dreams of arraying.

beyond the dreams of avarice.

Mr. TELLER. If they had a fee-simple; but that is just the kind Mr. TELLER. If they had a fee-simple; but that is just the kind of talk you hear all over the country, and half the people of the United States believe the Indians have a fee-simple title to the land and that we are outraging them. The Senator from Kansas knows better. He ought to have been a little more guarded in his language than he was. We are giving them more than this land is worth to them, and that is what its value is. What is it worth to them? Nothing. The game is gone. Will they settle down and cultivate it? We are giving them substantially all the arable land there is on it, and that is but a trifle. I am willing to pay them all it is worth, but I do not want anybody to claim, in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court, that they have a title, which they have not got, and that we not want anybody to claim, in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court, that they have a title, which they have not got, and that we are committing a fraud on them when we are virtually and actually appropriating what will cost the United States full eight or ten million dollars before we get through with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb,] upon which the yeas

So the amendment was rejected. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I move to strike out the fourth section. It is not necessary to read the section unless somebody demands it. I make the motion for the purpose of asking the honorable Senator from Iowa whether it is the understanding of the committee that the tribal relation is preserved by this bill or destroyed. The bill provides that the Indians shall dwell in severalty upon lands held by them in severalty, among white men, and it provides that section 1977 of the Revised Statutes, the civil-rights section, shall be applicable to them. That is, that they Shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind.

I am aware that taxes are expressly excepted in the bill, but otherwise the provision applies to them. Then the section itself indicates that they shall be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside, with the right to sue and be sued in the courts thereof. Now, my question is whether these and be sued in the courts thereof. Now, my question is whether these persons are henceforth to be subject to two entirely different systems of law, one the law of their tribe, the other that which is imposed upon them by this section and by the section of the Revised Statutes which is referred to? Is the Indian to be punished twice for the same crime, once by his own tribal law, and once by the law of the State or of the Union? If not, is he punishable by the first jurisdiction that indicts him? Is he to be pardonable by the chief of his tribe, and then pardonable by the President of the United States, according to which law he is held under, and so on? Are the laws of descent and non-descent, of holding property, of marriage of the tribe and the laws of the State on the same subjects to apply? This bill, if the tribal relation is maintained, leaves the Indian liable to the marriage laws, the laws for the descent of personal property, and so on of the State where he lives. The Senator I think sees the infinite multiplication which might be made of that question; I have stated sufficient to give my idea. sufficient to give my idea.

Mr. ALLISON. I can only give my own view about it, and I think it is the view of the committee. It is not the intent and purpose of this bill to destroy absolutely the tribal relation.

Mr. HOAR. What is there left of the tribal relation after this bill has gone into effect? What relation has an Indian who has gone on to real estate in severalty to any other citizens which his next door white neighbor is not, which makes the tribal relation continue?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I can state exactly what he can do that another citizen cannot do. I only know that the Supreme Court of the United States has held in the Kansas case that, although the individual Indians held lands in severalty, that did not destroy the tribal relations. It held in the Michigan case that although an Indian voted in Michigan, that did not destroy the tribal relations. the tribal relations. It held in the Michigan case that although an Indian voted in Michigan, that did not destroy the tribal relations. It held in the New York case that although they had absolutely parted with their title and agreed within a certain time to leave the territory, that did not destroy the tribal relation.

Mr. HOAR. But has the Supreme Court ever held that a man to whom every law, civil and criminal, of State and Union, applicable to his next-door white neighbor is applicable, holds tribal relations to an Indian tribe any longer?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that it has ever had that exact question before it. I leave the Senator from Massachusetts, however, to construe section 1977 of the Revised Statutes. I do not think this bill changes that section, whatever it may be, because that provides that every person in a State or Territory shall be treated alike.

It is true that we have added in this bill that these Indians may sue and be sued. I do not think that adds anything to the force of the bill, though it was thought better to insert it. My own impression is that we can follow safely the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; which is that as long as these people have agents, as long as they have treaties with the Government of the United States still subsisting, (and this bill provides that the treaty of 1868 shall remain,) as long as they have annuities coming to them, as long as they are under the protection and government of the United States as distinguished from the protection of the State, under all these conditions and considerations they still remain with the tribal relation subsisting.

These are of course difficult questions, as the Senator from Massa-

These are of course difficult questions, as the Senator from Massachusetts propounds them. I do not think we are called upon to decide all these questions in advance. They are questions which as they arise will be decided by the courts of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the last word of section 4 to perfect it before the question is taken on striking out the section. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this question which I have put is one to which I may not improperly ask the consideration of every lawyer in the Senate and of every Senator in the body. It is said that this bill is a new departure in the Indian policy, and it is a bill intended to solve a great difficulty, to inaugurate a new system of dealing with the Indians, and certainly the committee reporting it ought to be able to tell us whether this bill be constitutional in this particular feature or not. feature or not.

Now, does this bill break up the tribal relation or not? If it does, then you cannot by law impose restraints upon the alienation of land and impose certain legal disqualifications upon these persons on acthen you cannot by law impose restraints upon the alienation of land and impose certain legal disqualifications upon these persons on account of their race, and describing them by their race, which you do not impose on other citizens. In order to sustain the bill, therefore, the committee came to the conclusion that they do break up the tribal relation. If they do not break up the tribal relation, the committee are asked what there is left of it. The Senator from Iowa says he does not know. They are asked whether, if the tribal relation continues, these men are subject to two conflicting systems of civil and criminal law, of inheritance, of the punishment of crime, &c. Polygamy is lawful among the Utes, as I am informed by authority, at this moment. When one of them settles on his reservation, by the force of this bill every law of the State of Colorado is applicable to him. Is he indictable under the law of Colorado if he keeps six or seven wives; and if he is to be, would it not be reasonable to put into the bill an express explanation of that fact to the Utes who are asked to accept the bargain? Does any Senator believe that any chief of the Ute tribe would venture to accept this bargain if this feature of the bill were explained to him, that all his wives are at once put away but one, that the marriage system of his tribe is destroyed for the future, and that he is punishable in all respects under the criminal laws of the State of Colorado, retaining, however, the liability to punishment also under the criminal system of his tribe?

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, if I understand the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Kansas Indian case, in the Michigan case, and in the New York case, that court held that as long as the tribal relation exists for any purpose at all the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States remains over the Indians, and the State has no right exists for any purpose at all the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States remains over the Indians, and the State has no right to tax their property as long as the tribal relation exists for any pur-pose at all. Now under this bill the Government of the United States has to maintain schools for the education of the Indian children, the Government has to pay annuities for these Indians. The bill pro-

wides for maintaining agents among them for these purposes—
Mr. HOAR. After this bill comes into force, may I ask the Senator, is the Indian punishable by any criminal law of his tribe for his crime for a murder committed on another Indian?

Mr. COKE. I think not. I think he is amenable to the law of the State or of the Territory where he resides.

Mr. HOAR. For what he does in Colorado to Colorado? Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Yes, sir. Then the whole criminal jurisdiction of the tribe over Mr. HOAR.

him is gone. Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. What of his contracts, the descent of his personal property, his marriage contracts, or otherwise in future?

Mr. COKE. They come under the law of the State or the Territory here he may be.

Mr. HOAR. So that a tribal relation without any civil or criminal attribute whatever is the tribal relation that remains. What is that? Mr. COKE. I will refer the Senator to the cases of the Kansas Indian and the Michigan Indian.

Mr. HOAR. They only applied to one particular.

Mr. COKE. In the case of the Kansas Indian, the Indian had his land in severalty, and he was a voter in the State of Kansas. He was under the laws of the State of Kansas because he was a voter there. Yet the Supreme Court held that notwithstanding these facts, there being an agent kept there who dealt with the Indians in matters between them and the Federal Government, the tribal relation existed in that sense which maintained over the Indians the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in the matter of taxation.

That was ruled in the Kansas case. It was also ruled exactly the same way in the New York case, and the Supreme Court say distinctly that they follow the lead of the religious tribals of the religious tribals.

that they follow the lead of the political authority. They say as long as the executive department of the Government claims the jurisdiction to deal with Indians through an agent, the judiciary must recognize the tribal relations of those Indians as existing, at least for some purposes, and when they exist for any purpose, as they did in the New York case and the Kansas case, it exempted the property of the Indians from State taxation.

This bill was drafted with a view to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this question. Agents are provided for, annuities are to be paid, schools must be maintained. The annuities and schools are provided by the Government of the United States, and must be carried on and consummated through agents appointed by the United States, who deal with these Indians just as agents dealt with the Kansas Indians and just as agents dealt with the New York Indians. The bill comes, according to my judgment, precisely within the research of those ages.

precisely within the reasoning of those cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. I moved the other day to strike out the seventh section of this bill in order that the fourth section might have some field of operation. The Senate voted me down upon that proposition. Now, I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts moves to strike out the fourth section in order that the seventh may have some field of operation; for the two sections are diametrically in conflict. The two sections bring two separate and distinct jurisdictions over the Indians at the same time. One brings the jurisdiction of the State or Territory in which he may reside over him whenever allotments of land are made to him and patents are issued; and the other brings all the provisions of title 28 of the Revised Statutes over every allotment, and of course every Indian upon the allotments at the same time. Thus we have a positive statute which enacts that they shall be a tribal body under the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States as a tribe, their affairs to be administered as a tribe, and then that every Indian in that tribe shall have his own rights secured under the laws of the United States and his own criminal and civil fiability as therein provided for; and at the same time he shall be amenable to the laws of the State of Colorado as they are provided in the statutes of that State. That is a clear impossibility.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to ask the Senator this question: Suppose section 4 be stricken out of the bill, what effect would section 1977 of the Revised Statutes still have upon this body of people?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not remember what section 1977 is. Mr. ALLISON. I will read it. Section 1977 provides:

All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other.

I should be glad to have the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Massachusetts together explain that.

Mr. MORGAN. This merely makes them, as applied to these Indians, citizens of the United States. They are treated as citizens, called citizens or the United States. They are treated as chizens, called citizens in that section. They, therefore, have conferred on them the rights of citizenship, so far as those rights are defined in that section. But the point I make is, that at the moment you complete the allotment, by the fact of allotment and patenting the land, you place the Indians within the jurisdiction of the State; and I understand that an Indian placed within the jurisdiction of a State cannot be an Indian beat maken the invisidition of his tribe and at the derstand that an Indian placed within the jurisdiction of a State cannot be an Indian kept under the jurisdiction of his tribe, and at the same time that you do that by section 7 of the bill, you provide that he shall be to all intents and purposes as much under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department as if he was a wild blanket Indian on the plains to-day. There is the difficulty.

Mr. COKE. The Senator from Alabama entirely misapprehends the meaning of section 7.

Mr. MORGAN. I asked the Senator from Texas on the first day we had a dayste about this matter to explain that and he said that the had a debate about this matter to explain that, and he said that the laws of the United States in reference to Indians were applicable to these Indians only so far as they could be made applicable. I never could understand that. The explanation makes the section still more could understand that. The explanation makes the section still more obscure. I really cannot get at the meaning of the committee on that subject; but I do understand, I think, that a lawyer would find the greatest possible difficulty in reading section 7 and section 4 in conjunction and making out of them anything like a system. He would get out of them incongruities and difficulties that are obvious upon the face of them.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the amendment striking out the last word and move to strike out the first word for the purpose of answering and move to strike out the first word for the purpose of answering the question of the Senator from Iowa. The Senator from Iowa asks what we make of section 1977, which is that-

All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, &c.

That is the first section of the civil-rights statute, the Senator understands.

derstands.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOAR. Now an Indian dwelling within his tribe is not a person within the jurisdiction of the United States within the meaning of that section. The tribe is within the jurisdiction, but the individual person is not so treated. Unless that be true the tribal relation of all the Indian tribes in the country is destroyed by the recent amendments to the Constitution, and it follows from that that any legislation which makes any provision for an Indian, or binding on legislation which makes any provision for an Indian, or binding on an Indian, or inhibits trading with Indians or buying their property, which is not applicable to white men, is unconstitutional. The Senator's question would bring with it if it were answered in the affirmative that result; that has never been held by any considerable number of persons in the country.

Mr. ALLISON. The treaties with these Ute Indians provide that they shall subject themselves to the jurisdiction of the United States, be subject to its laws. I should like to know how you could punish a tribe for the infraction of a law of the United States?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator claim that we can make a treaty with any particular set of American citizens through their head-men binding them, not because they have made a contract, but because some person with whom they sustain a certain political relation makes it? For instance, since the amendments could we make a treaty with the colored citizens of this country through their head-men and bind all the colored men, or could we make a treaty with the citizens of Iowa through their conspicuous men?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator allow the Chair to make a statement? When a speaker submits to interruption the time taken up by the person interrupting him comes out of the time of the speaker—out of his five minutes.

Mr. HOAR. I believe my five minutes are exhausted.

Mr. HOAR. I believe my five minutes are exhausted.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I take the floor to respond. In the first place, we never made any treaty with the colored people of the United States that I know of, but we have made treaties with the Indian tribes, several of them, and notably with this particular tribe in 1849, when they came to us from the jurisdiction of Mexico. The Utes then agreed that they would subject themselves to the laws of the United States. They had a right to make that agreement.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose they had not, would they not be subject to the laws of the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps they would without that agreement; but they specifically agreed that they would come within the jurisdiction and under the laws of the United States. Now, section 1977 says that they, being within the jurisdiction of the United States, being subject to its laws, shall have the right to sue and be sued as other people in the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. And all the rights of white citizens.

Mr. ALLISON. But that section 1977 is not intended to confine itself to citizens of the United States. By express terms it says every person in the United States. If I mistake not, although I have not the statute before me just now, that particular law was passed in 1866. It was intended that every person in the United States should be secure in his rights of person and property, whether he was a citizen or not a citizen.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I insist, as I did the other day, that this bill destroys the tribal relation of this tribe. Now, I am confident that it does, and I have got it from high authority. When the Senator from Texas, who is chairman of this committee, opened this discussion

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator permit me a moment?
Mr. TELLER. I do not want it to come out of my time.

Mr. COKE. I do not want to have any words with the Senator.

He understood what I meant, I think.

Mr. TELLER. I will hear the Senator when I get through. I call the attention of the Senate to what the Senator said, and the Senate must determine what he meant. This was his language:

The policy of the bill is to break up this large reservation, to individualize the Indians upon allotments of land; to break up their tribal relations and pass them under the jurisdiction of the Constitution and laws of the United States, &c.

Mr. COKE. If you read it all through you will see the qualification.

Mr. TELLER. I thought that was correct. I will read more if the Senator thinks I do not do him justice.

And the laws of the States and Territories in which the lands are situated, to aid them with stock and with agricultural implements, and by building houses upon their allotments of lands, to become self-supporting, to be cultivators of the soil; in a word, to place them on the highway to American citizenship, and to aid them in arriving at that conclusion as rapidly as can be done.

I discussed this question upon the basis of the statement made by the Senator from Texas. My objections to the bill were, many of them, based upon that statement. I believe I have understood always that he was a pretty good lawyer. I have had some little experience in that line myself. I interpreted the bill that way. When he came and said it was so, I was sure it was so, I was confident of it. I might have had doubts of my judgment, but I had not any when the chairman said so. I argued it upon that theory. Now what does it do? What is there left of the tribal relation? You support a school, says the Senator. You do that for white people, He says you have Inthe Senator. You do that for white people. He says you have Indian agents

Mr. ALLISON. The intercourse laws are maintained; annuities

Mr. TELLER. That is begging the question. Your bill has put the intercourse laws around them, which I say you cannot do if the tribal relation is extinct; and now you say because you put them around them, therefore the tribal relation is not extinguished? There is nothing left of the tribal relation here at all. The money paid to these Indians is not paid to the head-men; it is paid to individuals. The agent has no authority to pay it any more than any other agent of the Government. It is suggested to me that you might as well say that the Union Pacific Railroad is a tribe because you deal with it through an agent. That does not establish it. In the case of Holliday which has been sited from Michigan, the court leaks a reput day, which has been cited from Michigan, the court looked around evidently anxious to find that the tribal relation had continued for the purpose of punishing a man who had sold whisky to the In-

Mr. ALLISON. They will look around in the same way again.
Mr. TELLER. They said that he had an agent; that was one thing; and that he recognized the head-men by taking his money through the head-men, and upon that they said that the tribal relation for this purpose must be held to continue. In the New York case the tribal relation continued beyond a question. There was not any pretense that it had been dissolved. I say here the tribal relation will be sundered and dissolved by this bill. Then, as the Senator will be sundered and dissolved by this bill. Then, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, you have got these Indians liable to be punished by the State courts and probably by—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.
Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa says—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator from Massachusetts that he has spoken five minutes on this question.

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw the first amendment and move to strike out the seasond wind.

or the United States shall have the same right in every state and Territory to make and enforce contracts * * * as is enjoyed by white citizens," applies to Indians, because they are within the jurisdiction of the United States. Now, the same Revised Statutes in the next title but two prohibits any trading with Indians under a penalty. Does the Senator claim that that prohibition of trading with Indians, the special prohibition of selling them liquor and arms, is unconstitutional under the amendments or in conflict with section 1972. If he does not he concedes what I think he must on reflection, that this section was not intended to apply to individual Indians dwelling in their tribe, but that Indians dwelling in their tribe are excepted from all these general provisions as to civil rights.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts insist on his amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to strike out the fourth

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the entire amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.
Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment which I do not propose to discuss. I move to insert the following as a new section:

That if three-fourths of the adult male Indians shall refuse to accept or ratify the agreement herein contained, within four months from the passage of this act, all of the reservation east of the one hundred and eighth meridian shall be held and deemed to be public land of the United States and subject to disposal under the laws provided for the disposal of public lands, at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character. And the commission herein provided for shall report to Congress the amount of land so declared to be public land, and the amount that in the judgment of said commission would be a fair compensation for the same; but no money shall be paid in case of a failure on the part of said Indians to accept said agreement until Congress shall make appropriation-therefor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I wish to say a word on this bill, and, as I am afraid this will be the last amendment the Senator from Colorado will offer, I will avail myself of the opportunity.

It is very seldom that I explain any vote that I give or propose to give here, but I wish to do it on this occasion, chiefly because I find myself differing from my colleague, [Mr. BUTLER,] for whose opinions and abilities I have very great respect. I concur very fully in the views that he expressed so ably the other day upon the general Indian policy; and had he submitted a bill embodying those views, I should have sustained it most heartily; but there is no such bill before us, and the only question for our consideration is whether this bill shall be adopted or rejected.

I confess that it does not go as far as I desire; but recognizing the arduous and earnest labors of the committee in framing it, appreciating fully the zeal and the patriotism of the Secretary of the Interior in trying to settle this vexed and menacing question, and believing that it is a step in the right direction, I cannot withhold my support from it. Its advocates say that its passage will in all probability avert an Indian war. That consideration alone would control my But apart from that, I believe that should it become a law and its action prove beneficent, it will lead to the abandonment of that false and fatal policy which we inherited from our mother counthat false and fatal policy which we inherited from our mother country, and which we have retained for so many years, long after England has given it up and pursued that wiser and more humane one adopted by the French. In the hope that this bill, should it pass, will lead to the adoption of a wiser and a broader and a well-defined Indian policy, one that will do justice to the Indian and to the white man, to all the citizens of the country, and will give protection to all, I shall support the bill.

Mr. THURMAN, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) I find myself completely puzzled by the bill, I must say. Section 4 provides:

That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every of the said Indians shall be subject to the provisions of section 1977 of the Revised Statutes and to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside, with the right to sue and be sued in the courts thereof.

We know what that section 1977 is; it is the first section of the old civil-rights bill. Section 4 puts these Indians who shall have lands civil-rights bill. Section 4 puts these Indians who shall have lands allotted to them as completely under the jurisdiction of the United States as are the Senators of this body; that is, if section 4 shall be, when passed, a valid law, these Indians will be as completely under the jurisdiction of the United States as are the Senators in this Chamber. Then, what is the consequence? The first sentence of article 14 of the Constitution immediately operates upon them; it operates proprio vigore; and no law that can be passed can prevent its operation; it is utterly impossible to prevent its operation by law. The moment you bring these Indians under the jurisdiction of the United States that moment this clause of the Constitution operates upon them; and the clause is in these words: and the clause is in these words:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

Can any one doubt that these Indians were born in the United States? Was it intended, does this fourteenth article of the amendments mean to exclude Indians who were born on an Indian reserva-tion? Is that reservation not to be considered as embraced by the words "the United States?" I do not think any such construction as that can be placed upon it; but it means that all persons born in the territory of the United States, whether that teritory is composed in part of an Indian reservation or otherwise, shall, the moment they become subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, be citizens of the United States. The words "subject to the jurisdiction there-of" were put in for the express purpose of excluding the Indians; but the moment you bring an Indian within the jurisdiction of the United States that moment he becomes a citizen of the United States. ments mean to exclude Indians who were born on an Indian reserva-

I know very well that Congress utterly disregarded this provision when it removed the Winnebagoes from Wisconsin, who were just as much citizens of Wisconsin as were the Senators from Wisconsin on much citizens of Wisconsin as were the Senators from Wisconsin on this floor; and after removing them, and spending a hundred thousand dollars in doing it, they all worked their way back. For the life of me I cannot see how, if that section when passed will be a valid law, any man can deny that these Indians, the allottees, as they are called according to this new-coined word, will be citizens of the United States, with every right that belongs to a citizen.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator, after that has happened—
Mr. THURMAN. My five minutes are out.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator, and he may answer out of my time, because I entirely sympathize with his argument, whether he does not also agree in thinking that, when that thing has happened, the power to subject those Indians to a tribal law, either as a punishment for crime or in regulating their civil relations, is ended?

ment for crime or in regulating their civil relations, is ended?

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think we would allow an Indian tribe to make laws for the Senator from Massachusetts or myself, and I think when an Indian becomes a citizen of the United States he has just the same right as the Senator from Massachusetts has.

has just the same right as the Senator from Massachusetts has,
Mr. HOAR. That answers the question as I anticipated.
Mr. ALLISON. The Supreme Court has otherwise decided.
Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that the Supreme Court has otherwise decided. On the contrary, all that I understand is that the Supreme Court has settled that, the tribal relation continuing in all other respects, the mere permitting an Indian to vote, not abrogating the thousand other relations, or the mere allowing him to own a tract of land in fee, not abrogating his other relations, did not of itself alone destroy the tribal relation. But here is a measure which enacts that every law, civil and criminal, applicable to his white neighbor shall govern the Indian; further, that he shall be separated from the society of his chief and dwell on land which he owns himself in fee.

The Supreme Court has never dealt with that question.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to hear the Senator say what he thinks ought to be done. Here we have this fourth section; we have also the seventh section. I think the seventh section is essential for the protection of the Indians. Senators say they are inconsistent with each other. Do I understand the Senator to advise really that the fourth section shall be stricken from the bill?

Mr. HOAR. The committee come in here with a proposed statute which seems to me clearly unconstitutional in its main and principal features. I point out to them as well as I can the difficulty and they fail, so far as I can understand, to answer the difficulty. I do not be-lieve the Senator from Iowa would wish to be subjected to a very rigid cross-examination as to whether he is satisfied with his own answer, but that of course I do not know. It does not seem to me that when that state of things appears the committee charged with this subject should simply turn around upon us and ask, "you, Senator, what do you want to do?" I have not been charged with drawing a bill on this subject, but must vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I offer one other amendment. I move to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That no patent shall issue to the head of a family until he shall settle on land so allotted to him and shall be a resident on the same at the time of the issuing of said patent; that no patents shall issue to the other class of persons named herein until at least one-fourth of the heads of families to whom said allotments are made shall have settled on the land alloted to them, or such person shall settle on the land allotted him.

I offer that because I am supposing if these Indians take this land in severalty and acquire their deeds, they will still herd together in a reservation and will not occupy their lands. It will be impossible to deal with them there; it will be impossible to obtain the title either to the Government of the United States or to anybody else, for the majority of these Indians who receive this title will be infants. Now, way to get over the difficulty, the title must still remain in these infants until they come of age. I want the Government to withhold the title a reasonable time until they can see whether they are going to accept it, and whether it will not be as I have predicted, a necessity looking to the interest of the Indians alone, if you do not look to ours, to make some new arrangement. It cannot hurt the Indians and may help them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is a vote upon any amendment reserved ?

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, to be known as section 11, be reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any other? If there is no other reserved amendment, the question is on concurring in the other amendments to the bill.

The remaining amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendment on which a separate vote is asked. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to the following amendment:

SEC. 11. That nothing herein contained shall prevent the settlement of the Southern Utes or the Uncompander Utes on the lands of the Uintah reservation in Utah, if any of said Indians desire to settle there.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. HOAR called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to state that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] is paired on this question with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Dawes,] both of whom are absent.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte]

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] in his seat. Some days since I paired with him on this question and he is probably relying still on the pair, in view of which fact I will withdraw my vote. I voted "yea." The Senator from Maryland would vote against the bill if he were here.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] on general questions. I do not know how either of them would vote on this bill if they were here.

Mr. VOORHEES. My colleague [Mr. McDonald] left the Senate Chamber to go West this evening. He told me that he had paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] but how either of them would vote on this question I do not know.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Wisconsin would vote against the bill.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of the Senate is the Geneva award bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business known as the Geneva award bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes up without a motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think not. The bill was postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had the matter looked into and found that on the last day the bill was laid aside informally to take up the bill which has just passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the last day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the last day when the bill was before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the constant practice, I submit with great respect to the Chair, has been, where a bill is laid aside informally and is not taken up before that day's adjournment, and the unfinished business goes on, that it loses its place. It makes no difference in this instance except as a precedent, because I presume everybody will vote to take up the Geneva award bill.

Mr. HOAR. There was unanimous consent and an express stipution.

lation when it was laid aside that the Geneva award bill should come up as soon as the Ute Indian bill was disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; that is another thing. My only point of order is that it was laid aside informally on a day before to-day, and it does not come up of itself.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the consideration of the Geneva award bill, which was the order of the day, be resumed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The constant practice of the Senate, I think, has been as I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not so understood it to be, but the Chair will inquire of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr.

FERRY,] who has had larger experience, what has been the usage in

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Vermont is correct in the statement

he has made

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Geneva award bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not understand the Senator from Vermont to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts that there was an explicit and unanimous consent, quite different from an informal laying aside, that the bill does not come up of course.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Vermont stated that where unanimous consent was given that it should be taken up it was quite a different question from the ordinary laying aside, as in the latter case the bill would come up on the same day, but not on a subsequent day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That states it exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair understands the usage of the Senate to have been that where unanimous consent has been given to that effect the bill comes up of itself and the Chair. been given to that effect the bill comes up of itself, and the Chair will so rule. The Geneva award bill is before the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. I merely wish to take the floor on the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I made a report from a committee of conference this morning, which upon the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] was informally laid aside. I now desire to call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule requires that the question shall be put, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of Mr. BLAINE. That is, provided it does not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. This does not displace the Geneva award bill? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all. Mr. EDMUNDS. That depends on the rule. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is a privileged question. Mr. BLAINE. No, a conference report is not privileged in the

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think it is.
Mr. PENDLETON. Such a report can be made at any time.
Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he ask unanimous consent to take up the conference report without prejudice to the Geneva award bill. That will settle the whole thing.
Mr. PENDLETON. I do not antagonize it with the Geneva award

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want a construction of the rule. I object to unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The forty-ninth rule is in these words:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except while the Journal is being read, or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and, when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report shall immediately be put, and shall be determined without debate.

This morning, by unanimous consent, the Senate resolved to wait, and the question was not put; but the rule is imperative that the question shall be put. Senators, as many as are in favor of proceeding to the consideration of this report will say "ay;" those opposed "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes have it; and the report is before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And let it be read. It has not been read.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. EDMUNDS. And let it be read. It has not been read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill No. 885, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment 1: That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1, in disagreeing to section 2 of Senate bill No. 885, and agree to section 2 with the following amendment:

"Provided, That the Superintendent of the Census shall collect and collate, as far as possible by experts and agents and from officers of the Government, information in relation to the ownership of the public debt of the United States;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to section 6, and agree to the same, with the following amendment: strike out all after the words "iffeen days," in line 27 of Senate bill 885, down to the word "and," in line 35; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, which is to strike out all of section 7 of Senate bill 885; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment 4: That the House recede from its amendment numbered 4, striking out all of section 8 and concur in section 8, with an amendment in lines 2 and 3 of Senate bill 885, striking out the words "three hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment 5: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, as to collecting and publishing the statistics of the population, industries, and resources of Alaska, and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment 5: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5,

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARLAND. With the understanding now that the Geneva award bill is next in order-

I do not so understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has always understood when a conference report is made pending a question before the Senate, and the conference report is considered and disposed of, it does not displace the pending order, but that upon the disposition of the conference report the consideration of the pending order is resumed. The Chair believes that has been the universal practice of the Senate.

The Chair believes that has been the universal practice of the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. That is right.

Mr. EATON. I have been trying to catch the eye of the Chair for a long while. I want to move to lay aside informally what the Chair has declared to be the present order of the Senate in order to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill, the consular and diplomatic bill. I apprehend that it will not take over half an hour to pass the bill; and, therefore, I should like to have it considered in the morning. I do not care to have it considered now, but I shall bring it up in the morning hour to-morrow, if possible, so as not to interfere with the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it come up the first thing to-morrow after the morning business.

Mr. EATON. Yes, the first thing in the morning, after the routine business.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that he make his motion to-morrow.

Mr. EATON: I shall make it to-morrow unless it obtains now.
Mr. FERRY. Nothing will prevent its being made to-morrow.
Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire if it be the purpose of Senators having the various appropriation bills in charge to make like motions with regard to all of them?

Mr. EATON. I hope so.
Mr. HOAR. I hope not.
Mr. ALLISON. This is the only one likely to interfere with the

Mr. ALLISON. This is the only one likely to interfere with the Geneva award bill.

Mr. HOAR. I certainly understood when consent was given to taking up the Ute Indian bill that it was the purpose of the Senate and of the gentleman who moved that bill, that the Geneva award and of the gentleman who moved that bill, that the Geneva award bill should come immediately on the disposition of the Ute bill. Of course I do not wish to interfere with the gentlemen who have charge of the business of the Senate, as the Senator from Connecticut has in this instance, by making objections that are needless. Still I trust that the Geneva award bill will not substantially lose its place.

Mr. EATON. It will not. I have no idea that the bill which I propose that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of will take over thirty minutes. I cannot conceive that it will.

Mr. FERRY. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that if the motion of the Senator from Connecticut prevails it displaces the Geneva award bill.

it displaces the Geneva award bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I am aware of that, and I was going to make a suggestion to the Senator from Connecticut to postpone his motion until to-morrow morning. Let the Geneva award bill be the unfin-ished business for to-morrow, and then I think the bill the Senator from Connecticut has in charge can be accommodated. I cannot yield to him this evening for the reason that it would displace the unfinished business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend from Connecticut, my colleague on the Appropriation Committee, proposes after the morning business to-morrow, to bring up the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. We believe that the bill can be passed before half past one o'clock. He will make the motion to-morrow morning that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. FERRY. But if the motion is agreed to to-day, displacing the Geneva award bill, the consular and diplomatic bill will be the unfinished business for to-morrow and may displace the Geneva award.

finished business for to-morrow, and may displace the Geneva award bill for the entire day.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We simply give notice that we shall call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. EATON. I withdraw my motion, and that will end the con-

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAINE. That leaves the Geneva award bill the unfinished business for to-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.
Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 12, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.
The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN POSTAL LAW.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to correct an error which has crept into section 5480 of the Resent to correct an error which has crept into section 5450 of the Revised Statutes, making the present law defective. The substitution of the word "or" in the second line for the word "to," occurred during the enrollment of the bill, and after it had been engrossed and passed from this House. I ask the Clerk to read the first paragraph of a letter which has been forwarded to me by the Post-Office Department, and which will, I think, give an explanation of what I desire this proximate beyonders. this morning to have done.

The Clerk read as follows:

After a conversation with United States District Attorney Bliss, I have thought it best to write you in reference to section 3480, Revised Statutes. Mr. Bliss claims that he wrote to the Postmaster-General on the same subject two or three years ago, but nothing was ever done about it. The authorities here are unwilling to go into cases under that section, Judge Treat holding that the law is defective on account of the word "or," in the second line. He says it should be "to," which would make the law read: "If any person having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected," &c.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think the best course to be pursued at this time would be to re-enact section 5480 of the Revised Statutes with the correction made of the word "to" for the word "or"

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Should this not go to the Committee on the Judiciary?

on the Judiciary?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It is a very simple matter. The error which crept into the enrollment of the statute is recognized, and all I propose to do at this time is to correct that error. I examined the matter and find the word "to" was in the engrossed bill as it went from this House.

Mr. REED. I think it might as well go through now. There is no necessity to refer it to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask, then, by unanimous consent to introduce for passage at this time a bill (H. R. No. 5719) to revise and re-enact section 5480 of the Revised Statutes.

There was no objection; and the bill was received, and read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 5480 shall be reenacted, so as to read as follows:

enacted, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 5480. If any person having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected by either opening or intending to open correspondence or communication with any other person, whether resident within or outside of the United States, by means of the Post-Office establishment of the United States, or by inciting such other person to open communication with the person so devising or intending, shall, in and for executing such scheme or artifice, or attempting so to do, place any letter or packet in any post-office of the United States, or take or receive any therefrom, such person, so misusing the Post-Office establishment, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500, and by imprisonment for not more than eighteen months, or by both such punishments. The indictment, information, or complaint may severally charge offenses to the number of three when committed within the same six calendar months; but the court thereupon shall give a single sentence, and shall proportion the punishment especially to the degree in which the abuse of the Post-Office establishment enters as an instrument into such fraudulent scheme and device.

The bill was ordered to be engreesed and read a third time; and

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY POSTS, RIO GRANDE FRONTIER.

Mr. UPSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Public Calendar Senate bill No. 53 with a view to putting it upon its immediate passage.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 53) making appropriations for the erection of suitable posts for the protection of the Rio Grande frontier.

protection of the Rio Grande frontier.

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $200,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of acquiring sites and erecting thereon such military posts on or near the Rio Grande frontier as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of War for the adequate protection thereof: Provided, That none of said appropriation shall be used for the purposes aforesaid until a valid title to said sites be vested in the United States: And provided further, That the State of Texas shall duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to assess or tax said sites, or any of them, or any improvements placed thereon for military purposes, so long as the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

Passed the Senate December 11, 1879.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it proposed to pass the bill at this time?
Mr. UPSON. That is my wish, if possible.
Mr. DUNNELL. Has this bill been reported from any committee? Mr. UPSON. It has been reported unanimously from the commit-tee, and is now pending before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BROWNE. A precisely similar bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

Mr. UPSON. It has been twice favorably reported.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON, ETC., G. A. R., MUNCY, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 631, granting six pieces of condemned cannon, &c., to Post No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, for the purpose of constructing an inclosure and for monumental purposes, be taken up and put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 631) donating six condemned cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, for monumental purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to deliver, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, to Post No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, six condemned cannon and cannon-balls, to be used in ornamenting a monument erected in honor of the deceased soldiers of said Muncy, Pennsylvania.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the PUBLIC BUILDING, PADUCAH, KENTUCKY.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for a few minutes to permit me to ask concurrence in certain unimportant amendments of the Senate to a House bill that will cause no debate.

Mr. McMILLIN. I withdraw the demand for that purpose.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I ask concurrence in the Senate amendments to House bill No. 5622, to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Paducah, State of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, after the word "made," insert:

"So that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for the purchase of a site and the full completion of said building beyond the sum herein appropriated, upon plans to be previously approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."

In line 17, after the word "building," insert:

"Which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys."

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. These amendments, in my judgment, were unnecessary, as the House bill was perfect; but I ask the concurrence in the Senate amendments that this just measure may be passed without further delay.

Mr. ATKINS. Does this require an additional appropriation?

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. No; it simply puts an additional limitation upon an appropriation already made in the House bill, and which limitation I think was not necessary.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the

Mr. OSCAR TURNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. and to the State of Kentucky.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now demand the regular order.

BILLS, ETC., FOR REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, commencing with the State of Alabama, for the introduction on leave of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures are in order, and also resolutions calling for executive information, for reference to appropriate committees.

LEAVITT POST-MARKING MACHINE.

Mr. SHELLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5720) authorizing the Postmaster-General to purchase and adopt the Leavitt card-canceling and post-marking machine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLES OF WAR.

Mr. LEWIS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5721) to amend articles 104 and 114 of the Articles of War; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COLUMBUS F. PERRY AND ELIZABETH H. GILMER.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5722) for the relief of Columbus F. Perry and Elizabeth H. Gilmer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

LIEU LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BERRY (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5723) explanatory of an act granting lieu lands to the State of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN CLARKEN.

Mr. PHELPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5724) granting a pension to John Clarken, of Waterbury, in the State of Connecticut, late a private in Company A, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. PHELPS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5725) amending the acts approved January 25, 1879, and March 3, 1879, relating to pensions, so as to extend for three years from the 1st of July, 1880, the time within which applications for arrears may be filled with the Commissioner of Pensions and be granted from the time of the death or displayers of the coldinarion expects of the coldinarion and the second of the control of the coldinarion of the Commissioner of Pensions and be granted from the time of the death or discharge of the soldiers on account of whose service the arrears are claimed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ISAAC E. PALMER.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5726) for the relief of Isaac E. Palmer; which was read a first and second time; referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

MATERIALS IN CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, introduced a bill (H.R. No. 5727) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sall vessels for foreign account; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Whereas under the present rules it is evident that sufficient time will not be afforded for the due consideration of legislation absolutely necessary for the good government of the District: Therefore,

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee be, and he is hereby, instructed to give notice to the House, as required by the rules, of his intention to move an amendment to the rules providing that hereafter every second and fourth Monday of each month, after the reading of the Journal, shall be devoted to the consideration of business pertaining to the District.

SALE OF PROPERTY IN NEW YORK.

SALE OF PROPERTY IN NEW YORK.

• Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2268) to authorize the sale of certain property in the city of New York, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I reserve the right to object until the bill shall be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster-General are hereby authorized and directed to sell, on such terms as they may deem best, at public auction, on or before the 1st day of June, A. D. 1880, in the city of New York, the land and premises formerly occupied as the site of the post-office in the city of New York, lying upon Nassan street, between Cedar and Liberty streets, in the said city: Provided, kowever, That they shall not sell the same for a less sum than $300,000, and that out of the proceeds of said sale they shall reimburse to the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York the sum of $50,000, which its members and others, at their solicitation, contributed toward the purchase, for the purpose of retaining the post-office in Nassan street.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to the present considera-

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hope the gentleman will not object.

I will state here there are reasons why the Government should dispose of this property at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will withhold my objection until I hear a statement from the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will look at the rule and see if the gentleman from New York has the right to report this bill under the

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Many years ago the Government, aided by the Chamber of Commerce of New York, purchased in the city of New York a piece of ground on which to erect a post-office. Subsequently it was determined, for various reasons well known to the Government, that the location was not desirable, and proceedings were had to erect a post-office on a portion of what is known as the park opposite the Astor House, in the city of New York. The local government of New York virtually contributed for a merely nominal consideration a piece of ground, on which has since been erected a new post-office, with accommodations for the United States courts. The old site, bought some years ago, has been consequently abandoned, and the Government has been in the habit of leasing it or renting it from year to year until Congress should take some action in the premises.

It is the wish of the Government and it is the desire of the city of New York, and indeed of every person familiar with the subject, that this old post-office rookery shall be reconstructed and that an edifice which will be of advantage to our great commercial emporium shall be erected in its place. For this purpose this bill authorizes the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury to put up the piece of ground at public auction at the minimum value of $300,000, to be sold to the highest bidder above that upset price. I suppose the gen-sold to the highest bidder above that upset price. I suppose the gentleman from Illinois with this explanation is satisfied.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am not satisfied that this bill ought to be acted upon in this hasty manner. I have been informed that there are good reasons why it should not be passed. I am told there are $75,000 now paid by the Government for rents of buildings in New York, and that this could be made serviceable for the purposes for which rents are now paid. There are some other facts I would wish to present to the House if an opportunity should be given to consider this bill more deliberately. Meanwhile I must insist on my objection.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely misinformed. The buildings on this ground are unfit for any public purpose whatever for Government uses. There can be no reason founded on public good which will justify any opposition to the passage of this bill immediately.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are some who differ from the gentleman from New York upon that point.

The SPEAKER. In clause 47 of Rule XI it is provided that—

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time upon the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue.

The effect of this bill would be to produce revenue; and, under The effect of this bill would be to produce revenue; and, under that clause, the Chair thinks the gentleman from New York has the right to report it at any time from the Committee on Ways and Means. But the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] as the Chair understands, makes the point of order that the bill parts with the property of the United States, and should therefore be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this case is not the ordinary one where the Government parts with property. We propose to part with this property for its full value, providing that it shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder.

est bidder.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am told if the Government de-

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am told if the Government desired to purchase that same property they could not purchase it for less than $1,000,000; and yet it is proposed to sell it for $300,000.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It is proposed to sell it at public auction to the highest bidder at a sum not less than $300,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I insist on the point of order. The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; that the bill parts with the property of the United States and should be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Very well, let it go there.

The bill (H. R. No. 5801) to authorize the sale of certain property in the city of New York was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed. to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

I rise to submit a motion.

The SPEAKER. The regular order now is the morning hour. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Tennessee desires to proceed with the Army bill?

Mr. ATKINS. That is the purpose for which I rose; but I do not which is a motion at this moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the first proceeding would be to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with in order that the House may go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill priation bill.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the morning hour was dispensed with.

Mr. ATKINS. Before submitting the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the Army appropriation bill, I desire to have some indication from the House as to the length of time to be allowed for general debate. I believe it is generally conceded on this side that there is no desire on the part of any gentleman on this side of the House to address the House upon the subject now pending in Committee of the Whole. Several gentlemen on the other side have already addressed the House. Whether tlemen on the other side have already addressed the House. Whether or not there are more who desire to continue the discussion, I am not advised. Of course, I wish to accommodate myself to any reasonable proposition in submitting the motion to limit general debate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know of two or three gentlemen who desire to speak; two of them are ready now to speak. I do not think there is a desire on this side of the House for a very extended debate; but I do not know of any one who feels authorized to name a precise limit to the debate. I think I can say this, that there is not likely to be any lengthy debate. So far as I am concerned, I have no desire to have it continued unreasonably. It is possible that the debate may close to-day, though some might desire to have it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. ATKINS. I would ask the gentleman if two hours would not be sufficient? That would bring us to half past three o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are three gentlemen who desire to speak, and I suppose there is another, but I have not his word for it. I have the word of three now in the House who desire to speak; of four who desire to speak; but they might speak within three hours.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does seem to me that we should limit this debate. I have never before known the minority to dictate absolutely the time to be allowed for debate on any bill. This debate ran all day Saturday, and it seems to me that this side of the House should have some assurance that the debate shall be confined within some reasonable limit.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have given some assurance, the best I could. I do not think it unreasonable that three hours at least should be given for this general debate, because there are four gentlemen here now who desire to speak. I tell the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Blount] candidly that I think they can speak within the three hours. Then there is another gentleman who, I know, desires to speak, but he is not here to speak for himself.

Mr. ATKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Blount] that I have generally found the best way in the House to get out of a difficulty of this kind was to allow gentlemen to settle it themselves. Therefore, I have not been disposed to fix a limit for this debate; but I think gentlemen on the other side must themselves see the necessity of limiting this discussion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no doubt we could get through to-morrow of the property replacements of the property replacements.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman suggested three hours.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said that there were four who desired to speak. I am told now that there are five who have expressed a desire to obtain an hour each, and they tell me their names are down for that purpose. That does not still include the gentleman to whom I have referred, who is now absent. I will tell the gentleman that I think we can get through early to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. SPARKS. Why not have it understood that the debate shall close with to-day !

Mr. BLOUNT. I have never known such terms imposed on the majority by the minority.

Mr. HAWLEY. The right of the minority to debate is quite equal to that of the majority.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt of that; but we on this side have the right to indicate a reasonable time for debate.

Mr. CONGER. I have no doubt the Chair has on his list a large number of names of gentlemen who have expressed a desire to speak on this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole has such a list.

Mr. CONGER. I mean the chairman of the Committee of the Whole. Gentlemen on the other side have repeatedly said that all the debate that was desired should be allowed to this side of the House. I have been informed by five or six gentlemen at least that in view of the fact that debate was to be general they have prepared and desire to speak on this subject. I presume there are seven or eight gentlemen who have made their preparation to speak, some a longer and some a shorter time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that some of those gentle-

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that some of those gentlemen desire only fifteen minutes each.

Mr. CONGER. I say "some a shorter and some a longer time." I believe the reaching a vote will be facilitated by allowing the debate to go on without now fixing a definite time for its limit. No one will occupy the time without having something to say, and of course the other side have no desire to resort to dilatory motions or anything of that kind to secure time for debate.

Therefore I would suggest that debate be allowed to run on as it has done on this political question; let gentlemen have an opportunity to debate it. I speak the more freely because I do not know that I desire myself to occupy any of the time. I have been requested by gentlemen on this side to endeavor to secure to them an opportunity for debate. Therefore I would say that the debate should be tunity for debate. Therefore I would say that the debate should be allowed to go on, and when it reaches beyond what might seem to be a reasonable limit, then the House can take action.

Mr. WARNER. It has already exceeded a reasonable limit.

Mr. ATKINS. As I have already shown, I have every disposition to accommodate the wishes of the House in this matter so far as I am concerned. I am perfectly satisfied that a large majority of the House desire to limit this debate to to-day, to bring it to a close this afternoon. And I think that by half past four o'clock.

Mr. BLOUNT. Say four o'clock.

Mr. ATKINS. No; half past four; and I believe that by that time everything can be said on the subject that gentlemen desire to say. I have no idea that any gentleman on the other side expects to address the House for an hour; perhaps no one will speak more than half an hour. There will be a good many fifteen-minute speeches, and perhaps some of thirty minutes. I think that at half past four o'clock we ought to bring this debate to a conclusion. Gentlemen on the other side of the House will hardly say that we on this side have not been liberal toward them in this matter.

Mr. ROBESON. Does the gentleman mean that this limitation shall apply to general debate only?

Mr. ATKINS. No, sir; all debate.

Mr. ROBESON. Who can say what we may want to do in the way of amendment?

The SPEAKER. The House cannet out off the right to effort mean.

of amendment?

The SPEAKER. The House cannot cut off the right to offer amendments, or to debate under the five-minute rule any amendment yet to be offered.

Mr. ATKINS. Then let the limitation apply to general debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. In that case I hope an earlier time will be fixed for closing debate. I trust we may finish this bill to-day. Half past four or a little later is our usual time for adjournment; and we must have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Let the debate close at four o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. We desire to aid in agreeing upon a time for the conclusion of this debate. I have inquired of gentlemen now present who wish to speak; and so far as I can find, three hours will just about accommodate them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That will carry the debate to half past four o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. I speak for gentlemen on this side: I do not know past four o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. I speak for gentlemen on this side; I do not know anything about the wishes of gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. WEAVER. So far as I know, not a member of the "third party" wishes to speak on this question.

Mr. CONGER. I have been told that the "third party" were a little scared by the threat which was made, and do not wish to risk anything. [Langhter.]

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] reduced this thing to a very small mouse—sans claws, sans tail, sans teeth, sans everything; and the "third party" is not afraid of a small mouse like that.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Army appropriation bill; and, pending this motion, I move that all general discussion upon the bill close at four o'clock

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the gentleman will say half past four o'clock, That will just allow sufficient time for gentlemen on this side who wish to speak. I have done my best to be reasonable in this matter. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee so as to fix half past four o'clock as a time for closing de-

Mr. ATKINS. At the suggestion of a great many gentlemen, I agree to modify my motion by substituting half past four for four o'clock.

Mr. CONGER. This limitation applies only to general debate?

The SPEAKER. It is not in the power of the House to cut off the right to offer amendments in Committee of the Whole or to cut off debate under the five-minute rule upon any amendment not yet offered.

The motion of Mr. ATKINS, as modified, to close general debate on the Army appropriation bill at half-past four o'clock to-day, was agreed to agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to centennial commissioners at Nashville,

Tenne

An act (H. R. No. 2817) giving the consent of Congress to an agree-ment or compact entered into between the States of New York and

Vermont respecting the boundary between said States; and
An act (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, on motion of Mr. WILLIS, was referred, with the accompanying documents, to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 12th of February last on the subject of negotiations concerning the immigration of Chinese to the United States, I transmit a report of the Secretary of State, to whom the matter was referred.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, April 12, 1880.

PATRICK CRANE.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5800) granting a pension to Patrick Crane; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. ATKINS, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. Springer in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appro-sumed the consideration of the third. R. R. No. 3525) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. On this bill by order of the House general debate will close at half past four o'clock—three hours from this time.

Mr. HISCOCK obtained the floor, and yielded five minutes to Mr.

PRICE.
Mr. Chairman, through the courtesy of the gentleman from New York I have the floor for five minutes. In that time I do not propose to say anything about constitutional law or about the proceedings in the English Parliament, or anything of that kind. I have but one object; and that is to examine what will be the practical common sense operation of this amendment if adopted—only that and nothing more.

This amendment provides four things: First, that troops shall not be subsisted when they are used for a certain purpose. Now, I submit to gentlemen on both sides of the House whether that is practicable: whether, in short, there is any common sense in it. To-day mit to gentlemen on both sides of the House whether that is practicable; whether, in short, there is any common sense in it. To-day we will suppose there is an election. A telegram brings the news that there is a riot in Baltimore; and the troops are ordered there. They have had their breakfasts, and they leave at ten o'clock. They come back at four o'clock. They have been gone six hours. Transportation is furnished by the railroad company, which is compelled to furnish transportation whether willing or not. The appropriation made by this bill is appropriated whether the troops are used for that or any other purpose; it makes no difference what they are used for. The equipment is furnished, also. There is no more equipment required if they are called for duty of that kind than if they are not called for any such duty; so that is paid for. It neither increases nor diminishes the amount paid for equipment or for subsistence. So those two things are disposed of, and the appropriation remains the nor diminishes the amount paid for equipment or for subsistence. So those two things are disposed of, and the appropriation remains the same as is now provided in the bill, whether this rider is adopted or not. Transportation, as I said before, is either done on foot and costs nothing, or else is done at the expense of a railroad company; which would be paid for, if at all, by appropriation to be made for that purpose. Then there is but one more point left; and that is the compensation. Now, the compensation of a soldier is about fifty cents a day; very little more or less. The compensation is paid for by the month or by the year, as you please; and now I ask gentlemen on this floor, without any reference to party predilection, whether when the end of the year comes or the end of the month and you propose at the counter to pay the soldier the small pittance he has earned, whether you propose to deduct from it the few hours he has been engaged in this provided when I would be a converted to the propose to deduct from the few hours he has been engaged in this provided when I would be a converted to the provided when I would be a converted pose to deduct from it the few hours he has been engaged in this particular duty. I undertake to say without fear of successful contradiction there is not a democrat or republican on this floor who will for one moment say that shall be done. So this amendment is as utterly harmless and utterly void of point as anything possibly can be. There is simply nothing in it; and the chairman of the Military Committee has properly designated it when he says it does not amount to anything. We fought over it. My friend on my right says it is cowardly. That is his saying; I have nothing to do with that. I am not treating this in a partisan view at all; I am treating it, as I said before, in a practical, common-sense view of the question before us as legislators.

Now, it is evident, without argument, subsistence, equipment, transportation, and compensation will be paid, whether the troops are used for one purpose or another. And if you strike anybody by this amendment, you will strike the man who is working for fifty cents a day; and who has simply obeyed orders and who is powerless to resist this unjust treatment; and there is not a man on this floor who will undertake to say he will do that, because that would be mean and

Another thing. There is not a man on this floor, on either side of this Chamber, who will say for a moment that if it be necessary to protect the ballot-box from violence, from bulldozing, from the "short boys" and the "dead rabbits" of this country, it should not be done. A free and fair election is what every man claims to be in favor of, and what I believe every man necessarily is in favor of. If, then, we are to have a free and fair election in all parts of this Union, and it be necessary an armed force shall protect orderly and well-disposed peaceable citizens in the exercise of the elective franchise, no man of either party will dare say to the country, or to the House even, he is not in favor of it. No, sir; the ballot-box is the foundation-stone of our liberties, both civil and religious, and when we fail to protect it we are not very far from an archy and destruction. The history of all republics proves that, and it is not necessary for me to argue it. And when it comes that the disorderly and dissatisfied and law-breaking part of the community is to control the elections of this country, then, sir, not very far down the vista of coming time can be seen the ruin and overthrow of this republic, and the proudest monument the people of this country, in the last century, have erected to the per-petuity of civil and religious freedom will have hanging over its top

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how much time I am allowed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Hiscock.] I understand I have the floor through his courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has been allowed twenty-five

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know I shall occupy that time. The pending amendment reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Mr. Chairman, I do not regard that amendment as being simply a subject for merriment as is suggested by gentlemen on this floor, nor do I regard the issue involved in it as being unimportant, and of such diminutive proportions as fitly to be characterized as a mouse born the democratic party after much labor. But if it be so that the dimensions of the little animal render it seemingly inconsequential, let us see to it that we are not misled as to its relative importance. The father of Philip of Macedon admonished his son not to despise the opinions and influence of the meanest and the lowest; "for," said he, "remember, my son, a lion may die by the puncture of an asp." I am not clear the republican lamb may not die by the sting of this democratic asp.

My friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] it was, who likened this amendment to a mouse, a mouse brought forth as the only result of the labor of the democratic mountain. And he is inclined to treat it with contempt. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in his own State of Maine, within the past six months, an animal of much smaller dimensions than this drew the people of that State to the brink of revolution; that a less important question than the one involved here drove the people of Maine so near to the verge of revolution. lution that troops were stationed about the State-house and held in maintenant troops were statement about the state-house and held in readiness to quell a threatened insurrection.

Mr. FRYE. But I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact about Maine, that the democrats there, instead of calling the troops, called together a guard selected by themselves, and six of these turned out to be State-prison convicts.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But what I desired was to call the gentleman's attention to the real consequence of the pending amendment when compared with the source and cause of the trouble in his own State. The governor of the State of Maine and the learned counselors about him were, as they solemnly asserted, unable to determine what the word "ditto" meant when found in election returns. They dethe word "ditto" meant when found in election returns. They declared that they were equally unable to determine the significance of two dots placed directly below certain figures in election returns, and that although to all the world besides it was perfectly plain that the two dots meant "the same;" and so the State of Maine was wellnigh convulsed by a revolution because the governor and his council affected to be unable to understand or construe what was intelligible affected to be unable to understand or construe what was intelligible to the ordinary school-boy.

My brother from Kansas [Mr. Haskell] is pleased to refer to this amendment as simply a small hole out of which the democratic party expects to creep. If that is so, true policy would suggest that that means of escape be cut off. There should be no hole left out of which any party should be permitted to creep, and so escape just responsibility for its acts. It is not simply a mistake, but it is a crime to place upon the statute-books laws affecting the most sacred interests of the neonle which are, and are clearly intended to be, of doubtful of the people which are, and are clearly intended to be, of doubtful

construction.

Gentlemen of the democratic side, you are silent. You take no part in this debate. You are satisfied to express your views touching this amendment by simply voting for it, and this although it is attached as a political rider to an appropriation bill, and although you must recognize that it is of doubtful import. You withhold from the country the information they ask for as to the scope and effect you claim for your rider. Gentlemen, are you here to legislate for the people, or to prepare legal snares into which the unwary may fall? Are you here to propose and enact proper laws for the whole people, or ple, or to prepare legal snares into which the unwary may fall? Are you here to propose and enact proper laws for the whole people, or to mislead them with unintelligible statutes, with legal puzzles, involved in the double meaning of the language of your enactments? It is not solely a question whether this amendment is susceptible of the construction my friend from Kansas or my friend from Iowa would give it. It is not solely a question whether it is susceptible of the construction the democratic party would put upon it. The true question is, what does the amendment, properly construed, mean? What is its purport? What is its object? The amendment deals with the most important rights of our people, and I insist that if it is of doubtful construction, that if it is susceptible of two constructions, it should be so amended as to make it clear, plain, and intelligible, so that those to be affected by it, either in their official capacity or private station, may understand it. It is the duty of a Legislature in making laws to make them so clear and so far removed from any doubt or obscurity that the intelligent man who runs may read, and read understandingly.

obscurity that the intelligent man who runs may read, and read understandingly.

At the extra session of Congress it pleased the democratic party to make a square issue in this House and before the country touching the exercise by the Executive of his authority to use the forces of the United States for the purpose of keeping the peace at the polls. In other words, touching the power of the Executive to enforce the election laws as well as all other laws upon the statute-books. The democratic party made a square issue upon that point; there was no mistaking what they proposed. They were beaten. They were not beaten in this House, for, being in the majority, they passed the bill; but they stumbled upon the rock of executive veto. They went to the polls, having made the same issue before the people, and again they were beaten at the elections and their cause rebuked.

At the close of the extra session of Congress when the "dastards had dallied, and the doubters were danned" by vetoes patriotically

At the close of the extra session of Congress when the "dastards had dallied, and the doubters were danned" by vetoes patriotically applied to acts which were unconstitutional and revolutionary in their character, the democratic majority brought in this sickly semblance of their original bill—toned it down, leaving it, however, susceptible of diverse constructions and of doubtful interpretation. A majority of the gentlemen on this side, myself among them, voted for the bill, being satisfied with the interpretation given the amendment by the honorable gentleman from Onio, my colleague, [Mr. Garfield,] and the honorable gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. Hawley.] If the amendment was only susceptible of the interpretation then given it by the honorable gentlemen mentioned, it would not be objectionable beyond that it is a political rider upon an appropriation bill. However, we found that so far as that construction was concerned it was said we were entirely mistaken. While we held to that construction the democratic party in the House and Senate rejected it as utterly untenable, and upon further investigation I submit the democrats may be correct in rejecting our interpretation or construction of this rider. But on that interpretation, and believing in it, many of us voted for that bill. Many democrats voted for it on the distinct understanding that, according to their interpretation, which was none akin to ours, there was an implied prohibition upon the President from using the troops in any possible contingency at or about the polls for the purpose of enforcing the election laws. Gentlemen, I believe you were right. I believe the position that you assumed then was thoroughly plausible if not entirely sound. And in view of that fact we now oppose your amendment. It seems that the President was satisfied with the construction given to the rider by some republicans who voted for it; at all events, he signed the bill. What was the result? The issue was immediately forced upon us as to the proper construction of this

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the true interpretation put upon this amendment by the democratic party? And I want here to point out the importance of rooting out of this amendment the doubtful construction; and to that end I say to my brethren on the other side that although they may be sullenly silent now, there will come a time when they will want to speak and the people will not permit them to be heard. If the men upon that side of the House imagine they can put upon the country legislation of doubtful interpretation, that they may have within it hidden meanings, ulterior purposes not disclosed in its letter, and that their conduct in that behalf will be approved, they are grievously mistaken, or else the patriotism and what do you claim, gentlemen? I will tell you what I understand you to claim. First you will insist, and with reason, that if by an express declaration in a statute you direct, as in this amendment, that no part of the appropriation for the Army shall be used to equip, transport, or pay troops to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls, &c., you thereby by plain implication say that the troops shall not be used for the purposes indicated. You will treat such a statute as being tantamount to a prohibition of the thing for the doing of which you withhold an appropriation, and without which appropriation the doing of it becomes practically impossible. You expressly take away the means necessary to the doing of the thing, and you thereby prohibit its being done. You tried to repeal certain laws; you failed to accomplish it. You now seek to nullify them. If you may exempt soldiers from being called as a part of the posse comitatus, may you not exempt them from performing duty in enforcing the election laws? You claim you may do both. What we desire now is to know precisely what you do propose by this amendment. On its face it is obscure. In the Senate, and subsequently on the stump, you gave it an interpretation not in accord with that given it by our republican friends.

The proposition that the Army could be used as a "police force" was said by republicans here to be untenable. But in its wider and more general application the term "police force" has a broader sig-nification than we were pleased to accord to it. And it may well be doubted whether when soldiers are called out to aid the civil authorities to keep the peace, to suppress an incipient riot at the polls where the Government is authorized to keep the peace, they are acting in any other manner than as a police force, using the term "police force" in its broadest sense. I am not authorized to speak for my party, but I speak for myself alone. And whether I am right or wrong, it is enough to say to the majority of this House the amendment you propose is of doubtful construction, and the doubt should be removed.

It is not what Congress may or may not do in the matter of controlling the use of the Army by the Executive; not what the President may do or be prevented from doing in the matter of using the Army to enforce the law, but what is proposed in that behalf by the terms of the pending amendment. You have it in your power to make perfectly plain your intention and to clear this matter of all doubt, and you refuse. Are you playing a trick upon the people? Are you enacting a law here for their deception? You have it in your power to make your intention and purpose as clear as the sunlight; to advise the Executive and the people as to the precise object and purpose of this amendment, and yet you remain silent. The time will come, as I have said, when you will want to speak and you will not be heard.

The object of this amendment, as interpreted in the light of your conduct, is twofold, depending upon whether it becomes a law or is defeated. In one case you are authorized for partisan purposes to claim one thing; in the other contingency you will feel authorized to claim another.

Let us suppose this bill with this vague political rider, just as it is now presented to the House, becomes a law. And suppose at the elections next fall the republicans in Louisiana and Mississippi, where they are largely in the majority, should attempt to exercise their right to vote, and that organized Ku Klux should interpose to prevent, and being too powerful for the civil authorities to successfully cope with, or the constituted authorities should side with the Ku Klux and interpose no objection or resistance to the efforts of the armed mob to drive the officers supervising the election from the polls, and the officers, finding themselves without support and likely to be murdered, should apply to the President for protection, and he, to enforce the law, as in duty sworn to do, and to protect the lives of his officers, should send a squad of soldiers or marines to the voting precinct where the danger threatened to see that the freedom of the ballot was not completely overthrown. What would be the result? Notwithstanding the only act done by the soldiers was to protect the civil officers in the enforcement of the law and to prevent the reign and rule of riot and bloodshed, and notwithstanding it might be made to appear that no act was done or word uttered which would or could in anywise militate against a full, free, and fair ballot, yet we all know that the parish, county, or State where this occurred would be thrown out by this House because of the previsions of the amendment now pending before this House. And such a course they would claim would be warranted by the construction which the democratic majority would put upon this amendment. I mean they would throw out and reject the vote of the parish, county, or State if they found it demanded by some pressing political exigency. I am not mistaken in that. The democratic party never legislate for simple amusement. This may have been to some a source of merriment, but the democratic party never engages in an enterprise of this kind for merriment.

This may have been to some a source of merriment, but the democratic party never engages in an enterprise of this kind for merriment. This "rider" is full of meaning, and is contrived for a purpose.

In the first instance they propose, if this shall be enacted into a law, to insist upon the stump, and to insist in this House when we approach the counting of the electoral vote, that the use of troops anywhere for any purpose under the sun in connection with the election laws will vitiate the election, if the majority here so will—always provided, however, that the State where the soldiers are used goes republican. And I say this in view of the fact that we have notice served on us from the house-tops and by leading democrats that it is proposed in this Chamber in 1881 to count in the democratic candidate for President whether he be elected or not.

What is the other horn of the dilemma. If this bill should not become a law; if it should strike upon the rock of an executive veto, as it ought, because it is not clear in its statements, because it is a trick and a snare; if it shall sink upon that rock, what next? Then we will have it proclaimed all over the country that the republican party is in favor of bayonets at the polls. Well, the time will never come, at least it is not near at hand, when you can convince the honest, intelligent northmen that there is any danger to be apprehended from soldiers at the polls. Go to New England and see whether you will be able to make any headway there by such a puling cry; go to the great Mississippi Valley and ask the people there whether the mad-dog cry of bayonets at the polls has terrified anybody into voting the democratic ticket; go to the Pacific coast and ask them if the demagogical cry of "soldiers at the polls" has had the effect to reduce the republican ranks. When a man comes before the people in our country with such a proposition as that you may rely upon it that his friends will begin to inquire anxiously concerning his sanity. But in any event this is to be the rock of offense, the stumbling-block upon which the republican party is to trip; that is, bayonets at the polls.

What are the ends sought to be accomplished by this bill? Gentlemen, do you mean to say that the Executive of the Government shall not use the powers intrusted to him under the Constitution and the statutes, including the use of Army and the Navy if necessary, to enforce the laws of the land, including the election laws? If you do, why not say so? Are you honest? Is this a political chess-board mean which you can play with the most sacred rights of our month. upon which you can play with the most sacred rights of our people, as if those rights were pawns to be handled at your will and pleasure and for your political advantage? You much mistake the temper of the American people if you hope to avail yourselves of that subter-

the American people if you hope to avail yourselves of that subterfuge.

If you do not intend to assert by this act, by implication, that the President shall not or may not use the troops wherever he is now authorized by law to do so, it is your duty under your oaths to so affirm. The President has a right to demand what you mean by this dubious and uncertain language. We have a right to know what you mean by this dubious and uncertain language. The people of this country will demand to know what you mean by it, and when you come to explain you may be refused a patient hearing.

This House, it is said, is charged with deciding for itself whether a law is constitutional or not and also as to its full scope and effect. I grant that in the firstinstance, but I deny that it may in the last instance. This House must for itself in the first instance decide whether a law is constitutional or unconstitutional. But having decided that it was constitutional, and that decision having been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States and having been acted upon by the Departments, this House may not, without violating its oath and sacred obligation, treat such a law as a nullity. The election laws have been by Congress adjudged constitutional. That judgment has been sanctioned by the Supreme Court of the United States, and if those laws are to be nullified we should be advised of the fact.

No one regrets more than I do that it may become necessary in some parts of the Republic to enforce the election laws by using the strong arm of the Government. But if the occasion shall arise nobedy parts of the Republic to enforce the election laws by using the strong arm of the Government. But if the occasion shall arise, nobody knows better than the men within the sound of my voice that it will not be due to the action of the republican party. Never at any time in any place within our borders has the republican party ever been particeps criminis in doing that which tended to create the necessity for sending troops to the polls to enforce the election laws. The cry of "no bayonets at the polls" does not come up from our border. It comes from the quarter where the minority rules absolutely and in defiance of law. It comes with ill grace from those who have rendered troops at the polls a necessity, to stand in their places here and elsewhere and complain that soldiers are sent to their voting precincts. Gentlemen when you shall accord to others the rights you claim for yourselves, there will be no need of troops at the polls.

You assert that in your section you are competent to take care of your own affairs. Very well; I submit that I am entirely satisfied with that. What I complain of is that you are enabled, through the instrumentality of suppressing a free ballot, to control the affairs of the entire country. There sit to-day upon this floor men each one of whom wields with his vote five times the power that a member on this side of the Chamber wields by his vote.

The political power of one democrat in certain districts in Louisiana The pointical power or one democratin certain districts in Louisiana and Mississippi is five times as great as that of any democrat or republican north of Mason and Dixon's line. And it is against that condition of affairs that I protest. I do not object to your controlling your own affairs, but I do object to your managing the affairs of this nation, making our laws, regulating our taxes, voting the money of the people at your pleasure, and exercising all this power and authority by trampling under foot the election laws of the country, and then complaining because the minority on this side of the Chamber insist that this defiance of law and order shall cease.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like five minutes more to read some amendments which will be offered when the opportunity is pre-

Mr. BAYNE. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In order that the majority on this floor may fairly say to the country what they mean by this legislation, in order that any obscurity in this amendment may be removed, in order that it may be perfectly clear what the democratic majority propose by the amendments sought to be attached to this appropriation bill, I desire to give notice that at the arrows time the Hersey till be added. I desire to give notice that at the proper time the House will be asked to vote upon certain amendments which I will read. The first is the following:

Provided further, That nothing herein or in any other act contained shall be held to forbid or prevent any citizen of the United States, or any person in its service or under the protection of its laws, from assisting the civil officers of the Government in the execution of the laws of the United States and the preservation of the peace for that purpose whenever properly called upon for such assistance.

That is presented at the request of my honorable friend from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.]
I shall also offer as an amendment the following, which was offered in the Senate:

Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to affect the right to employ any part of the Army or Navy to execute the laws in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be authorized by the Constitution or by an act of Congress.

If you do not intend to nullify by this amendment the election laws if you do not propose to interfere with the proper and just execution of the laws of the land, you must vote for this amendment. If you are not proposing to repeal or nullify by implication the provisions of law referred to in this proviso; if you are not proposing to lay the groundwork for asserting that which you do not now intend or of denying that which you do intend, there can be no objection to making that fact conspicuously plain.

I shall also offer another amendment. To test whether there is that active "hungering and thirsting" after political "righteousness" which the great clamor about bayonets at the polls would indicate; to show whether it is indeed the protection and the purity of the ballot-box that the majority on this floor desire; to ascertain whether it is the protection of the control of the protection and the purity of the ballot-box that the majority on this floor desire; to ascertain whether it is the purpose of the majority to prevent men from being murdered for political reasons; whether it is to secure that free, untrammeled ballot for which gentlemen seem to sigh—to test all this, I shall offer the same amendment which was offered at the extra session, which provides for punishing any man who approaches the polls with a gun, pistol, sword, or other deadly weapon with intent to hinder or prevent a free and fair election. This amendment, which would prevent interference with that freedom of action to which gentlemen profess to be so thoroughly devoted, is as follows:

Provided, That if any person shall carry a gun, pistol, sword, or other deadly weapon of any kind, openly or concealed, at or near the polls at any election at which Representatives in Congress are voted for, he shall, on conviction thereof by any court of competent jurisdiction, be fined in any sum not less than $500 nor more than $2,000, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years, in the discretion of the court.

Now, gentlemen, I am aware that there is a constant clamor on the democratic side of the House about "the people." Nobody is deceived by that cry. We do not forget that in Rome, whenever it was the purpose to rob the commons of any sacred right, it was the practice invariably to couple the name of the people with the decrees of the senate; and I observe that our democratic brethren here are given to the same practice in all cases and at all times.

All I desire, Mr. Chairman, is that the Executive shall be advised what is enjoined and what is forbidden by this amendment; that the what is enjoined and what is forbidden by this amendment; that the people of the country may know what rule of action is herein prescribed for them and for the Executive. Will an honest Congress deny this? Will any one who has not a dishonest purpose withhold this knowledge from the Executive and from the people?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that on this occasion I would have desired to say anything, had it not been for the attitude of some of my political colleagues regarding this measure. At the last session of Congress there was quite a difference of opinion respectlast session of Congress there was quite a difference of opinion respecting the meaning of a precisely similar proposition. It was regarded by a large majority of the House of Representatives as a trivial and unimportant matter. It was perhaps viewed by some gentlemen as little more than a "mouse," to use the characterization of my friend from Maine, [Mr. Fave.] But in the Senate it was considered what a few of us here thought it was, a pretty large elephant. It caught the attention in that body of gentlemen of very great ability, and elicited their earnest connection.

the attention in that body of gentlemen of very great ability, and elicited their earnest opposition.

The point of inquiry is, has this amendment pith and substance? What is its legal import? What will be its legal effect? In my opinion it contains pith and substance, and if it becomes a part of the law of the land, will have the legal effect intended. No court, it seems to me, would give it any other construction than that it was intended to prohibit the use of any part of the Army to preserve the peace at the polls on election day, however urgent the necessity.

But suppose this provision has not the significance which I attribute to it, is it therefore harmless? Who may take if they have not occasion to construe it? It may be construed by the very majorities in the present Congress which pass it. Suppose that in the city of New York, at the coming election for members of Congress and presidenthe present Congress which pass it. Suppose that in the city of New York, at the coming election for members of Congress and presidential electors, it may become imperatively necessary to a fair election that a part of the Army should be used to suppress riots and combinations of armed men, which the civil authorities of that city were unable or unwilling to suppress. Then suppose that when the electoral vote of the State of New York shall be counted in the presence of Congress by the Vice-President, the majority in each House should say "we have a right to throw out the electoral vote of New York because the law was violated in conducting the election." The democratic party has availed itself of pretexts less plausible to do what it desired. As suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTER-WORTH] it resorted to much smaller devices in the State of Maine to worth 1st resorted to much smaller devices in the State of Maine to capture political control of that State.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will return to the inquiry respecting the legal force of this provision. There is another way of testing its validity. Section 2022 of the Revised Statutes explicitly commands the marshals and their deputies, among other things, to keep the peace at the polls. Section 2024 tells them what they may do if resisted. I will read this section:

That the marshal, or his general deputies, or such special deputies as shall be thereto specially empowered by him, in writing, and under his hand and seal, whenever he or his said general deputies or his special deputies, or either or any of them, shall be foreibly resisted in executing their duties under this act, or the act hereby amended, or shall, by violence, threats, or menaces, be prevented from executing such duties, or from arresting any person or persons who shall commit any offense for which said marshal or his general or his special deputies are authorized to make such arrest, are, and each of them is hereby, empowered to summon and call to his or their aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of his district.

Section 788 extends and enlarges their powers with respect to the preservation of the peace to the fullest extent known to the common or statute law. I will read it:

That the marshals of the several districts, and their deputies, shall have the same powers in executing the laws of the United States as sheriffs and their deputies in the several States have by law in executing the laws of the respective States.

These statutes unquestionably vest ample authority in the marshals to enforce these laws.

In what capacity do the marshals act on such occasions? As peace officers. In what capacity do those whom they employ to subserve their cause act? As peace officers. And yet it has been said repeatedly, that the military when under the control of the marshals to these ends is not used as a police force. I say, in no sense can the military be used otherwise than as a police force and as a part of the military be used otherwise than as a police force and as a part of the posse comitatus, when directed by the marshal to preserve the peace.

During the progress of these debates gentlemen have gone out of their way to seek for some far-fetched illustration to show this section has no meaning. Has there been a single judicial opinion cited, or a single construction furnished to us, which will show that the military, thus employed, does not act as a part of the posse comitatus and as a police force 7 Not one.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see if there are not authorities on the other side of the question.

other side of the question.

During the progress of the debate in the Senate at the extra session on the section of the Army bill just like this, the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] cited some authorities which I will quote. He read from Wise on Riots, who, in speaking of the military, says:

Like all other ministers of the law, whether executing warrants or obeying parol orders, which in cases of riots seem to have, under 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, the force of warrants, (see 1 Hawk, c. 65, s. 18,) they are exposed to an indictment or a court-martial for disobedience, or, if death ensuses, are liable to be indicted for manislaughter or Here, too, it may be remarked, that the military are constables, being engaged in a lawful purpose, would not collectively be answerable for any misconduct. Not so, the mob. In the one case each must take the consequences of the act of any one, while in the other no person will be answerable for the improper act of one, except that one only.

He says further:

The knowledge of these principles will exercise a wholesome influence both over the military and the civilians. Not forgetting their responsibility to the laws, they will honestly and manfully do their duty, quite satisfied that even if the prejudices or angry passions of the people should from accidental circumstances expose them to temporary difficulty.

Next, the Senator quoted from Wharton's Criminal Law the language used by Judge King on the Philadelphia riots of 1844. The judge said:

Those who love law and order should not shrink or hesitate in striking an honest blow for their protection, when threatened by lawless violence. When such a timid and feeble spirit prevails the days of the Republic are numbered. This general duty, this universal obligation, extends to the citizen soldiers who, in common with all other members of the community, are required to be assistant in the maintenance of the public peace on the call of the civil magistrate. They are subject to the same penalties, in case of neglect or refusal to appear, as any other citizen summoned by the sheriff.

They do not, on such occasions, act in their technical character as military.

That is the contention-that they do act in their military charac--bear in mind, of the gentlemen who say they are not used as a

When assembled, they are but part of the sheriff's posse, and act in subordination to, and in aid of, that officer, who is the true and responsible chief of all forces summoned under his authority. If the soldiers act in any manner not authorized by law, they are amenable for such acts, not to the military but the civil law. In brief, as to all rights and authorities, they stand on the same footing with the other citizens summoned by the sheriff, and composing with them his posse.

Then he quoted from the opinion of Attorney-General Cushing, as

A marshal of the United States, when opposed in the execution of his duty, by unlawful combinations, has authority to summon the entire able-bodied force of his precinct as a posse comitatus.

This authority comprehends, not only bystanders and other citizens generally, but any and all organized armed force, whether militia of the State, or officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States.

Such being the law as to the marshals and their deputies, there was no absolute need, in the fifth section of the act of 1850, to introduce a clause to authorize them to command all requisite assistance in the execution of the warrants and precepts mentioned in that act, which should be directed to them. In this respect the act is declaratory merely.

These considerations apply as well to the military as to the civil force employed; for the posse comitatus comprises every person in the district or county above the age of fifteen years, (Watson's Sheriff, page 60,) whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not; and including the military of all denominations, militia, soldiers, marines, all of whom are alike bound to obey the commands of a sheriff or marshal. The fact that they are organized as military bodies, under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus.

And yet we have gentlemen who rise in their places here and, with-

And yet we have gentlemen who rise in their places here and, without citing a single authority or giving a single legal judgment to sustain them, allege that the military so employed do not form a part of the posse comitatus; that they do not exert the functions of a police force, and therefore this amendment has no meaning. Let me invoke some analogies. I will call attention to some of the acts of the State Legislatures on this subject. I ask the Clerk to read from the Revised Statutes of Kentucky, page 733.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. Whenever there shall be in any city, town, or county any tumult, riot, mob, or any body of men acting together by force, with intent to commit any felony or misdemeanor, or to offer any violence to persons or property, or by force and violence to break and resist the laws of the Commonwealth, or any such tumult, riot, or mob shall be threatened, and the fact be made to appear to the commander-in-chief, or to the mayor of any city, or to any court of record sitting in said city or county, or to any judge thereof, or to any judge of the court of appeals, or to the sheriff of said county, the commander-in-chief may issue his order, or such mayor, court, judge, or sheriff, may, in writing, direct the senior or other military officers convenient to the scene of disturbance, to turn out such portion of his or their command as may be necessary to quell, suppress, or prevent such tumult or threatened tumult; and any officer or member of the military who shall fail promptly to obey such orders and directions of said civil officers shall be subjected to such fines as a court-martial may inflict, and, if an officer, shall be cashiered; and such officer or member may be indicted by a grand jury of their respective counties for such offense, and fined in a sum not exceeding $100.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that that act au-

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that that act authorizes the mayors of cities, the judges of courts of record, and the sheriffs, under the emergencies named.

I have not time to call attention to the numerous State statutes containing similar provisions. In a hasty and hap-hazard examination
I found that Kansas, Iowa, Illinois, Alabama, Maine, and Arkansas all have statutes which authorize the civil local magistrates, whose duty it is to keep the peace and direct the police, to call on the military when necessary. In looking over the index to the statutes of Arkansas I

Militia, when to be called out by sheriff. See State sovereignty

I turned to that, and from that to the statute, and it read:

The sheriff or coroner, as the case may be, of any county shall not only have power to call to his assistance every man to aid him in discharge of his duty in the execution of the laws of this State, but shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to make a requisition upon any officer commanding a regimentor battalion of militia, or brigadier or major general of militia, within this State for such number of men as may be necessary to suppress all resistance to his authority in the execution of the laws of this State within any county; and any officer refusing to furnish the quota of men thus required may be arrested, tried by a court-martial, and cashiered therefor.

I submit that the identity recognized by Arkansas between State sovereignty and the power in the hands of the peace officers to use all the force of the State to execute the laws is instructive. If the democratic party had the same respect for the National Government it has for the State governments it would not constantly make efforts to take from the former what it would not constantly make enorts to take from the former what it so freely concedes to the latter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the rights of the States to preserve the peace are not denied by anybody. If the employment of military force for that purpose by the civil magistracy be not using such military as a police force, words have no definite signification. Since the Supreme Court of the United States, in the magnificent opinion recently delivered by Mr. Justice Bradley, says that the United States has a peace, and may employ all needful physical force to preserve it, it seems to me that the analogies I have presented of the States lead inevitably to the conclusion I have sought to enforce.

It was contended by my colleague, [Mr. CLYMER,] who had the similar provision in charge at the extra session, that the effect of it would be to deprive the President of the power to use the troops at the polls to keep the peace. He called attention to section 3678 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditures in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others

He argued that the President would be liable to impeachment if he

He argued that the President would be liable to impeachment if he authorized the use of any part of the Army to keep the peace at an election under the proposed section and section 3678.

That is the construction put upon this proposition—that it worked an absolute prevention of the use of the Army to suppress riots and mobs at the national elections. I opposed this at the extra session, and I oppose it now, because I think there is unfortunately too much and I oppose it now, because I think there is unfortunately too much force in the contention of the majority.

There are two great principles, Mr. Chairman, that must be sustained in practice if the national autonomy is to be preserved. One is that the necessary money must be appropriated to carry out all the laws; the other is that ample force must be placed and kept in the hands of the executive department to execute all the laws. The people pay taxes under the laws as they are for the purpose of providing adequate appropriations. The laws represent the will of the people. If an appropriation may be denied to carry out one law, it may be denied to carry out all laws. If adequate force may be withheld to prevent the execution of one law, it may be withheld to prevent the execution of all laws. The logic of the matter is that money must be appropriated and the laws must be enforced, or nullification, anarchy, and the ultimate destruction of the Government must result. anarchy, and the ultimate destruction of the Government must result. No party in this country under our system of government can afford to stand on any platform but this: The laws must be enforced whenever it is necessary to secure the ends sought by them. If any of them be objectionable, let it be repealed or amended according to constitutional methods.

we are in the habit of boasting that we have the best government in the world. This was the dominant belief. The rebellion was a protest against the idea. It arose out of the belief that its promoters and sympathizers could establish a better government. The idea of the democrats who joined actively in the rebellion, and those who only sympathized with it, seemed to be that the United States Government had too much power. The outery against consolidation, the old shib-boleth of the democratic party, has been supplanted by the hue and cry against centralization. Only to the extent that centralization differs from consolidation has the democratic party progressed in its acquiescence in the idea of national growth. It opposed the idea of consolidation, because it held that there was nothing in the Union of the States that could prevent a sovereign State from setting herself up as a national independent sovereignty at her pleasure. The success of the Government in putting down the rebellion disposed of that theory. After that the best the democratic party could do to advance its theory of the Government was to limit as much as possible the Government's powers.

That is the democratic party's idea of a National Government. That party clings to that idea. It does not like the Government of the United States. It regards it as an enemy of the State governments. If every democrat in the United States were as loyal to the United States Government as he is to that of his State the controversies that perplex legislation and vex the apprehension of the people would cease wholly to exist. But instead of that a very different condition of things exists. Every session of Congress revives the discussion of the powers of the General Government and the powers of the States. The republican Senators and Representatives stand by the General Government; the democratic Senators and Representatives stand by the States. It is perfectly certain that the peace, welfare, and safety of this country and the perpetuity of our Government would be freed from besetting dangers if this contention were removed from our political discussions. We have the best government in the world just as it is this day.

The democratic party is incapable of improving it. Party action represents the average of the party's motives and intelligence. It will never be so good as the best men in the party would have it; nor so bad as the worst men in the party would have it. Nothing can be expected, therefore, but the changes which would be suggested by the average democrat. There is nothing in the composition of the average democrat that fits him for improving the Constitution and laws of the United States.

laws of the United States.

The republican party has been called the radical party. It is now the conservative party of the country. It is struggling day after day to keep the Constitution and laws as they are. The people will see to it that they are so kept.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BROWNE. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. Brigham.]

Mr. Brigham. In this amendment the House and the country recognize, I think, an old acquaintance, if not an old friend. We remember the war that was waged on its behalf a few months ago against a statute of the United States; and we remember, too, that the statute stood, and it stands to-day unshaken—the supreme law of the land. Our Committee on Appropriations, a committee wisely discerning the signs of the times, noting the attitude and temper of the House and the country, have seen fit to propose to us a bill which makes provision for the wants of our Army for the next year. In this bill not a paragraph, not a line, not a syllable is to be found of a political character. I say that this committee, made up as it is of strong democrats, nine in number, and six republicans, all of them experienced in public affairs, who have long been members of this House, who know what the country wants, and have given heed to the results of the discussion had a year ago, deserve and will receive the thanks of this House and honor from the country.

Of course, every member of that committee will vote for this bill and will put his foot on this amendment. Every member of that committee, be he democrat or republican, will exert all his influence to have the bill as reported become a law of the land. But we find that this amendment is proposed as a rider, as it is called, by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, to the members of this committee that any bill fit to become a law ought to be able-bodied enough, ought to have a constitution strong enough to walk into this House upon its legs, stand upon its own feet, and command our votes upon its own merits. Anything that is imbecile or imperfect and does not command that respect and confidence which everything strong and correct in principle deserves, has to be put on the back of something else and brought into our presence. That is the infirmity of character of all riders. They have to be carried like infants in arms in order to be presented for our consideration.

I trust the House will commend and act upon the judgment of our Committee on Appropriations. Although I voted for the bill with this rider in the extra session I feel constrained for one now to vote against this amendment and to sustain the Committee on Appropriations. I shall respect that duty, and vote for their bill, and vote against the amendment, of which they must disapprove.

Why, just see how it stands! There are some men in this House

Why, just see how it stands! There are some men in this House who do not approve of the keeping of the peace at the polls by the troops of the United States in any emergency, and because that is their view they want this rider put upon the bill. There are some men in this House who say, if soldiers are employed to keep the peace at the polls they shall not be paid for it. What exquisite meanness we find in this proposed law! They know the Executive holds the Army as his sword, and if the peace of the country is threatened and must be preserved and the Executive lifts his arm it is the arm of the nation, and when it falls and strikes it is the people's stroke, and must be respected. When the peace is threatened and the soldier receives an order to do a certain thing, he is like those under the centurion of old, who, having soldiers under him, said to one man, "go," and he goeth, to another "come," and he cometh, and to another "do this," and he doeth it.

But after the soldier has heard the command, and, respecting his oath, has discharged his duty and obeyed the order, then this amendment comes in and says that he shall not be paid for it, although he has obeyed the law and performed his duty at the peril of life and limb. I say that if you can find a very Pecksniff of a law, a law monumental in its meanness, it is a law of this kind, which exacts duty from a soldier who has no voice in the making of the law, who has nothing to do but to obey it, and after he has risked his life by obedience, then this amendment comes in and says that he shall not be paid.

There are men here who do not believe in our Indian policy. Those men should come in with an amendment to this bill, saying that after our soldiers have obeyed the law in defending our brethren upon the frontiers from murderous Indian forays they shall not be paid. There are men here who profess to be earnestly in favor of peace agencies and disapprove of all force. Those men should introduce an amendment that the Army shall never be used in any other way than as a persuasive agent and a moral force, and that if it is used otherwise it shall receive no compensation. That will be in the interest of economy, which is the great democratic cry at the present time. And in that way we shall have an Army and all its service and not have to pay a dollar for it; we will save the whole $26,000,000 which this bill proposes to appropriate. But the objection is the meanness of the thing against the innocent soldier who does his duty.

But there is something deeper than this. Here is a law which our friends on the other side acknowledge to be the law of the land.

But there is something deeper than this. Here is a law which our friends on the other side acknowledge to be the law of the land. They come in and try to paralyze it and thwart it and destroy its operation, and to teach our citizens to contemn and disobey it, and to set at naught all authority. I say that when you do that you inflict the deepest wound of all.

operation, and to teach our citizens to contemn and disobey it, and to set at naught all authority. I say that when you do that you inflict the deepest wound of all.

How is this House governed? By its rules. On what depend the harmony and the integrity of our proceedings? Not upon the number of members nor upon their knowledge, but upon their obedience to the rules. I obey them because I ought to obey. Our Republic is governed by law, and our peace depends not upon the knowledge or numbers of our citizens, but upon their obedience to existing law. Strike at that, and you strike at the foundation of our peace, nay, of our very existence.

Three roots bear up Dominion: Knowledge, Will— These two are strong; but stronger still the third, Obedience; 'tis the great tap-root, that still, Knit around the rock of Duty, is not stirred, Tho' storm and tempest spend their utmost skill.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I am conscious, sir, that no comment of mine can change the democratic majority in its determination to pass the pending amendment. Its adoption is sure, and no argument can arrest the decree, for in the presence of party interest and party dictation logic goes down. Nothing I can say, no attack I may make, can provoke its friends to rise in its defense. Unable in debate to give any excuse for this partisan attempt to cripple the executive power of the nation they sit dumb, hoping to avoid any record but that of the final vote. They cannot thus escape. There is a tribunal—that of public opinion—in which they will be compelled to answer. The people rebuked, at the late elections, these apostles of misrule, but even the humiliation of defeat is not sufficient to restrain them from repeating the folly. There is a fanaticism too blind to profit by experience; an infatuation which fascinates only to destroy, and the democracy now in the toils of some strange hallucination, in their frenzy to seize upon victory at the coming election in defiance of law, are compassing their own destruction. In the reckless attempt to fashion some pretext for abrogating the laws for the protection of the freeman's ballot they are wholly unmindful of the lessons of the late elections. Flattered by victories that gave them supremacy in Congress, they in the last Congress conceived the possibility of protracting their reign by turning over national elections to the tender mercies of the mob. They attempted to repeal or neutralize every law of the Government that stood sentinel at the polls to preserve the freedom and purity of the election. They attacked the supervisor and deputy-marshal law and the law authorizing the employment of the military arm of the people to secure peace, order, and respect of law at a nation's election.

They proposed to give the bludgeon, the shot-gun, the Ku Klux, and rifle clubs immunity for one day, the election day, the most important one in the calendar of a free people, for it is the one on which they strengthen the bastions of liberty and make its foundations more secure. On this day their policy would have made anarchy easy and misrule respectable. They failed to coerce the minority and the President to submit to these wrongs. Foiled here they formulated a scheme so cunningly devised as to leave the election laws unrepealed, while the power to enforce them was wholly undermined and paralyzed. This failed to run the gauntlet of a presidential veto. After these exasperating defeats, despairing of their ability to accomplish more, and frightened by the maledictions of an outraged public, the democracy contented itself by tacking a rider, in the words of the pending amendment, on the Army appropriation bill. By many this rider was regarded a weakling, impotent for harm, a mere bauble to tickle the fancy of the disappointed, or a kind of a glittering generality to be mounted as a text by the democratic orator at the hustings, so that he might vociferate meaningless adjectives, threadbare anathemas, and oratorical fustian about the employment of radical bayonets to coerce democrats to vote the republican ticket.

As an amendment it was opposed by the republican party on this floor. When it was fastened to the bill, rather than protract the session longer, rather than further delay the appropriation of the money necessary to clothe, feed, and pay the Army, many republicans voted for the bill as amended. Many assented to the passage of the appropriation bill because they believed the amendment did not rob the Executive of the power, should the exigency arise, to coerce respect and obedience to law. In no sense, however, was the republican party committed to it either as a rider to an Army appropriation or as an independent measure.

I did not vote for it when it stood alone, and refused to support the bill when it was amended. I believed then as I believe now, that this proviso is intended by its democratic progenitors to embarrass the Government in the enforcement of its election laws. Does it mean nothing? Is it designed to effect no purpose? Are the subtle leaders of a powerful and unscrupulous political organization making this struggle for a mere shadow? Why, sir, if this is not intended to embarrass the President, if it is not intended to put a limitation on embarrass the President, if it is not intended to put a limitation on his power, to render inoperative some law, to paralyze some statute, why has the evil genius of the democratic party conceived it, and why does that party stand by it at the peril of its political life? Those of my party friends who believe this bantling of a democratic caucus so harmless a thing may be cured of their credulity when in some coming Congress, upon some such filmsy pretext as that troops have been used to put down mob violence and protect the citizen in the enjoyment of his most sacred right, they find a revolutionary democracy to trying the limitations they are now nutting on the use of the racy torturing the limitations they are now putting on the use of the money appropriated by this bill to the convenient purpose of overturning congressional and presidential elections.

My discussion of this question shall be brief. I would be content to remain silent, but as this section is proposed by a committee to which I have the honor to belong, I deem it my duty to present my objections to its adoption. It reads:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Now, sir, it is clear that if there be any law authorizing the em-Now, sir, it is clear that it there be any law authorizing the employment of any portion of the Army of the United States as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election, this amendment does not prohibit such employment. It does not declare either expressly or by implication such use of troops to be unlawful. It is open to no such construction. It goes no further than to forbid that any money appropriated by the act shall be paid out for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any part of the Army that may be used for such purpose. The limitation is upon the use of the money and not upon the use of the Army. "It hath this extent-no more.

If the President could subsist, equip, transport, and pay the troops without resorting to this fund, or any other public fund, or creating any future charge upon the Treasury, so far as this amendment is concerned, he could use them as a police force to keep the peace at the polls with impunity. No one, I apprehend, will challenge this construction. At this point I would cheerfully withdraw my objection to this amendment if I was ready to admit, as some distinguished gentlemen claim, that there is no law authorizing the use of the people's Army as a police force at the polls to protect their elections, their rights, and to enforce their election laws. If there be no law authorizing this use of troops, then, without this prohibition, no money is appropriated by this bill for that purpose. If there be no statute under which any part of the Army may be used as stated, the amendment is useless and absurd, for under existing law no money can be legally paid out of the Treasury until it has been first appropriated to that end. That gentlemen on the other side will concede there is no law under which United States troops may be thus employed, I cannot believe, for the admission would convict them of the folly of having wasted much time and money in fighting the mere creature of their distempered imaginations.

Those who insist that no part of the Army can be used under the law as a police force to keep the peace at national elections give a very narrow construction to the word police. Employing the word in its limited and restricted sense these gentlemen may be right, for in that sense a police or a police force is a body of civil officers organin that sense a police or a police force is a body of civil officers organized by the laws of a city or town and put on duty to preserve the peace and good order of the municipality. Thus interpreted there is perhaps no law by which any part of the Army can be put on police duty. But I insist the term has a broader and more comprehensive meaning—one that is used to cover the employment of physical force by a Government to coerce obedience to its laws. This use makes whoever is employed in it, for the time, a part of its body of police. When the mob runs riot in the city or the town, and the posse, whether composed of citizens, or the militia, or the Army, is called out to suppress it, to restore order, to enforce the law, and to protect the persons and property of the people, it engages in a police duty and is, during its employment, in the broad sense a part of the police

It is important to inquire before I proceed further whether we have any law under which United States troops may be used "to keep the peace at the polls at any election," for I insist the power to "keep the peace" when exercised by the executive arm of a government is essentially a police power. What is the present state of our election laws? We have laws and such as are ample for the protection of the election and the voter. Provision has been made for tion of the election and the voter. Provision has been made for supervisors, deputy marshals, and other election machinery so that the vote may be free and fair. These laws must be enforced. That we have national elections and national voters is settled, for the Supreme Court by its recent decision has exploded the logic so arrogantly proclaimed at the extra session.

In the light of this decision it can no longer be disputed that Congress may constitutionally protect its voters and its elections by law, and when statutes looking to this end are enacted it becomes the sworn duty of the President to enforce them, if need be, by all the powers committed to him by the Constitution. To do this he may powers committed to him by the Constitution. To do this he may rightfully employ every man and gun in the Army and the Navy. A neglect or refusal to enforce the laws would subject him to impeachment. But, passing on, the people by the fifteenth amendment put all citizens of the United States, regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, on an equality as to the exercise of the right of suffrage. To maintain and protect this equality we passed statutes putting the right under the national jurisdiction, and in this connection also the Executive may be compelled to employ the military power to enforce election laws and to keep the peace at the polls. I will not stop to discuss these laws, for they need no interpretation. They are as follows:

They are as follows:

SEC 2004. All citizens of the United States who are otherwise qualified by law to vote at any election by the people in any State. Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision, shall be entitled and allowed to vote at all such elections, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; any constitution, law, custom, usage, or regulation of any State or Territory, or by or under its authority, to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC 2005. When, under the authority of the constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of any Territory, any act is required to be done as a prerequisite, or qual-ification for voting, and by such constitution or laws persons or officers are charged with the duty of furnishing to citizens an opportunity to perform such prerequisite, or to become qualified to vote, every such person and officer shall give to all citizens of the United States the same and equal opportunity to perform such prerequisite, and to become qualified to vote.

But Mr. Chairman, there are other laws that expressly authorize requisite, and to become qualified to vote.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are other laws that expressly authorize the President—indeed, sir, that impose on the President the duty, in certain cases, of employing the land and naval forces of the United States in the suppression of unlawful combinations, insurrections, or domestic violence in the States. These combinations, these insurrections, this violence may occur at a poll, may happen on election day, and may originate in a purpose to set at defrance the election laws of the United States. Still the President must act. He must, by the express command of the law-making power, use the troops, if it be necessary, to enforce the law. He puts down the violence, restores order by military force, and in doing so he employs of right the troops to keep the peace at the polls. I imagine if in performing this duty the officer should use his command as a police force, or as police are used, he would violate no law, nor would he incur the dispolice are used, he would violate no law, nor would he incur the dis-pleasure of any save the cut-throats of the mob and their allies. Right here I call your attention to sections 5298 and 5299 of the Revised Statutes:

see Statutes:

Sec. 5298. Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any State or Territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any or all the States, and to employ such parts of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, or to suppress such rebellion, in whatever State or Territory thereof the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed, or the execution thereof forcibly obstructed.

Sec. 5299. Whenever insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combinations, or conspiracies in any State so obstructs or hinders the execution of the laws thereof, and of the United States, as to deprive any portion or class of the people of such State of any of the rights, privileges, or immunities, or protection, named in the Constitution and secured by the laws for the protection of such rights, privileges, or immunities, and the constituted authorities of such State are unable to protect, or, from any cause, fail in or refuse protection of the people in such rights, such facts shall be deemed a denial by such State of the equal protection of the laws to which they are entitled under the Constitution of the United States; and in all such cases, or whenever any such insurrection, violence, unlawful combination, or conspiracy, opposes or obstructs the laws of the United States, or the due execution thereof, or impedes or obstructs the due course of justice under the same, it shall be lawful for the President, and it shall be his duty, to take such measures, by the employment of the militia or the land and naval forces of the United States, or of either, or by other means, as he may deem necessary, for the suppression of su

Further comment on these sections now is unnecessary. They are intended to put those rights, privileges, and immunities of the citizen named in the Constitution and secured by law under the protection of the Government. To make this protection sure they command the President to use the Army and Navy when necessary.

At this point I will read two additional sections of the statute, and then I will tire the House no further by these quotations:

Sec. 2002. No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

SEC. 5528. Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force is necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years.

Let me pause here and briefly restate the propositions of law to which allusion has been made:

First. All citizens of the United States, as to the right of suffrage, have been put upon an equality.

Second. Laws have been ordained to enforce this right.

Third. We have a national election and a national voter and have made laws for the protection of each

Fourth. If the execution of any of these laws is resisted, under the circumstances recited in the statute, it is declared to be the duty of the President to employ the armed force of the United States to enforce them.

Fifth. We have declared that except to repel invasion and to keep the peace at the polls, it is unlawful for any person to have or keep any armed troops at any election.

Sixth. We have imposed upon the President the duty of executing every law, and have empowered him to use, for that purpose, any part of the national forces.

From this brief review of the law it is clear that when it is neces sary to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, to put down unlawful combinations of persons who are engaged in obstructing and hindering the execution of the laws of the United States made to secure a combinations of persons who are engaged in obstructing and hindering the execution of the laws of the United States made to secure a free and unintimidated ballot, the President may employ troops to keep the peace at the polls. The law does not define the manner in which the troops are to be used to put down mob violence or to keep the peace. This must be left to the sound discretion of the Executive; for the responsibility is wholly upon him. Suppose the military in keeping the peace, in protecting the rights of the citizen, and in enforcing the national law should be used as a police force—whatever that may mean—for a day or an hour, is that a sufficient reason for withholding the money necessary to provide their subsistence, equipment, transportation, and pay?

For one I will not vote to put the limitation proposed by this amendment on the use of the money appropriated by this bill. If there is no law authorizing the employment of any part of the Army in the manner named, there is no sense in the amendment, for in that case the money could not be used to pay the subsistence, transportation, or compensation of the troops so employed. If, on the other hand, any part of the land and naval forces may be lawfully used in the manner and to secure the end mentioned, I will never consent to withhold from these forces the necessary supplies while engaged in the performance of that duty. Repeal these laws if they are wrong. Do not leave them on the statute-book and then deny the money necessary to their execution. To attack a measure in this way is cowardly. It is so. It is cowardly in its attempt to prevent the enforcement of a beneficent statute by denying the means essential to its execution. It is cowardly in that it attempts to disguise its purpose in its verbiage. cent statute by denying the means essential to its execution. It is cowardly in that it attempts to disguise its purpose in its verbiage.

this cowardly because it seeks to conceal its purpose in its verbiage. It is cowardly because it seeks to conceal its purpose by employing words of doubtful import and capable of being tortured to serve the basest ends. It is cowardly because it seeks to skulk the end aimed at.

Why, sir, if the law authorizing and requiring the peace to be kept at the polls, in certain exigencies, is "un-American, anti-democratic, and villainous," and owes its existence to "the inspiration of fanaticism and an era of hate;" if it is "a disgrace to the statute-book, a beautiful product on which to the cism and an era of hate;" if it is "a disgrace to the statute-book, a shameful parody on republican government, and an insult to the sovereign people of this country," as is proclaimed by my distinguished colleague on the committee, [Mr. Sparks,] why not, by an amendment, squarely and distinctly prohibit the use of any part of the money appropriated to aid in its enforcement? Why dodge the question by using in this limitation of the use of the money the words "as a police force," when these words are unknown in this connection to any national election law? Why not be brave enough to say in unmistakable language just what you intend? If you intend to inhibit the use of this money in the execution of any statute, say so plainly, and take the consequences that may be visited upon you by the people. Stripped of its disguises, this amendment is aimed at the election laws. It is intended to cripple them—to make difficult or impossible laws. It is intended to cripple them—to make difficult or impossible their execution—or it has no object whatever. Believing this to be its purpose, whatever others may do, I will not vote for it now or

Gentlemen who regard this amendment as harmless and powerless must remember that it may not be construed by them, but by the party who fashioned it and who will make it accomplish ends they never dreamed of.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am inflexibly opposed to any interference with our national election laws. The people demand no change, and look upon every attempt to cripple them with alarm. A free, quiet, lawful election is the right of the American voter of whatever race, color, or condition. Our institutions are the outgrowth of the popular will, and that will can only have expression through an unpolluted ballot-box and an unfettered election. The ballot should be protected by judicious laws enforced by all the power reposed by the people in the Government. If the voter is overawed by menace or violence; if his vote is coerced; if ballots are counted that were never cast, this is a Republic no longer.

A national election must be protected, if protected at all, by the power of the nation. Upon the absolute freedom and purity of the election depends the nation's liberty and its life. Every year it is becoming more and more apparent that our elections should be under the vigilant guardianship of law. We are assured, I know, that we are in an era of peace, that never before were elections so free and fair. Well six this reject of season and read will have result in fair. Well, sir, this reign of peace and good-will has wrought in some of the States of this Union strange results. Let me refer to a few of them. First, let me call your attention to the State of Georgia, and contrast the election of 1872 with that of 1878. I will take the third, sixth, and eighth congressional districts of that State:

	1872.		1878.
District.	Democratic vote.	Republican vote.	Democratic vote.	Republican vote.
Third	9, 530 9, 993 7, 437	9, 616 6, 196 6, 230	2, 626 3, 192 3, 673	6 18 54
Total	26, 960	22, 042	9, 439	78

Three congressional districts give but 78 republican votes! Is not this marvelous for a section of a State where a large proportion of the voters are colored men, and men who, when not overawed by a rifleclub banditti, are ever loyal to the party that gave them liberty? But, Mr. Chairman, if this is astonishing, the story of the recent elections in Mississippi is simply startling. Let me here give the poll of four congressional districts in that State. They are the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth:

	1872.		1878.
District.	Democratic vote.	Republican vote.	Democratic vote.	Republican vote.
Third	6, 440 8, 870 8, 973 8, 509	15, 047 15, 950 14, 817 15, 101	4, 125 4, 025 4, 816 6, 663	656 866 1,370
Total	31, 892	60, 915	19, 629	2, 712

This shows a wonderful shrinkage of the republican vote. In 1872 these four districts gave nearly 61,000 republican votes, and in 1878 less than 3,000, showing a loss of more than 57,000 votes. Is any sane man so credulous as to believe this extraordinary change was brought about by fair and honorable means? What a commentary on free elections is this! Let us now take a single district—the sixth—in North Carolina. Here the republican vote in 1872 was 10,561, in 1876 10,282, and 1878 but 258. How did this happen? Why this loss of over 10,000 votes to the republican party in a single district in two years?

I could give similar cases in South Carolina, Louisiana, Arkansas, and in fact in all of the remote Southern States, but my time is limited and I must omit them. The election statistics in these States are full of ominous facts and I hope the advocates of free elections will give them a careful study. I have but a moment longer to speak, and I have no time now to give the logic by which a great party has been annihilated in a large section of this Union. It has departed from ten States. As to these it has no representative here. Three colored men sat in this Chamber in the Forty-fifth Congress, but they are gone, and six millions of their people have no one of their race to sit here in council.

The history of the outrages by which these results have been achieved is in type and will stand a blot and a reproach to democratic government through the ages. It is as sad a page as was ever written by a free people. In several States of this Union a free balwritten by a free people. In several States of this Union a free ballot has been impossible for years, and no man unless blinded by partisan zeal or caste prejudice will deny the statement. How long will these things be? Will a free people consent to crown the knight of the bludgeon, the bowie-knife, and the shot-gun king? It is said that in a monarchy to attempt the life of the sovereign—the king—is high treason, but here it seems, under this democratic régime, marplots may murder the Republic by assassinating the free ballot of the people and be guilty of no crime.

I now yield the remainder of my time to Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. How much time have I?
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] has twenty minutes remaining.
Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have been of the impression that the real difficulty with this contest was that it came about ten months too late. But since listening to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and of others who preceded him, in which the position has been taken that if we have made a mistake the best way is to say so and remedy it as well as we can, I feel sure that the time devoted to the discussion has been well must be the property of the spent. I have no desire to indulge in that wisdom which springs from the feeling of "I told you so!" While I am glad that I have no position to apologize for or to explain on a question so important as this I cheerfully accord to gentlemen on this side of the House who weighed carefully in their minds the question whether it was their duty to oppose and if possible to defeat the Army bill at the extra session, or to vote for it with this political rider upon it, and decided upon the latter course, the same candor in action and fidelity to principle which I claim for myself.

But, sir, when my friend from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] and I am proud to call him my friend, told us, in effect, that this amendment amounted to nothing, that it was not of the slightest consequence, that it might be whistled down the wind with impunity, I for one could not agree with him. When he described in that ludicrous manner and in the graphic language of which he is master the birth of the baby ele-phant and of this political mouse, while I laughed with the rest I could not forget that the mouse thus brought into the world became something of an elephant when it traveled to the other end of this Capitol. And, sir, I greatly fear that should the next electoral count be thrown into this House this amendment, right here in the very arena of its birth, may become an elephant so strong as to uproot and overturn the electoral votes of whole States, if not the nation

This to me is not a matter for amusement or joke. It is no time now by amendment to make doubtful and uncertain that which is certain and clear, especially when it affects the executive power of the Government to enforce laws which have just been decided to be constitutional and valid, and which in turn concern the purity of the

What is the point of the contest we are now making upon this amendment? Is it that the attempt is being made to coerce the President? It cannot be that, for he has already signed and sanctioned a law containing this identical provision. Is it that we will now stand upon the high ground that we will oppose from this time forth any and all political riders upon appropriation bills, and stamp out, if we will the contest of th if we can, this dangerous and pernicious legislation? So be it, then; but let us first in all candor admit that republicans as well as democrats have put political riders upon appropriation bills. True they never carried the practice to the foolish extent of coercing the Exnever carried the practice to the foolish extent of coercing the Executive, starving the Government, or nullifying the laws. But it was a question of degree rather than of kind. I was glad to hear the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] say that he would vote for no more of those. Take that position, and add to it that of my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEI-FER] that this amendment does in fact lay the ax at the very root of executive power, and we have a foundation to stand upon firm as executive power, and we have a foundation to stand upon firm as the granite and lasting as the principle of eternal right.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I have risen in no spirit of criticism or complaint, but I would appeal, if I might, to every republican on this floor, to say here and now that until the laws of this nation affecting its very life are willingly obeyed or strictly enforced, by no vote of ours, by no ambiguity of language, by no experimental amendments rendering construction doubtful shall one jot or tittle of executive power be abated or embarrassed.

We may as well frankly admit that the republican party within

We may as well frankly admit that the republican party within the last six years has made grievous mistakes in this House. We made a mistake when we consented to the amendment prohibiting the Army from being used as a posse comitatus. Many voted for it under a misapprehension of fact, but by the mercy of God, as it were, ancient and existing statutes were found which despoiled the amendment of its power and of its intended purpose. But should not this ment of its power and of its intended purpose. But should not this teach us that these primary powers running down to the very life of the Government are things not to be lightly trifled with upon appropriation bills in the haste of legislation or the hurry of conference committees in the expiring hours of a session? We also made a mistake in countenancing this present amendment at all. Gentlemen say it does not affect the power of the President, that it simply forbids the use of the Army as an ordinary police force. If that be its meaning, why was it offered at all? And why was an amendment which I had the honor to offer at the extra session in the very words of the President's veto message limiting this restriction to the "ordinary civil police force" voted down? Yet it was voted down, and you will see it voted down here again to day, for I intend to offer it you will see it voted down here again to-day, for I intend to offer it at the proper time.

I think I have heard gentlemen say or intimate at some time during this discussion that the few of us who took ultra ground upon this question at the extra session wanted soldiers stationed with this question at the extra session wanted soldiers stationed with bayonets as an ordinary police force at the polls, to keep the peace as policemen would keep it, before any disturbance had arisen or was even threatened! Who, ever claimed that? Who, ever pretended that it could be done? What lawyer worthy of the name of a lawyer ever dreamed that there was any constitutional power for that? Who will assert that it ever has been done until the ordinary police have been menaced or overcome?

Mr. Chairman, the distinction between using the Army as a police force and using it as an army in the military sense is as clear as night is from day. When troops are brought to the polls to quell a disturbance or a riot which has become too formidable for the ordinary civil police to manage, who invokes the use of this military force, who directs it, who controls it, the military or civil authority? Why, sir, anybody knows that civil officers invite, direct, and control it. Are we to be told that soldiers marched as a military force to the polls, controlled, directed, and guided by civil officers, and when even their own officers are directed by the civil authorities, move as an army? own officers are directed by the civil authorities, move as an army? They march there as conservators of the peace, and the generic term "police force" defines exactly what they are. Our friends on the other side would no more admit into this amendment the words "ordinary civil police" than they would abandon the amendment itself. Eminent men, men learned in the law, statesmen in both ends of the Capitol, have shown and demonstrated that the term "police force" applies to soldiers when they are used as a posse comitatus to enforce civil processes or preserve the peace within the plain purview and jurisdiction conferred by that constitutional injunction that the President shall see that the laws are faithfully executed. The gentlemen dent shall see that the laws are faithfully executed. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] stated in able, strong, and even majestic language the logical order of the application of power in the enforcement of law. Some of us in an humble way have tried to state the same thing before, and no man can missunderstand it.

In a State, first comes the sheriff, the posse comitatus, then the militia, and, if need be, the call on the President for United States troops. Under the light of the comment of the comme der the United States Government first comes the marshal, then the posse comitatus, which, as has been settled for a hundred years by the highest judicial authorities of two continents, embraces all persons within the district or county whether civilians or soldiers, whether individuals or military organizations. And beyond the posse thus composed finally comes the whole power of the Government; for foreible resistance to law must be met by forcible compulsion to obedi-ence, or civil government is at an end and mob law and anarchy are

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman—for I only asked for ten minutes and have already said more than I intended—in conclusion, let me appeal to republicans to renounce here and now, once and forever, all idea that any victory worth having is to be gained through democratic magnanimity rather than by sturdy, hard blows struck for the principles that we believe in. Democrats are not republicans; republicans ples that we believe in. Democrats are not republicans; republicans are not democrats; fundamental principles divide them as wide as the world. We believe we have fearful responsibilities resting upon us. Let us use with care the constitutional power at our command; let us hear no more of apologies or self-condemnations for using troops at the polls, as though the use of troops at the polls had been abused by somebody. On the contrary, let us remember that but for the legitimate and proper use of military power to repel armed ruffianism at the polls we should have been without a pretense to seat the Executive of this nation in the honored seat which he holds to-day. No more tampering with fundamental powers; no more and seat the Executive of this nation in the honored seat which he holds to-day. No more tampering with fundamental powers; no more apologizing for duties performed!

Mr. BROWNE. I yield what remains of my time to my colleague.

Mr. COWGILL. Mr. Chairman, precisely the same provision that is now offered as an amendment to the bill before the committee as an amendment to the our before the committee passed this House at the extra session that met on the 18th day of March, 1879. I then thought of the principle itembodied as I think of it to-day. I then contented myself with recording my vote against it. To-day I propose to briefly give the reasons why I shall again record my vote against a measure embodying a principle that in my judgment strikes at the very foundation of the Government I have sworn to support.

The amendment in question provides that no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for any of the following purposes: First, for the subsistence; second, for the equipment; third, for the transportation; and, fourth, for "compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State." These, Mr. Chairman, are the purposes and objects for which it is specifically expressed that no part of the Army appropriation shall be paid.

Now, sir, that we may fully comprehend the full scope and purpose of this amendment and the manner in which it will and evidently is intended to affect the Government if certain necessities for the use intended to affect the Government if certain necessities for the use of the Army or any portion thereof shall arise, I propose to show the

of the Army or any portion thereof shall arise, I propose to show the danger lurking therein.

And first, Mr. Chairman, I assert, as a proposition not to be successfully controverted, that no human government can be maintained against bad men bent on its destruction, excepting in the last resort, by the force of arms. That being so, an army is absolutely essential to the very existence of any government, and doubly so to a government like the American Government, embracing, as it does, all the States, with a controlling national power over all, and constituted to govern and protect all; all the citizens of which, wheresoever situated, having a right not only to expect the unmolested enjoyment of all their natural and civil or political rights that the law accords to them but to demand that they shall be protected in such enjoyment as them but to demand that they shall be protected in such enjoyment as the execution of the law secures.

Among other rights, Mr. Chairman, that belong to American freemen is the right to have peace. And the government that neglects or refuses to provide for that, neglects and refuses to provide for the enjoyment of a right without which no other right is worth asserting; peace, sir, in its broadest and fullest sense; peace in all the avocations and pursuits of life; and, above all, peace at the polls on election days; peace, sir, at that place, and at that time, where every citizen not only has the right to be, but where duty demands that he shall be, to exercise that right and discharge that duty that he may not omit without imperiling the very existence of his Government. Now, sir, what is to be the effect of your proposed amendment if it shall become a law?

This, sir: nothing more and nothing less than this, that remains the state of the sta

This, sir; nothing more and nothing less than this: that, no matter what may take place at the polls and at elections in any State in the American Union where United States officers are to be elected that ter what may take place at the polls and at elections in any State in the American Union where United States officers are to be elected that shall disturb and break the peace and prevent a fair and full expression of the public will through the ballot, you will have declared in a public statute that no part of that arm of the Government—without which it is impossible to maintain a government—shall be paid one penny for the performance of a duty the highest that devolves on freemen, namely, that of maintaining the peace.

You declare that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any portion of the Army for keeping the peace at the polls of an election. Do you not know that without peace you can have no fair election? Do you not know that without fair elections the continuance of your present form of government is an impossibility? I am not unmindful of the fact that you have attempted to turn public attention from the wicked design of this amendment by speaking of it as "any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State." I assert, sir, that if any portion of the Army should be required to aid in keeping the peace at the polls, it would then be acting in the character of a police force, and nothing else. It would be in the performance of the public peace that may arise, and that has arisen on election days, and that has prevented fair elections in this country. It is that aid that the Chief Executive of the Government is clothed with the constitutional power to invoke, in the discharge of that duty the developes upon him by reason of that provision that country. with the constitutional power to invoke, in the discharge of that duty that devolves upon him by reason of that provision that commands him to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed;" that may be rightfully called to his assistance if the exigency demanding it arises. Yes, sir, on all days; and especially would it be his duty to exercise it on election days if disturbance at the polls should require it.

The duty so to be performed, Mr. Chairman, by a part of the Army is a police duty as contradistinguished from military duty, performed to be sure by men in the military service, and belonging to and as a part of the Army, but performing precisely that duty that policemen perform under like circumstances. That portion of the Army that may be rightfully used under such circumstances is not used in that may be rightfully used under such circumstances is not used in the military sense of repelling the armed enemies of the Government in a state of war, but in that other sense of using a lawfully organized power in the Government to aid the civil authorities when necessary in maintenance of the peace and in the execution of the laws, in obedience to the mandate of the Constitution; that is, it may be used in its organized form. And herein it differs from what is generally denominated the posse comitatus, which is drawn from the body of the county, and may be called on at all times. But that fact, Mr. Chairman, may not dispense with the right and the necessity of evoking that still more efficient power of the Government as a part thereof, to protect itself and the rights of its citizens.

And, sir, when so called upon it is to peform police service and to do police duty. Then, sir, the President, being required to see that the laws are faithfully executed, is under obligation to call on the Army, or a portion thereof, if necessary, on election days as well as

Army, or a portion thereof, if necessary, on election days as well as other days; and if he has reason to believe the necessity will arise that shall require, it then becomes his duty to prepare for it by having transported to the point where he has reason to fear disturbance such part of the Army as he may deem necessary to prevent or suppress it. It is no less the duty of the Army to obey than it is of the press it. It is no less the duty of the Army to obey than it is of the President to command such service of the Army. That being the case they are entitled to pay for such service; they are entitled to transportation to the point where needed, to subsistence and the necessary equipments while in the performance of duty, and it is your duty and mine to provide the means for such payment; and the Representative that refuses it, in my judgment, refuses to perform one of the plainest duties devolving upon him under the laws and the

of the plainest duties devolving upon him under the laws and the obligations that he owes to the country as such.

The pertinent question here is, Why are you opposed to using any and all means that shall be found necessary to keep the peace at the polls and at elections? The history of the wrongs and the outrages that have been perpetrated time and again by the democratic party at elections suggest the answer, you do not want fair elections; you want that reign of terror to pray if that shall keep necessary laws. want that reign of terror to prevail that shall keep peaceable and lawabiding men from the polls; you want it understood that the man abiding men from the polls; you want it understood that the man who shall dare to exercise the most sacred right of an American freeman in many places in this land in opposition to the democratic party, shall do so at the peril of his life; you want to maintain that reign of terfor, of intimidation, and bulldozing that shall enable you to send Congressmen to these Halls to participate in the legislation of the country from districts where the entire vote polled shall be less than three thousand. It was a fitting remark to drop from the lips of the gentleman from Georgia that whoever participated in the discussion of this amendment from the democratic side should be shot.

I can readily understand, sir, why it is, living in a district where fear and terrorism so prevail that 2,628 votes all told constitute the number of ballots cast at an election for a member of Congress, and where no one dared to cast an opposing vote, that the gentlemen so elected should not only favor this amendment but should favor shooting any one who by participation in its discussion should delay its passage for an hour. Sir, it is that system of intimidation at the polls that has practically disfranchised the republican party in many States of this Union that you desire to maintain intact; that causes the democratic party to stand up as one man in favor of this amend-

The gentleman who introduced this amendment tells the committee that it is "tame and cowardly" in comparison with what he would do if he had the power. I can readily believe that, Mr. Chairman, of any man or any party that justifies the fraud and violence that have sprung out of the shot-gun policy and the tissue-ballot system that have operated so admirably to blot out republicanism in the South.

"I would wipe out this un-American, anti-democratic, villainous stat-"I would wipe out this un-American, anti-democratic, viliainous statute, which owes its existence to the inspiration of fanaticism and an era of hate," said the gentleman from Illinois who introduced this amendment. Sir, if that gentleman will turn his attention to the wiping out of that spirit of hatred and disloyalty that caused his party to involve this country in bloody, devastating war, the offspring of the damnable doctrine of State rights, that we heard so much of during the extra session, when it was earnestly insisted that the National Government has no right to preserve the peace at elections, he will engage in a work much more commendable.

Let me say to the valorous chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that I do not wonder that he loathes the insidious attack that his amendment makes upon the life of the Government, so much so that in his agony of despair at being unable to throttle it outright he feels constrained to cry out that his attack is "tame and cowardly."

There was a time, sir, when democracy was more bold and manly

There was a time, sir, when democracy was more bold and manly in their attack upon the nation's life. I say democracy, because none but democrats ever engaged in the treasonable design of destroying this Government. Failing in that mad and treasonable attempt, although you engaged in it with a courage and boldness worthy a better cause, you in a cowardly and insidious manner seek to accomplish the same purpose by withholding the necessary means to supply and sustain the power provided by the Constitution and the laws to compel the execution and enforcement of the same, whereby you yet hope to destroy what by force of arms you failed in by these dastardly and insidious attacks, in the prevention of the maintenance of that peace and good order without which no government can long

Do not deceive yourselves in the belief that you can cheat the loyal people of the land by pretending that your only object is to prevent soldiers from being stationed around the polls where there shall be no occasion for their use. Your proposition means much more than that, and well do you know that it means more. If that were all, and you so believed, you would not cling to it with such tenacity of purpose. If that were all, and I believed it, I should not care to oppose it.

You are determined to have control of this Government—or you are

You are determined to have control of this Government—or you are determined to ruin it if you can—to give you control is to allow ruin to follow. You know you cannot acquire control by lawful means and fair elections; hence you are prepared to deprive the country of the power of protecting the rights of electors and securing fair returns of the expressed will of the people through the ballot-boxes. Am I justified in making these charges against you? I appeal to the history and conduct of your party, presented on every hand, as evidence of the facts charged. Your party have so wronged and cheated and deprived the colored man of the South out of the political rights that the laws of the country intend that he shall enjoy, that he is fleeing from the land of his nativity and the clime most congenial to his nature and habits as he would flee from a pestilence sweeping over the land. over the land.

You gladly accepted the plan of reconstruction of the Government You gladly accepted the plan of reconstruction of the Government and the amendments to the Constitution as a ransom for your guilt and your treason, whereby all men were made your equals before the law. And yet with an audacity only equaled by your first mad attempt at the destruction of the Government, you deny to all the right of the elective franchise unless they shall vote as you do. Your party attempted to clothe themselves in the stolen official robes of one of the States of the Union, notwithstanding the verdict at the ballot-box was against you by thousands. You hold in suspense and undetermined the contest made against republican members of Congress where there can be no question of the legality of their election, for what purpose cannot be conceived, excepting that it shall be found necessary to unseat them to give you a preponderance of States in the election of a President. in the election of a President.

in the election of a President.

With such a purpose in view as is contemplated by this amendment, and with the record that you have made to prove what your purpose is, it is not strange that when you are called upon to defend this insidious and cowardly attempt to destroy the Government that you are dumb, your tongues cleaving to the roofs of your mouths and your muscles quivering as if stricken with a paralysis.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the attention of the committee but a short time, and to express my opposition to the political rider which has now been under discussion for some days, and which is so successfully impeding the passage of the Army appropriation bill through the House. We have witnessed, during the last two or three years, attempts on the part of the majority of this House to legislate on appropriation bills. I am very well satisfied, as is also, I think, the majority of the House, that the American people have become tired of political riders on appropriation bills. No party ever received a more decisive and emphatic condemnation at the polls than the democratic party received in November last. It was overwhelming in every State in the Union in which elections were held, and for reasons to which I now wish to make allusion. The condemnation came not simply because political riders were sought to be passed into law as indicated, but because this kind of legislation had worked against the public good. No party, I repeat, has ever been more heartily condemned for this course of action than was the democratic party at the last election, since the repeal of the Missouri compro-

Let me call attention to the voice of disapproval which has been given by the people everywhere, because of these attempts to legislate in this improper and irregular manner.

It has been argued on this side of the House with great force and conclusiveness, and indeed to the acceptance of the public mind, that an attempt to force through on an appropriation bill what is not in harmony with every branch or constituent of the legislative department of the Government, is and has been, only an attempt to compel the President to the approval of measures which did not meet his approval. Nothing was more completely demonstrated in debate in the last Congress than this, that the President has as much right to the enjoyment of his personal convictions as to any proposition as the House has to its personal and individual conviction or the Senate to its view and judgment. The veto messages of President Polk and President Pierce were read; and they were far more forcible in con-demnation of that kind of legislation than anything which was said on either side of the House.

The chief, the all-conspicuous record of the Forty-fifth Congress was attempted legislation in violation or disregard of constitutional methods. This is the only record which it left of itself. It was only that record which the people had to look to in considering whether that Congress should be approved or condemned.

I now call attention to a practical view of this pending question or subject. After the prostration of business in 1873 there followed a period of material distress in the country. When the Forty-fifth Congress came into session it was expected, Mr. Chairman, that it would devote its attention to the material interests of the country, steadily, increasing the province of the country, steadily, increasing the province of the country and closed. devote its attention to the material interests of the country, steadily, vigorously, patriotically; but, sir, no Congress ever began and closed its existence so utterly fruitless of good results as that Forty-fifth Congress. Its records show nothing looking to the material development of the country. They furnish a record of no remedial measure, no process by which the great industrial concerns of the country were to be revived and advanced. That Congress came into power with a majority twice as large as that of the present Congress; and the expression of the people in November last foreshadows that this present Congress will be condemned by the people when they reach it in November part

There are vast interests in the country which to-day lie prostrate, and to demonstrate this, I propose to occupy the time allotted to me. These great interests ought to be taken hold of by the appropriate committees, and then by the House; but the House was so completely debauched by the attempted legislation of last spring and summer that it is incapacitated for legitimate legislation. We, the representatives of the people, are simply in the power of partisanship and partisan legislation. The democratic House of last year proposed nothing and voted nothing that was not wholly and entirely in the interest of party supremacy. It never attacked the tariff, which it said should be modified when it came into power. It never passed a vote for the revival of American trade and commerce. It never gave one vote which it can look to to-day with the least possible pride or satisfaction.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the American people, thank God! are vastly more intelligent than the politician is inclined to suppose. There was an intelligent analysis of that democratic Congress made by the people last November. The vote then was a vote of want of confidence; it was a vote of severe censure. Let me say that we are here to-day, after four and a half months of session, and have nothing to show as a result.

have nothing to show as a result.

During the last four and a half months that we have been here in session, what has been done by the majority in this House? Has it done anything? Is there one single measure to which the other side can refer with pleasure? Not one. We have adopted some new rules that are to furnish a common burial-ground for all the business the committees may work out. That and that only have we accomplished since we came here on the 1st day of December last.

I hold that practically, Mr. Chairman, we have in Congress far too much of what may be called mere political discussion and political action. Strike out this rider from the Army appropriation bill, and it goes through the House in an hour. Strike out political riders from our appropriation bills generally, and all of them may be passed within a week. Then there is left to us the whole session to ask what is necessary and what we shall do to build up the great interests of the country.

Mr. Chairman, since I took my seat here within the last hour, I have marked with my pencil some bills, now pending on the Calendars of the House. I come to the first—a resolution coming from the Committee on Commerce, an ever active, vigilant, untiring committee of this House. They ask that there may be a committee appointed to whom shall be referred the subject-matter of the commercial relations and interests of the country, and who may be authorized to inquire what means may be best adapted to promote the foreign trade of the United States. That question, simple yet transcendently important, and which may prove to be the chief escape from the burdens of our national debt, and give us permanent prosperity, must lie on the Speaker's table or have a reference to some Calendar, where it will remain from this day of from the day of the transcendent of the country of th will remain from this day or from the day of its introduction to the close of the session, because nearly every appropriation bill brought in here must have a democratic rider on it, a political rider, calculated to advance the interests of the party in power in this House.

Take another bill from the Committee on Commerce. It is the bill to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce. The magnitude of the interstate commerce of the country, or the means by which it shall be freed from the exactions placed upon it by the railroads and other carriers, cannot have discussion and action. The burdens must be endured because the majority more desire the success of their party. This bill was reported February 26.

Another bill was reported to the House from the same committee, December 19, concerning commerce and navigation and the regula-tion of steam-vessels. But interstate commerce carried on by railroads, or commerce upon the rivers and lakes of the country by steamvessels, has no rights which are to be respected where the interests of the dominant party are to be subserved and ask attention. Party, and not the common weal, is the watchword.

The Committee on Public Lands have reported a number of bills for the passage of which every settler on the frontier is anxiously praying. One of them is of more value, has more of good all the riders which the Committee on Appropriations aided by the Committee on Military Affairs can write out. They are for the relief Committee on Military Affairs can write out. They are for the relief of actual settlers on the public lands, for their protection against the land speculators of the West and the East.

There is either before the House or the Committees on Public Lands and Mines and Mining, the able and elaborate report of the public land commission, obtained at great cost to the Government. Who expects that these bills will be reached and passed or this report considered?

I now call attention to another bill, a great and important one, coming from the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. Cox.] a bill to regulate immigration. That gentleman reported the bill January 1. He was alive to the interests and to the necessities of the immigrants coming to this country in such large numbers. His committee did its duty. The chairman did his duty, but his mouth is closed by the dictation of his party. That bill is on the Calendar, simply to be there, to die there, and he never expects to hear it read from the Clerk's desk. Why? Because our whole time is expended in party legislation and discussion.

Take the riders away from these appropriation bills and let these subjects which I have mentioned come before the House in their proper order, and so intense is the interest centered in them, and so important to the industries of the country, that every one of them will be passed through the House. Take away from this Army appropriation bill this rider, and our work upon it will be very short. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. You voted for it last session.

Mr. TOWNSHEAD, of Illinois. You voted for it last session.
Mr. DUNNELL. I will come to that presently. I hope that the other side will not participate in this debate. [Laughter.]
Now, I allude to another bill, a very important one, a bill that is vital to the interests of the country; a bill to refund \$760,000,000 of the national debt. If the opportunity of refunding that debt slips away from us now, it is certainly gone for this year. The ability to refund it was admitted on all sides, when that bill was reported to this House, at the low rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. That bill is also on the Calendar. It must there remain for aught I know, and all of these vast money and material interests be held in abeyance simply that the democratic party may say that no portion of the Army shall be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls.

Mr. WARNER. Are we not paying now about $8,000,000 a month of that debt?

Mr. DUNNELL. But the time is slipping away when we can refund this $760,000,000, and yet this democratic House is dumb in the presence of this mighty interest, simply that it may get time to discuss questions of party policy.

Mr. WARNER. The money interest is abundantly championed by that side of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. We had brave soldiers from 1861 to 1865, as gallant and valorous men as ever marched under a triumphant flag; as lant and valorous men as ever marched under a triumphant flag; as brave men as ever rejoiced in a great national victory; as grand an army as was ever read of in history, and as brave as ever marched to triumphant success. We made many promises to those gallant men. We promised that the crippled, the maimed, they, their wives and their children, should be well cared for. There are four or five general pension bills pending, looking to the interests of these gallant men. They must remain unpassed, because the other side wants to decree how the President may use the Army. These mighty interests are to be forgotten or ignored. ests are to be forgotten or ignored.

I congratulated the House, Mr. Chairman, the other day that we had so small an Army. Why have we and why may we have so small an Army? It is because we have in our national history always prom-an Army? It is because we have in our national history always promised to do well for the volunteer. We are proposing to do it on the Calendar. But the Calendar alone will tell the story of what this House will do, or rather will fail to do.

One or two other references I will make; and I might occupy a good deal more time than is given me. There is a bill reported by Mr. BICKNELL, of Indiana, a bill that tells how we may count and determine the electoral vote. That must be held on the Calendar. I do not know what that bill is. The presumptions are that it is linked with the very life of the nation. For who did not feel, that were members of the Forty-fourth Congress, that the very Republic was in peril in more than one hour, during the last week that preceded the 3d day of March, 1877? Who did not then turn pale at the terrible peril that threatened us? But this electoral bill must sleep the sleep that knows no waking.

Then, here is the Chinese question. Here is a bill referring to that.

Then, here is the Chinese question. Here is a bill referring to that. There are many others I might speak of. Here is an act for the relief of homesteaders on the public lands. Here is an act to alter and amend the sinking-fund act, deemed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] to be a bill of immense importance to the country. I could read the titles of dozens of bills here that ought to arouse the patriotism of both sides of this House, and bring us to action, to the patriotism of both sides of this House, and bring us to action, to legitimate legislation, and the abandonment of this miserable policy of legislating politically on appropriation bills.

Mr. Chairman, I have not claimed that the democratic party was the mother of this kind of legislation. The old whig party practiced it; the old democratic party practiced it; the republican party practiced it; and the new democratic party has practiced it. But I did hope, as an American citizen, that the House would come together this year and say we have had enough of that. I did hope that the other side would accept the proposition that henceforth we were legislating for the country, for its material interests, and for its glory rather than for the triumph of a party.

But it seems that this beneficent result is not to be attained, even after the long struggle in the extra session, a session that has got its well-the long struggle in the extra session, a session that has got its wellrounded place in American history, over which there falls not one ray of glory, but to it there can come nothing but the blackness of shame, of defeat to the party making it a necessity, and of defeat to legislation that ought to have been enacted. Members remember how much of legislation was lost when Congress adjourned on the 4th of March, 1879, with a private Calendar embracing many hundreds of bills untouched and already we have a Calendar of some thirteen hundred bills. We expect that these Calendars will be enlarged rather than diminished. Some four hundred of these bills are for pensioning soldiers.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Speer] who now honors me with his attention put upon the title page of a speech which he delivered in this House a few days ago, these words:

The peace of the country, the regular discharge of all the functions of the Government, the confidence of our commercial and industrial interests, the quiet of the public mind, and above all the supreme necessity of maintaining the Government, are so far superior to the importance of any mere party victory that reason will not brook hesitation, and patriotism but obeys the dictates of reason.

These words, an apparent quotation, constitute a sentence of great force and truthfulness as well as beauty. They enunciate doctrines which should characterize the legislation of the nation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg to state to the gentleman from Minnesota that what he has just read occurs in the body of the speech of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] as part of that gentleman's own remarks.

Mr. DUNNELL. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his correction; I thought them the words of another, indicating the argument of the gentleman from Georgia. The whole speech I cheerfully concede abounded in admirably stated propositions, logically discussed, and most happily illustrated. I have promised to yield fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN,] and if he will allow me a moment I will state in reply to a suggestion coming from the other side, that I voted for this proposition last session, that while I admit the fact, I find a justification for a change of my vote in the vagueness which clings to the amendment, and especially in view of the congressional elections of this year in all the States and in view of the presidential election. The gentleman from New York is now entitled to the floor for fifteen minutes, and the balance of my time, after he has concluded, is given to his colleague, [Mr. LAPHAM.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I appeal to every sober [laughter] and honest member of this House that the "rider" is an outlaw, and I declare to the House and the country that life is too short for me to discuss it.

to the House and the country that life is too short for me to discuss it.

Mr. Chairman, it is with unaffected hesitation that I engage in any way in this debate, because I differ in toto with some of my friends who have preceded me. Their objective point has been to induce the democrats to talk. I think the democrats have talked too much on this subject, to their hurt, already. I say frankly that I do not propose to argue now the question of riders to appropriation bills, but I do mean to furnish an inferential key to the silence of the democracy or the subject now and I have that two time will not be whelly lest on the subject now, and I hope that my time will not be wholly lost. Unless I am mistaken the silence over there points to a change of heart and tactics. [Laughter.] I aim to be friendly, and show in brief that the democracy is either bewildered and stark mad in respect to the true character and aims of their political opponents, or else that the democracy itself can never be safe and protected from the wicked republicans, at the polls or elsewhere, without troops.

We listened the other day, Mr. Chairman, to the distinguished independent, liberal democrat from Georgia [Mr. Felton] while he lashed and unsparingly anathematized the money power of his country, and denounced many of his colleagues and thousands of his fellow-citizens, mainly republicans, as Ishmaelites and pirates, "armed with grappling-irons for robbery, plunder, and spoliation." The gentleman shall not say that I misrepresent him. I will repeat to the committee his exact language, word for word. I ask the Clerk to read it, and hope he will, as usual, put the emphasis in the right place every time. place every time.

The Clerk read as follows:

These banks

Meaning of course their managers-

meaning of course their managers—anchor the States to this Union. Yes, sir, like the piratical craft, with its black flag and heavy guns, bearing down upon a rich, unarmed East Indiaman, as soon as the Ishmaelite of the high seas comes within grappling distance of that rich freight the grappling irons are fastened into its sides, and it is held firmly until robbery, plunder, and spoliation have done their work, and then the despoiled ship is left to float away a helpless and worthless thing, the sport of wind and wave.
So these banks will anchor the States to this Union; they will thrust their political and monetary influences into the sides of these States and hold them steady until their labor and productions, their lands and houses, all their wealth, become a sacrifice acceptable to this money power.

a sacrifice acceptable to this money power.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. The meaning of this language is neither obscure nor questionable. The gentleman's soulless, impersonal term shall not shield him. He declares that "these banks," a term which includes more than six thousand and three hundred institutions, employing mainly the capital of dead men and laboring-men under the supervision of thirty-five or forty thousand of his countrymen, including about half the members of both Houses of Congress, are pirates bent upon stealing, until the houses, lands, and wealth of the country become a sacrifice to the money power! All that, notwithstanding the gentleman knows or should know that "these banks" are generally regarded as useful and indispensable to the people as the houses in which the people live.

We have witnessed, Mr. Chairman, before in this Hall frantic efforts

We have witnessed, Mr. Chairman, before in this Hall frantic efforts to picture the hideousness of the money power of the United States; but the lurid imagination of the democrat from Georgia has produced the most exasperating image of the monster in congressional history! Suppose the gentleman is right, can the democracy manage the pirates

without troops?

If the gentleman from Georgia is right, it is the first duty of Congress to arrest and punish the "money power." There is not a moment to be lost! The democracy is Congress now! How will it proceed? Will you begin with the Sage of Gramercy Park? Or will you make an example of the proprietor of the New York Herald? His "money power"—he is a democrat—has recently sent at least half a million of dollars to starving Ireland. He is notoriously and manifestly a first-class "Ishmaelite" and pirate, according to the gentleman from Georgia. If the democracy, following the lead of Dr. Felton, shall decide to elevate James Gordon Bennett to a gibbet on Capitol Hill, can the job be done without troops?

There sits over there my friend and colleague, Mr. Morron. He is literally one of "these banks," going about with his money power all the time, plunging his grappling-irons into the sides of people and States at home and abroad. Incidentally, he has lately half loaded a ship for starving women and children in Ireland. Can an order of the democracy to swing Mr. Morron at the yard-arm of the Constella-

tion on her return home be executed without troops?

Once more, more atrocious and immediately dangerous. I vouch for it that a syndicate of New York bankers bought an unfinished railroad of the governor of North Carolina a week or two ago, binding themselves to finish it at a cost of four or five millions of dollars; which means, of course, that a fresh "piratical craft" of the "money power" have plunged their irons into the sides of North Carolina for "robbery, plunder, and spoliation." This is an aggravated case, and requires prompt attention from the democratic House. The railroad runs to the very frontier of Georgia, and the pirates nefariously persist in building it, notwithstanding the gentleman from Georgia says that the tax on steel rails shall not be reduced below $28 per ton. Everybody will say that these robbers of North Carolina are Georgia says that the tax on steel rails shall not be reduced below $28 per ton. Everybody will say that these robbers of North Carolina are unfit to hang but deserve to be, and must be, cremated! My key to the situation is the assumption that the democratic House takes that serious and sanguinary view of the case, and are silently studying how to eatch and burn up the rascals without troops, marshals, or money. The issue is clear in the minds and will of the people, and money. The issue is clear in the minds and will of the people, and the country is safe!

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, chose the other day to characterize the law with the execution of which this amendment proposes to interfere as a law originating in the hatreds of the war. There can be no greater mistake than that. I fear the chairman of this important committee has not familiarized himself with the subject. The law which permits the executive power to use the Army and Navy of the United States in enforcing the constitutional duty of the President to see that the laws are faithfully executed was passed during the administration of George Washington. It has been upon the statute-books of the Republic for almost ninety years. It remained substantially unchanged for a period of seventy years from the time of its enactment, during which time this country passed through many stormy and exciting periods, and no complaint was ever made against the use of the military power of the Government, which from time to time was invoked by the civil authorities to aid in the execution of the laws. It is now found in section 5298 of the Revised Statutes, and reads as follows:

Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any State or Territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any or all the States, and to employ such parts of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, or to suppress such rebellion, in whatever State or Territory thereof the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed, or the execution thereof forcibly obstructed.

In 1865 a proposition was made in the Congress of the United States to entirely inhibit this use of the military power for any purpose on election day. It resulted finally in the passage of the act which constitutes section 2002 of the Revised Statutes, and is as follows:

No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

That statute does prohibit the bringing of the military power to a place where a general or special election is held in a State, except for the single purpose of keeping the peace at the polls. That restriction undoubtedly originated from the hatreds of the war. But on which side of the House was the hatred which prompted its adoption? Not on this side of the House, or on the part of the friends of this side, but on the part of those who had failed in their efforts to destroy the Government of the United States and prevent the execution of all its laws. They sought to fix this limitation, and they secured it by the assent of republicans then in Congress; and now by law, with the single exception of preserving the peace at the polls and executing the laws, there can be no interference by the use of the Army on election day.

Now, what has brought about the change in the attitude of gen-Why this enforced silence? They say that we voted for the passage of a provision similar to this during the extra session of this Congress. Although I was not one of the number who voted for it, and gress. Although I was not one of the number who voted for it, and although I was opposed to it, I can see very good reasons why my associates on this side of the House were willing at that session to let it pass. It changed no law, but only withheld the means of executing it. There were no congressional elections to be held last year except in the State of California, in one election district in the State of New York, and I believe in one election district in Iowa.

But we are now approaching a congressional election which is to embrace the entire delegation to Congress in the next House of Representatives. In the mean time the Supreme Court has solved the only doubt on which gentlemen on the other side rested their opporesentatives. In the mean time the Supreme Court has solved the only doubt on which gentlemen on the other side rested their opposition, the question of the constitutionality of the Federal election laws. Those laws are now declared to be constitutional, and gentlemen on that side of the House at this very session have voted for the appointment of officers to see to their execution. These laws have been enacted since the passage of the act of 1865. Why, then, refuse the means to execute these laws? Why this change of front on the other side? Why do the advocates of this amendment refuse to discuss it? We remember that at the extra session of Congress the motto was, "Not one man on this side will falter in his support;" "He who dallies is a dastard, and he who doubts is damned." Mr. Chairman, he who dallies is a dastard no longer; and if he who doubts is still to be damned, my heart flows out in earnest sympathy for the is still to be damned, my heart flows out in earnest sympathy for the silent and doubting spectators on the other side of this Hall. [Laugh-

Gentlemen, you know that it is your duty to provide the means for executing these as well as all other laws. You know that to refuse to provide the means for executing this law on the day of election is a willful omission of a plain constitutional duty resting upon you by reason of the oaths which you took when you entered upon the discharge of your duties as members of this House.

Here is the reason of this ominous silence. It is because not one word can be said by any conscientious and right-minded man in favor of this amendment and in defense of this proposition. That is the reason for the obstinate silence on the other side. We, on the contrary, in view of the magnitude of the national elections to be held this coming fall, are free to see that this restriction upon the executhis coming fall, are free to see that this restriction upon the execution of the laws is not ingrafted on this or any other appropriation bill, and are earnest in our opposition to it.

I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, to be afforded an opportunity, earlier in this discussion, to dwell somewhat at length on this subject; but as I have been limited by the circumstances under which this debate has progressed, I will forbear to say anything further on the present occasion

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes remain of the time allowed for general debate.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to offer an amendment if it be now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If no gentleman desires to occupy further time in general debate, the remaining portion of the bill will be subject to has the right to use physical power to enforce the law.

debate and amendment under the five-minute rule. The Clerk will report the pending amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Mr. ROBESON. I move to amend the pending amendment by adding thereto that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further. That nothing herein or in any other act contained shall be held to forbid or prevent any citizen of the United States, or any person in its service, or under the protection of its law, from assisting the civil officers of the Government in the execution of the laws of the United States and the preservation of its peace, whenever properly called upon for such assistance.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Robeson and Mr. Sparks were appointed.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to amend by adding at the end of the proposed section the words, "except as authorized by the Constitution of the United States."

I shall not occupy five minutes in discussing this amendment; but am quite anxious that members on both sides of the House, and especially on the other side, shall understand this amendment. very brief and easy of comprehension. If it be adopted, the only exception to the operation of this proposed new section, which comes from the bowels of the Military Committee of the House, will be that it shall not operate to annul the Constitution of the United States; that this section if it becomes law shall not prevent the use of the Army at the polls to keep the peace, so far as such use may be authorized by the Constitution. I suppose every gentleman here, every lover of the Constitution, will feel bound by his oath to vote for this amend-

Mr. SPARKS. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask the Clerk to read the whole of the proposed section as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State, except as authorized by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is an amendment to this amendment in order? The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order at this time;

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then let me ask the gentleman from Ohio who offers the amendment whether he has any objection to inserting after the word "authorized" the three words "and provided for."

Mr. KEIFER. I think the amendment is quite clear as it stands.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I will vote for the gentleman's amendment if he will simply insert after the word "authorized" the three words "and provided for."
Mr. FIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio two questions: First, is there anything in the Constitution of the United States that authorizes the President to use the Army as a police force at the polls? And, secondly, if such power is granted by the Constitution can it be impaired by an act of Congress? [Cries of "No!"

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to answer both those questions. I reply to the first by saying, yes, there is a requirement of the Constitution which makes it the duty of the President of the United States to exewhich makes it the duty of the President of the United States to execute all the laws of this country, including those laws which protect every man in the right to vote. Secondly, if I understand the gentleman's question—I shall be obliged if he will repeat it—

Mr. FIELD. If such power is granted to the President by the Constitution, can it be impaired by an act of Congress?

Mr. KEIFER. I say it cannot be impaired by an act of Congress; but this is an attempt to impairit; and I desire that gentlemen shall not do that sort of thing here. Hence I offer the amendment.

Mr. FIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio one further.

Mr. FIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio one further question. It is this: can the uses which the President, in the execu-question. It is this: can the uses which the President, in the execution of the law in time of peace, under the Constitution, may make of the Army be regulated by law or not?

Mr. KEIFER. That has nothing to do with this question. [Laughter.] This is a question relating to the use of money. But I will say this: granting that the use of the Army may be regulated by law, there is still the constitutional requirement, the constitutional injunction upon the President of the United States to "see that the laws are faithfully executed."

Mr. FIELD. Does he execute them according to law or against law?

Mr. KEIFER. The Supreme Court has recently decided that he

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Keifer, the Chairman declared that the "noes" seemed to prevail.

Mr. CONGER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KEIFER and Mr. SPARKS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 98. So the amendment of Mr. Keifer was not agreed to.
Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "as a" before the words "police force" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "instead of the ordinary civil;" so that, if amended, the section will read:

"That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used instead of the ordinary civil police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I desire to say only that this identical amendment was offered by myself at the extra session, was subsequently offered in the Senate, and was voted down in both Houses. It confines the restriction to the use of the Army as an "ordinary civil police force."

The question being put on agreeing to the amendment, the Chairman declared that the "noes" seemed to prevail.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, called for tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, and Mr. SPARKS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 90. So the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to affect the right to employ any part of the Army or Navy to execute the laws in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be authorized by the Constitution or by act of Congress.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTTERWORTH and Mr. SPARKS were

The question recurred on Mr. Sparks's amendment as amended.

Mr. REED. I move the committe rise; there have been a good many amendments offered, and we ought to see the effect they have. The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move the following amendment to the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided. That nothing herein contained shall be held to interfere in any manner with the enforcement of title 24, relating to civil rights, and title 26, relating to the elective franchise, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no desire, of course, Mr. Chairman, at this late hour of the evening to indulge in any extended remarks on the general question involved in this discussion. I shall content myself with calling the attention of my friends on this side of the House to some sections of the Revised Statutes which are pertinent to the consideration of the important issue involved in the pending proposition.

They are as follows:

They are as follows:

Sec. 2022. The marshal and his general deputies, and such special deputies, shall keep the peace, and support and protect the supervisors of election in the discharge of their duties, preserve order at such places of registration and at such polls, prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting thereat, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately, either at the place of registration or polling place, or elsewhere, and either before or after registering or voting, to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits, or attempts or offers to commit, any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein, or who commits any offense against the laws of the United States; but no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, or of the supervisors of election, or either of them. and, for the purposes of arrest or the presence of the peace, the supervisors of election shall, in the absence of the marshal's deputies, or if required to assist such deputies, have the same duties and powers as deputy marshals; nor shall any person, on the day of such election, be arrested without process for any offense committed on the day of registration.

Sec. 2024. The marshal or his general deputies, or such special deputies as are thereto specially empowered by him, in writing, and under his hand and seal, whenever he or either or any of them is forcibly resisted in executing their duties under this title, or shall, by violence, threats, or menaces, be prevented from executing such duties, or from arresting any person who has committed any offense for which the marshal or his general or his special deputies are anthorized from executing such duties, or from arresting any person who has committed any offense for which the marshal or his general or his special deputies are anthorized to make such arrest, are, and each of them is, empowered to su

SEC. 1984. The commissioners authorized to be appointed by the preceding section are empowered, within their respective counties, to appoint, in writing, under their hands, one or more suitable persons, from time to time, who shall execute all such warrants or other process as the commissioners may issue in the lawful performance of their duties, and the persons so appointed shall have authority to summon and call to their aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of the proper county, or such portion of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as may be necessary to the performance of the duty with which they are charged; and such warrants shall run and be executed anywhere in the State or Territory within which they are issued.

SEC. 5522. Every person, whether with or without any authority, power, or process, or pretended authority, power, or process, of any State, Territory, or municipality, who obstructs, hinders, assaults, or by bribery, solicitation, or otherwise, interferes with or prevents the supervisors of election, or either of them, or the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, the performance of any duty required of them, or either of them, or which he or they, or either of them, may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States, in the execution of process or otherwise, or who by any of the means before mentioned hinders or prevents the free attendance and presence at such places of registration or at such polls of election, or full and free access and egress to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or in going to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or to and from any returns or certificates thereof, may be had, or who molests, interferes with, removes, or ejects from any such place of registration or poll of election, or of canvassing votes cast thereat, or of making returns or certificates thereof, any supervisor of election, the marshal, or his general or special deputies, or either of them, or who threatens, or attempts, or offers so to do, or refuses or neglects to aid and assist any supervisor of election, or the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of his or their duties, when required by him or them, or either of them, to give such aid and assistance, shall be liable to instant arrest without process, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

The amendment as amended by the committee reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State: Provided, That nothing in this provision shall be construed to prevent the use of troops to protect against domestic violence in each of the States on application of the Legislature thereof, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened.

This amendment prohibits the payment of any money appropriated in this bill for the use of the Army "as a police force" to keep the peace at congressional elections.

Section 2022, to which I have called attention, makes it the duty of marshals, deputy marshals, and supervisors of election, acting under United States laws, to "keep the peace" of the United States at congressional elections.

Sections 1982, 1983, and 1984 make it the duty of marshals to arrest and prosecute "persons violating any of the provisions of chapter 7 of Title 'Crimes,'" and empower "suitable persons" appointed to execute warrants for the arrest of such offenders "to call to their aid the bystanders, or posse comitatus of the proper county, or such portion of the land or naval forces of the United States" as may be necessary to this end.

Section 5522 of chapter 7, Title "Crimes," makes it a misdemeanor for any person to interfere with any marshal or supervisor of election "in the performance of any duty required of them, or either of them, or which he or they or either of them may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States in the execution of process or otherwise." Section 2022 before cited makes it the duty of the marshal and his deputies, by its express terms, to "keep the peace" and to "preserve order" at elections. To resist any such marshal or in any manner to interfere to prevent his keeping the peace at any congressional election is a misdemeanor under section 5522, and "such portion of the land or naval forces of the United States or of the militia as may be necessary" may be summoned and called to their aid by marshals to arrest such offenders on view.

The amendment as amended prohibits the payment of "any portion of the land or naval forces" summoned "as a police force to keep the peace." Just what this means no one favoring it has yet explained. If it means anything its intent is to keep the forces of the United States from being called in if necessary to aid the marshals in preserving the peace and enforcing the laws against those who break it at the polls on election day. If the use of the Army for this purpose is not its use "as a police force" I am unable to conceive what is such use. Here is a law which requires the peace to be kept at elections. "in the performance of any duty required of them, or either of them, use. Here is a law which requires the peace to be kept at elections. In my judgment that is a law which the President shall "take care" to have "faithfully executed." It requires marshals to see that it be faithfully executed in the first instance; if they come short of this the President must see to it, or he fails in complete performance of his sworn duty.

There stands the statute, and his oath is registered! Keep the peace, says the law. "He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed," says the Constitution to the President. This law, if it says anything, and I think it is meant to express a great deal, says:
No, Mr. President, not by the Army, of which you are Commanderin-Chief; not at least by the Army "as a police force." By the Army as what, then? Under martial law? As a force above, if need be in disregard of, the civil law? No; rather let it be in obedience to the civil law, to which martial law should be subordinate in time of peace. Let the law stand in favor of peace at the polls on election day, and its majesty will command respect and obedience in every loyal community without the intervention of the Army. Wherever these are wanting let all the power of the Government, civil and martial, if need be, be invoked to maintain it.

My amendment is intended to preserve all laws upon the statutebook enacted for security of the franchise and civil rights of all citizens in full vigor. This is an attempt to obscure the meaning and andermine the force of those laws, and as such I shall resist it to the it says anything, and I think it is meant to express a great deal, says:

zens in full vigor. This is an attempt to obscure the meaning and undermine the force of those laws, and as such I shall resist it to the end. If this be not the intent of this endeavor, let it be defined. It is the purpose and spirit of this assault that I combat. Ridicule cannot obliterate these. They will march onward toward their object if not met and overcome at every point. Instead of less we need more and more stringent laws upon these subjects. The silenced vote of the stringent laws upon these subjects. of nearly a million citizens yet speak, in an undertone it may be, for justice to the enfranchised, and I for one refuse to close my ears to this voice crying for help.

There is no republican press, there is no republican party which dares assert itself, there is no republican freedom at elections in the South. I will yield no consent to make such injustice and such oppression more secure and more triumphant anywhere. In this my own rights and those of my constituents are jeopardized. One white man's vote South counts much more in this House than one white man's vote at the North. It is the old oligarchy in a new and more potential form, that I would see obliterated, not strengthened and given new lease of power. Current signs of the hour all admonish us of this peril. It is unpatriotic and unjust to yield a hair's breadth in face of this latest endeavor to enforce the will of a democratic eaucus as the law of this Republic, and I utter my voice and shall give my vote against it.

But above and beyond all this is the iniquity of forcing legislation by riders on appropriation bills. The constitutions of three-fourths of the States prohibit what is here proposed. I care not what the practice has hitherto been by either or any party. It is enough for me that the practice is iniquitous. Even the constitution of the late rebel confederacy prohibited this method of legislation. Eight months ago a domineering majority of a secret democratic cancus invoked this power in an attempt to destroy the independence of the co-ordinate branches of this Government, and only failed to accomplish its object by the veto of a republican President. That usurpation has been condemned since by an indignant people at the ballot-box, and now it is again attempted, in a new and comparatively insignificant form, it is true, but in the same spirit and under a like dictation of caucus domination. A secret party caucus maturing legislation by regular organic caucus committees of the dominant party in either House is a power unknown to the Constitution; but if it is allowed to grow it will become a fourth estate of the Republic, and every consideration of patriotism and of good govern-ment requires that it be banished forever from our legislative his-tory. If, therefore, I had no objection to the rider itself I should oppose it, because it encourages a vicious practice which has no excuse in this if it ever can have an excuse in any case.

Mr. MITCHELL'S amendment to the amendment was disagreed to. Mr. CONGER. Let the amendment as amended be read.

Mr. Sparks's amendment, as amended, was read, as follows:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State: Provided, That nothing in this provision shall be construed to prevent the use of troops to protect against domestic violence in each of the States, on application of the Legislature thereof, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened.

Mr. Sparks's amendment, as amended, was then adopted.
Mr. SPARKS. I ask unanimous consent now to go back and insert the following as a part of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] and adopted a few days ago. If this proposed amendment is read in connection with what has been adopted the committee will see the propriety of it. This matter was brought to my notice by the Secretary of War, and the simple reading of it will make plain its importance and the necessity of it. The Committee on Military Affairs also agree upon the propriety of it. It is a mere verbal amendment. Let the original amendment be first read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That upon the application of any college, university, or institution of learning, incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having a capacity at the same time to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, the President may detail an officer of the Army on the retired list to act as president, superintendent, or professor therefor, and such officer may receive from the institution to which he may be detailed the difference between his retired and full pay, and shall not receive any additional pay or allowance from the United States.

M. SDADES Now that is already adopted, and the processed.

Mr. SPARKS. Now, that is already adopted, and the proposed amendment is to come in after that and make it effective.

Mr. FIELD. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me to call his attention to one thing I will say to him that some of our largest colleges and institutions of learning, such as Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, and others, are not incorporated under the laws of any State, and these would be excluded under the provisions of this amendment. They received their incorporation from the Crown when the States were colonies.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know anything about that. This clause has been already discussed, adopted, and the addition which I propose to it is simply to make it effective and to make sense out of it, that

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman will permit me to say to him, those colleges which he has mentioned, Harvard, Yale, and Dartmouth, get these appointments under the law as it now exists, if desired.

Mr. SPARKS. I hope the committee will permit the amendment to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to add to the clause the following:

"Officers so detailed shall be governed by general rules prescribed from time to time by the President. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of any small-arms or pieces of field artillery belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section; and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case in double the value of the property for the care and safe-keeping thereof, and for the return of the same when required.

Several members objected.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

Mr. FIELD. Is this amendment in order?
The CHAIRMAN. Objection having been made the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FIELD. I ask unanimous consent to amend the clause as follows: strike out the words "incorporated under the laws of" and insert the word "incorporated" before college, and the word "in" before the words "any State;" so it will read if adopted: Mr. FIELD.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is objected to.
Mr. REAGAN. I object. I objected to the amendment in the first

Mr. REED. As I understand it these are incorporated institutions in the States and under the laws of the States.

Mr. FIELD. I think not. They were incorporated in the first instance when they received their grants from the Crown, and there has been no act of incorporation since that time on the part of the States.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a question of order. Is the amendment pending

The CHAIRMAN. It is not; objection having been made, the

The CHARMAN. It is not; objection having been made, the amendment is not before the committee.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I want to move one amendment to which I hope there will be no objection. It is to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred." I have but one institution in my State and I should like for it to be brought within the provisions of this amendment if possible.

Mr. CRARMS.

Mr. SPARKS. I am satisfied to have it amended in that way.
Mr. BAYNE. It is altogether unnecessary. The gentleman can have an officer detailed for the college without the amendment. The amendment he proposes cannot effect anything.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so that if adopted it will read:

"That upon the application of any college, university, or institution of learning, incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having a capacity at the same time to educate not less than one hundred male students, the President may detail any officer of the Army," &c.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must object, sir. We have not Army officers enough for the purpose.

Mr. ATKINS. I insist now upon my motion that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair; Mr. Springer reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments thereto.

Mr. ATKINS. I move the previous question on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole to the Army appropriation bill, and on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the main ques-tion was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Clymer, till May 1;
To Mr. McGowan, for two weeks, on account of important business;

To Mr. Robeson, for one week, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WADDILL, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of James

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 5632) to provide for a public building at the city of Paducah, State of Kentucky.

MILITARY RESERVATION IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to military reservation in Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

STORAGE OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the necessity for additional facilities for the storage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PUEBLO OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the survey of the pueblo of San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

C. C. ROBERTS.

Mr. MURCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5802) for the relief of C. C. Roberts, late an acting lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment of United States Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The motion of Mr. ATKINS was then agreed to.

And accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, in pursuance of a concurrent resolution providing for the appointment of a joint committee, consisting of two members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and three members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective presiding officers, to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on cigars and other articles subject to excise duties, appointed Mr. Voorhees and Mr. Kernan as members of the loint committee on the part of the Finance Committee of the Senate. joint committee on the part of the Finance Committee of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant, the action of his Department in adopting Sawyer's improved canister, and his opinion as to the justice of compensating Sawyer for his invention; which, on motion of Mr. HOAR, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 18th ultimo, letters from the Chief of Engineers and Lieutenant-Colonel C. S. Stewart, senior member of the board of engineers for the Pacific coast, and a report of George W. Wood, upon the survey of Yaquima Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of ex-soldiers of Hilliards, Franklin County, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of what is known as the sixty-surgeon bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONKLING presented a resolution and proceedings of the republican association of the seventeenth assembly district of the city of New York, calling attention to the precarious and dangerous condition of the provisions touching the count of the electoral votes, and asking that action may be taken on that subject before the expiration of the present session of Congress; which were referred to the Select Committee to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the result of the elections of President and Vice-President of the United States.

He also presented the memorial of the Seneca Nation of Indians, of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3573) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians to grant title to lands for cemetery purposes on the Allegany reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably and with certain amendments the bill (S. No. 900) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff. From the same committee I am also instructed to report back the bill (S. No. 906) providing for a commission to examine into the subject of the tariff, with a view of facility of the subject of the tating legislation in reference thereto, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill reported will be placed on the Calendar. What disposition does the Senator wish made of the other bill?

Mr. CONKLING and others. Let it be postponed indefinitely. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Delaware if the indefinite postponement of this bill is a final disposition of the subject?

Mr. BAYARD. No, sir. There were two bills reported back relating to the same subject, the one adopted by the committee and reported back favorably; and as to the other they asked simply to be discharged from its further consideration. It is not an indefinite postponement of the measure; on the contrary, it is a favorable report upon it.

Mr. HOAR. If the bill adopted by the committee be a brief one, I ask to have it read at the desk.

Mr. BAYARD. As I stated, one bill has been reported favorably, and it became unnecessary to report the other bill on the same subject favorably.

Mr. HOAR. My present request is that the bill reported favorably be read.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Nehemiah Ford, praying that he be granted a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2859) granting a pension to Paul Walker, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL C. SCHOYER.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer, to report it favorably, without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. There are special reasons why that bill should pass at once. It has come here from the House. I know personally that the beneficiary of the bill, who is a citizen of Pennsylvania, is in very great need of the relief which will be secured by the passage of the bill; and I ask that it may be acted upon now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information, subject to objection

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer, late captain of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $50 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with the bill ?

Mr. PLATT. There is a written report. Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, this day submitted by Mr. PLATT:

Mr. PLATT:

The Committee on Pensions, to which was referred House bill No. 253, increasing the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer, have carefully examined the same and report:

That Samuel C. Schoyer was captain of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and participated with his regiment in the war of 1861-65. That on the 2d day of June, 1864, he was wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, by a gunshot in the left ankle joint, which completely destroyed it and produced permanent anchylosis; that he now receives a pension of $20 per month on certificate No. 46970; that he is permanently disabled by the wound and is daily getting worse.

Dr. Andrew Fleming, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, certifies that Captain Schoyer is permanently disabled by paralysis, undoubtedly the result of his wound.

Dr. L. H. Willard, of the same city, certifies that he has been Captain Schoyer's physician for the past six years, and that Captain Schoyer is totally unable to perform manual labor, and that in consequence of his wound he suffers from paralysis of the legs, which may soon result in his inability to walk; that in fact his system has become so greatly enfeebled that he may properly be termed a complete wreek.

The character and standing of these surgeons and physicians are satisfactorily wouched for.

Captain Schoyer is a lawyer by profession. He states that his injury has resulted in partial paralysis of both his legs and arms, and affects the lower part of his spine; that at times he is unable to waite, and the greater part of the time unable to write, and that since the date of his wound he has been under constant medical and surgical attention.

The committee believe this explication to be next most and and are also as a surgical attention.

The committee believe this application to be most meritorious, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, as we are passing a pension bill that is reported to-day, and there are several pension bills on the Calendar, cases of people in great distress that have been reported a long time ago, I hope that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions will ask the Senate to take up those pension bills out of the Calendar, and have them acted upon. It is rather unjust even among pensioners and disabled soldiers, to have the man whose case is acted upon last by the committee immediately put through the Senate, and the others put into this sink or swamp or whatever it may be called the others put into this sink, or swamp, or whatever it may be called, of the Calendar. I hope the chairman of the committee will ask the Senate to take them all up.

Mr. WITHERS. It has been my purpose at the expiration of the morning business to make that request, in view of the fact that there is a large accumulation of pension cases on the Calendar, now amounting to between thirty and forty. At the proper time, when the morning business shall have been dispatched, I propose to make that request.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Good.

Mr. MAXEY. I shall object to that, and give notice now that I shall do so, and ask that the Calendar be taken up regularly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of bills is next in

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WITHERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1620) granting an increase of pension to Sallie A. Palmer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1621) in addition to an act for the relief of Obadiah B. Latham and Oliver S. Latham, approved March 3, 1863; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1622) for the relief of Isaac E. Palmer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1623) forfeiting to the United States the unearned lands included in the grant made to the Oregon Central Railroad Company by act of May 4, 1870, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SLATER. I suggest that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair and the Senate are aware that under an order of the Senate the Committee on the Judiciary has the whole subject of the forfeiture of railroad land grants under its consideration, and has made some progress therein. I suggest to the Senator that perhaps it would be better to send the bill to the committee now charged with the subject.

Mr. SLATER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bil (S. No. 1624) to amend an act entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for their survey and to make donations to settlers of the said lands," approved September 27, 1850, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1625) for the relief of Charles G. Berry, of Indiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1626) granting a right of way to the North River Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1627) relating to the appointment of professors of mathematics in the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1628) for the relief of Harry J. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1629) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Peoria, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO THE POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. GORDON presented amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF A BILL AND REPORT.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that an order be made for reprinting the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims, and the report accompanying it. I am informed by the superintendent of the document-room that the number of applications has exhausted entirely the supply. There are great demands for the bill and accompanying report, and I ask that they be re-

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir, of the bill and report.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT HEALTH ORDINANCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business is

Mr. EATON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Connecticut will allow me to say that I gave notice yesterday morning that I should ask the Senate to consider to-day the joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia. I health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia. I gave way yesterday in order that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] might submit his remarks on the Geneva award bill, with the understanding, certainly on this side of the Chamber, that the joint resolution would have precedence this morning. I ask my friend if he will not give way until I can have the matter considered.

Mr. EATON. I am anxious to get through with the appropriation bill this morning so as not to interfere at all with the Geneva award bill. Will there be much discussion on the joint resolution?

Mr. BUTLER. I think not. I think it will require very little discussion.

Mr. EATON. If there should be discussion I apprehend that the appropriation bill should not go over because of that.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not see that it is likely to lead to any discussions. Mr. BUTLER. I do not see that it is likely to lead to any discussion. With a view of bringing the importance of this matter to the consideration of the Senate I ask to have a letter read from the health officer of the District to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. If after hearing that letter the Senator insists on the appropriation bill, of course I shall have to give way. I ask that the letter be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, HEALTH DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 6, 1880.

Dear Sir: I have the honor to invite your attention again to the urgent necessity for action by the Senate upon the health ordinances of the District.

The warm season is fast approaching, with the health department left absolutely powerless to protect the community from the approach or spread of disease. We have no law whatever to act under in securing the abatement of nuisances, and yet we are held responsible for the care of the public health.

This code of ordinances, the legalization of which is asked, was framed by a committee of gentlemen appointed for the purpose, who visited all the principal northern and eastern cities, examined the different sanitary systems in vogue, and took from their health laws what were deemed best suited and most appropriate for our community. There is no section contained therein the counterpart of which is not found in the health ordinances and acted upon in the courts of most of the larger cities of our country.

Tound in the health orunances and acted upon in the courts of most of the larger cities of our country.

They were in force and acted under for four years in this city and no complaints of undue power being exercised or hardship resulting therefrom was ever heard. I trust you will recognize the very embarrassing position in which my department is at present placed and see the necessity for urging prompt action by the Secrets.

Senate.

I am, sir, yours, very respectfully,

SMITH TOWNSHEND, M. D.,

Health Officer, District of Columbia.

Hon. Isham G. Harris, Chairman Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. I hold in my hand the petition of Dr. J. C. Hall and 35 others, citizens of the District of Columbia, earnestly appealing to the Senate for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution in question, pointing out the importance of immediate action as an absolute necessity to the preservation of the health of the District. I hope the joint resolution will be considered and adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie on the table.

Does the Senator from Connecticut withdraw his motion †

Mr. EATON. It seems that our friends think that this is a matter of very great importance, and that the health of the city of Washington may suffer unless the joint resolution is taken up to-day. While I certainly do not look at it in that light, I shall not stand in their

Mr. BUTLER. There is a substitute reported by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina, to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution that he has indicated.

Mr. CONKLING. May we hear it read for information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be reported.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the substitute be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the resolution that it is proposed we shall take up, read, in the first place, and then we can hear the sub-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be read.
The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

The Cherk. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the ordinances of the late board of health of the District of Columbia, as revised, amended, and adopted. November 19, 1875, entitled "An ordinance to revise, consolidate, and amend the ordinances of the board of health, to declare what shall be deemed nuisances injurious to health, and to provide for the removal thereof," as printed in the report of said late board of health made to the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, being Executive Document No. 1, part 2, be, and the same are hereby, legalized; and the respective penalties therein prescribed for violations thereof may be imposed and enforced for the respective offenses therein described, excepting the sections of said ordinances following, namely, sections 7, 9, and 14, which said sections are not hereby legalized.

SEC. 2. That the ordinances, rules, and regulations of said late board of health contained in the report mentioned in the preceding section, and printed in the said executive document therein mentioned, namely—

First. "An ordinance to amend an ordinance to prevent domestic animals from running at large within the cities of Washington and Georgetown, passed by the board of health May 19, 1871;"

Second. "An ordinance to prevent the sale of unwholesome food in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and to define the duties of inspectors and other officers of the board of health;"

Fourth. "An ordinance to amend an ordinance passed May 13, 1873, to read as follows;"

Sith. "An ordinance to prevent committing or creating nuisances; in or about."

Sith. "An ordinance to prevent committing or creating nuisances; in or about."

follows;"
Sixth. "An ordinance to prevent committing or creating nuisances in or about public urinal or urinals located within the cities of Washington and Georgetown;"
Seventh. "Rules and regulations in regard to small-pox"— be, and the same are hereby, legalized and made valid; and the penalties therein provided respectively for violations thereof may be imposed and enforced for the violations of the same respectively.

Mr. BUTLER. Just in that connection I ask the Secretary to read an amendment which I have been instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question now is on taking up the joint reso-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina, to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to offer an amendment to that. After line 24, I move to insert:

Eighth. "Regulations to secure a full and correct record of vital statistics, including the registration of marriages, births, and deaths, the interment, disinterment, and removal of the dead in the District of Columbia."

Mr. BUTLER. The amendment to the amendment was authorized by the committee. The item to which it refers was overlooked at the time the report was made. It is simply to legalize the regulations to secure a record of vital statistics.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire at some time, and perhaps this is a good time, to ask one of the Senators to state how many offenses the joint resolution creates.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from New York will examine the printed copy of the revised ordinances he will ascertain. There are in the ordinances, as revised, amended, and adopted November 19, 1875, the Senator will find, twenty-eight sections. Of that number, the seventh, ninth, and fourteenth are not legalized. As to the exact number of offenses created by the ordinances, I am really not able to say, but there is a penalty attached to a violation of every one of the sections.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, some time ago an order was made by the Senate—I think it was an order; possibly only an understand-ing—that we were to have printed the ordinances to which the joint resolution does apply. I have a print of the ordinances here, and I should like to know whether these are the ordinances, or whether this pamphlet includes only some of them.

Mr. BUTLER. These are the ordinances, with the exception of those three sections I have referred to, approved November 19, 1875.

those three sections I have reterred to, approved November 13, 1643. Those are all the ordinances.

Mr. CONKLING. I should think on turning over this pamphlet that there must be somewhere from forty to sixty offenses created by this joint resolution. That may not be accurate, but I think it is within bounds; and the feature in that respect which strikes me is the purely discretionary and therefore, of course, purely arbitrary power deposited by these provisions in this board. To illustrate this, let me read one or two of these ordinances:

That any wells, springs, or waters used for drinking or cooking purposes, which are impure and unwholesome, or which have been rendered inpure and unwholesome by reason of any defiling or poisonous substance, are hereby declared nuisances injurious to health; and any person who shall maintain or continue such nuisance, after due notice from this board to abate the same, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars for every such offense.

Who is to determine whether water, a spring, a well, is unwhole-some or not? Nobody that I can discover here; but the provision is that in every such case upon receiving due notice, whatever that may be,—whether it is a day's notice or a week's or what I know not,—every person who after that uses this water is to be fined for doing it as for continuing a nuisance. It is a very arbitrary power. If I have a well on my lot which I use to water my horse from it, if I have a horse, it would seem rather extraordinary in this age that anybody, without my having an opportunity to be heard before or after, should pass by and say "that well is a nuisance, I give you notice it is a nuisance," and then if I water my horse from it afterward, I may be fined $50 for doing it. That seems rather severe. Take another one of these provisions: of these provisions:

That allantus trees, the flowers of which produce offensive and noxious odors, in bloom, in the cities of Washington or Georgetown, or the more densely populated suburbs of said cities, are hereby declared nuisances injurious to health; and any person maintaining such nuisance, who shall fail, after due notice from this board to abate the same, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than five nor more than ten dollars for every such offense.

Now, whether the ailantus tree is desirable in its odor or not is a question of taste. It is a question of smell in one sense, but it is a question of taste in a broader sense. Those trees are desirable to some people. To other people they are not. There is a theory—I will not say a superficial one, but a theory—that they are unwholesome, which is utterly disbelieved and scouted by a great many people; perhaps I ought not to say by people in general, because I do not know where the majority would be on that question, but they are thought very far from being nuisances and very desirable trees by many persons who plant them and cultivate them and raise them by many persons who plant them and cultivate them and raise them and prune them and nurture them. A man has an allantus tree in the rear of his house, in his yard. Under this provision some agent of this board passes along and says "that allantus tree is a nuisance. I give you notice it is a nuisance," and on the next day, if it is not cut down, he is to be fined for not cutting it down. That is an offense.

I read one other section and only one to show the exceedingly arbitrary power here conferred; and whether this is one of the sections adopted or not, I was not able to hear distinctly. If it is not, of course my compent upon it will not be of force:

my comment upon it will not be of force:

That drain-pipes, soil-pipes, passages into sewers, or connections between any sewer and any ground or building, not of adequate and sufficient size to allow the free and entire passage of all the material that enters the same, or not provided with good and sufficient sewer-traps, so as to prevent the escape of noisome odors and noxious gases therefrom, are hereby declared nuisances injurious to health; and any person creating or maintaining either of said nuisances, who shall fall, after due notice from this board, to abate the same, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than five nor more than twenty-five dollars for every such offense.

A householder finds that the waste-pipe running from his stable or running from his house is by some accident obstructed, choked for the time being. That would come exactly within this provision. One would suppose that was trouble enough for this man. He sends for a plumber, making his arrangements on his own account to get it right; but somebody passes along and says, "that is inadequate for a complete passage of all the material, and it is a nuisance." The next day he is liable to this fine, or that same day for aught I know, "on due notice," whatever that may be, being given and with no provision in any of these cases for any hearing, discussion, or explanation, so far as I see. planation, so far as I see.

Planation, so far as I see.

When the bill was passed, establishing a National Board of Health, I ventured to say, and I venture to repeat now, that it far outran, in my judgment, any other act of Congress in the powers it conferred. Here is a provision applicable to the District of Columbia alone, which, in respect of power, stands upon a footing of its own; but I think no Senator can listen to these ordinances, which I have read, and contemplate the idea of putting their enforcement absolutely and arbitrarily into the hands of three or four individuals, with no forum in which a hearing may take place. It is utterly tyrannical.

and contemplate the idea of putting their enforcement absolutely and arbitrarily into the hands of three or four individuals, with no forum in which a hearing may take place. It is utterly tyrannical. The board must act through agents. Any agent who, from ill-will or impatience or prejudice or heedlessness, chooses to make any householder or family uncomfortable, will have, under these provisions, all the powers that is necessary to enable him to tantalize anybody he chooses. I do not know how a man could well do enough to be safe from anybody who felt disposed to go after him with retributions which are provided for here. I do not believe in it.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, in the nature of things all regulations that affect the sanitary condition of a community or its police must be summary. They differ very largely from invasions of private right from the fact that such offenses touch the rights of all. They affect the air that all breathe and the water that all drink, and especially when a nuisance is brought to the attention of the authorities it is absolutely essential that there should be power to deal with it summarily. If a horse in midsummer gives up the ghost on the highway in a thickly settled portion of the city, it is not possible to go to law to ascertain whether that animal shall be removed or not. And if it is discovered that in consequence of some defect in drainage the sewerage of a city is leaking into the aqueduct which furnishes the water in which the community bathe or from which they drink, it is not possible to go to law to settle that question, because before it could be determined the health of an entire community might be destroyed, fever might be introduced, diphtheria and all those zymotic diseases might affect the entire health of the community. Therefore the objections urged by the Senator from New York, while they may apply to some particular provisions of the ordinances that are to be legalized or validated by this resolution, certainly do not apply to the general subject.

The reason why it is necessary to do something about this matter because the courts have decided that the board of health has no authority to enforce these regulations. That is why I want to give the District commissioners authority to enforce them. The object of the resolution is to give the District commissioners power to enforce these regulations. In consequence of their being now dead, there is no power to take care of the sanitary condition here, and the Senator from New York certainly must be aware that that power should be lodged somewhere, and the committee in considering the matter thought it best to leave this discretion where the whole power of the District is lodged by act of Congress to take care of the health and welfare and lives of the citizens.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas will allow me to call his attention to section 27 of these ordinances. It provides—

That all fines and penalties imposed by any section of this ordinance shall be collected by prosecution in the police or other proper court of the District of Columbia, by information filed in said court, at the instance of the board of health,

It is by regular information. A party has all the means of defending against any one of these charges, if he has any good defense that can be made.

Mr. INGALLS. It may be that some of the regulations and rules that have been established by the board of health are burdensome. If they are, certainly it would be advisable for Congress to modify them. I think the board of health was raised by an act of what was known as the Territorial Legislature.

Mr. BUTLER. I have the extract from the act to which the honorable Senator refers, passed on the 21st of February, 1871, and so far as it relates to this board of health it is as follows:

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a board of health for said District, to consist of five persons, whose duty it shall be to declare what shall be deemed nuisances injurious to health, and to provide for the removal thereof; to make and enforce regulations to prevent domestic animals from running at large in the cities of Washington and Georgetown; to prevent the sale of unwholesome food in said cities; and to perform such other duties as shall be imposed upon said board by the legislative assembly.

I understand that that board of health, as provided for by that section, has been abolished, but that all the duties pertaining to that board are now performed by the health officer of the District of Columbia by the act of 1878.

Now as to the propriety or impropriety, or the hardship of these several ordinances, the committee had no means of ascertaining as to these matters except by procuring information from the health officer himself, and it seems to me that in his letter to the chairman of the committee, which I had read from the desk, he makes a complete answer to the criticisms of the Senator from New York on this subject. He says in his letter:

subject. He says in his letter:

The warm season is fast approaching with the health department left absolutely powerless to protect the community from the approach or spread of disease. We have no law whatever to act under in securing the abatement of nuisances, and yet we are held responsible for the care of the public health.

This code of ordinances, the legalization of which is asked, was framed by a committee of gentlemen, appointed for the purpose, who visited all the principal northern and eastern cities, examined the different sanitary systems in vogue, and took from their health laws what were deemed best suited and most appropriate for our community. There is no section contained therein the counterpart of which is not found in the health ordinances and acted upon in the courts of most of the larger cities of our country.

They were in force and acted under for four years in this city, and no complaint of undue power being exercised or hardship resulting therefrom was ever head.

Now, Mr. President, as the Senator from Kansas very properly remarked, from the very nature of these ordinances the proceeding must be summary. If a nuisance be brought to the attention of the health officer of such a character as would not brook delay, I submit that it would be unreasonable to expect that the usual delay and forms required in other proceedings should be required to abate it.

I have gone over these ordinances with a good deal of care, as has the committee, and there is not one of them (with the single exception of the fourteenth section) that did not commend itself to our indement. Every other provision in these ordinances seemed to us judgment. Every other provision in these ordinances seemed to us to be required by a due regard for the preservation of the health of the city, and I venture to say that there is not another city of ten thousand inhabitants in the United States whose sanitary condition is not better provided for than that of the city of Washington to-day. Dr. Townshend, a very intelligent gentleman, who is the health officer of this city, says that he is absolutely powerless, and that those who maintain nuisances may do so in absolute defiance of any protest of his, as he has no means whatever of enforcing these ordinances.

The Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, [Mr. Harris,] has called attention to the twenty-seventh section, which says:

That all fines and penalties imposed by any section of this ordinance shall be Every other provision in these ordinances seemed to us

That all fines and penalties imposed by any section of this ordinance shall be collected by prosecution in the police or other proper court of the District of Columbia.

A test case will be found reported in the Washington Law Review of November 7, 1879, in which it was held by Judge James that the health department had no legislative power, had no means of enforcing its ordinances. Hence the necessity for this proposed legislation.

I dare say that all these ordinances we could criticise, and any Senator has the same opportunity of passing upon their wisdom or un-wisdom as the Committee on the District of Columbia. We were compelled to adopt the ideas and suggestions very largely of this very intelligent gentleman who has charge of the health department of the District, and therefore we have recommended that the joint resolution be passed, recommended it unanimously in the form reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, while section 27 provides for a mode of procedure for alleged violations of these ordinances, yet so far as the first portion of this statute is concerned, I see no such regulation or provision as would cover section 2; or rather, I ask the Senator in charge of the measure whether, if the other provisions are violated, the same procedure will be required to be pursued as is prescribed in

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will look at the joint resolution he will find that it only legalizes the ordinances that were passed November 19, 1875, of which the twenty-seventh is next to the last sec-

Mr. ALLISON. I find here the printed document, which contains

Mr. ALLISON. Twenty-eight sections.
Mr. ALLISON. Twenty-eight sections. Then I find in section 2 certain other acts and ordinances referred to, and they are also legalized. How are prosecutions to be made under those ordinances or acts here referred to?

Mr. INGALLS. The last clause of the amendment is:

Be, and the same are hereby, legalized and made valid; and the penalties therein provided respectively for violations thereof, may be imposed and enforced for the violations of the same respectively.

Mr. ALLISON. So I see; but where; in what court? Section 27 provides for the police court having jurisdiction, but I do not see that in these other ordinances there is any provision as to what court shall have jurisdiction.

Mr. BUTLER. I think if we pass the joint resolution legalizing the ordinances, the health officer will find some way by which to en-force them in the courts, and I think he will be governed entirely by section 27.

Mr. ALLISON. Very likely; but should not section 27 of the ordinance of November 19, 1875, be made to apply to the provisions of the second section?

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to such a provision. Mr. ALLISON. I only ask if it is not necessary. Let us add:

And that said penalties and forfeitures for the violation of the same respectively as provided by section 27.

Mr. HARRIS. After the word "imposed," in line 27.
Mr. BUTLER. I will accept such an amendment.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Iowa send the amendment to the desk?
Mr. ALLISON. My amendment is to make the last clause read:

May be imposed and enforced for the violations of the same respectively as provided by section 27 of the ordinance passed November 19, 1875.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves an amendment, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. Allison; which was, at the end of the amendment reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to insert:

As provided by section 27 of the ordinance passed November 19, 1875.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read the third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to vote against this resolution myself, and I think it would be well to have the yeas and nays on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H.R. No. 5719) to revise and re-énact section 5480 of the Revised Statutes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 5622) to provide for a public building at the city of Paducah, State of Kentucky; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 550.
Mr. WITHERS. There is a pending bill, which has been delayed in consequence of my absence, which I should like to have acted on this morning. It stands at the head of the Calendar.
Mr. SAUNDERS. I think this will take but a very few minutes. It was passed over the other day on account of an objection which will now be met and obviated.
Mr. WITHERS. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the consideration of the Calendar. The Senator from Nebraska, however, moves, as he has a right to do, to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 550. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there are but three minutes left of the morning hour.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It can be passed in that time.

Mr. MAXEY. I object to everything that interferes with the regular order of busines

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A single objection does not prevent a majority of the Senate from taking up any bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the Senator from Nebraska has not moved to lay aside all previous orders. He only asked to take up his bill. It is not in order unless he moves to set aside the Calendar.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I asked simply to take up the bill. I thought there would be no objection to it. It certainly will take but a very few minutes to pass it.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that my call for the Calendar is based on the fact that the case at the head of it has been called up in my absence and postponed in consequence of my absence. The Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. Hereford,] who is very much interested in the particular bill, is compelled to leave to-morrow, and is anxious to have a vote upon the bill. It is a pension case in addition. I have said enough I think to show the importance of its present consideration. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to postpone the preceding orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 550) to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. ALLISON. That bill will take some little time for its consideration. I appeal to my friend from Nebraska—
Mr. BLAINE. Is that motion in order under the Anthony rule?

Mr. BLAINE. Is that motion in order under the Anthony rule?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been so decided by the Vice-President, and acquiesced in by the Senate.
Mr. ALLISON. I am afraid the bill will take some time. I do not think there is any pressing urgency about the bill.
Mr. CONKLING. What is it about?
Mr. ALLISON. It is a bill to rectify the boundary of the State of Nebraska, by which they take a considerable portion of the Territory of Dakota and attach it to Nebraska.
Mr. CONKLING. Is it to straighten the boundary?
Mr. ALLISON. It is to straighten the boundary; but there are a

Mr. ALLISON. It is to straighten the boundary; but there are a good many Indian reservations in the way, and in the absence of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Dawes,] who has the Poncas in charge, I think the bill had better not be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

The Geneva award bill is before the Senate, on which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Garland] is entitled to the floor.

GENEVA AWARD FUND. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. GARLAND. I obtained the floor for the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Davis,] who was not present when the bill was taken up just prior to the adjournment yesterday.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, it is with extreme reluctance that I again address the Senate on the pending question. Some of the views which I presented when I was last upon the floor have been made the subject of review and comment, and other arguments have made the subject of review and comment, and other arguments have been advanced by Senators which in my judgment deserve special notice. I therefore beg the renewed indulgence of the Senate.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] concedes the principle of marine insurance law by which the insurers are subrogated to the rights of the owner of a destroyed vessel or cargo whom they, in accordance with their contract, have paid as for a "total loss." He denies, however, that the owner of the vessel or of the cargo which was destroyed by an insular total confidence and the confidence of the cargo which denies, however, that the owner of the vessel or of the cargo which was destroyed by an inculpated confederate cruiser "ever had a claim against anybody to which they can be subrogated."

This is the first instance, so far as I am aware, that the opinion has been advanced on this side of the Atlantic that such an owner had no claim against Great Britain for indemnity. The non-liability of Great Britain to our injured fellow-citizens was declared in Parliament, and maintained by her department for foreign affairs in its correspondence with our Secretary of State; but I never expected to hear it avowed in the Senate of the United States. The Senator, in that connection, said:

I fully concede that an individual whose property is destroyed by the lawless act of a foreign government, or its agents, may have in many cases a claim for compensation. His remedy for that claim may be imperfect. He may obtain compensation by individual application to the justice of the foreign state, as in many instances of foreign citizens whose property was taken or destroyed by our armies in the late war; he may obtain compensation through negotiations conducted by his own government; he may obtain redress through reprisal. In all these cases an underwriter who has paid the loss is substituted to his right. The same principle applies to the case of the citizen whose property is destroyed by the lawless act of his own government, or its officers. But in no case is there a remedy to a citizen against foreign governments, against his own government, or against public officers for a mere neglect of a duty of government.

The Senator, in the concluding part of these remarks, obviously does not use the term "remedy" in that narrow sense which in our municipal law signifies the instrumentalities and methods by which damages against a wrong-doer may be recovered in a court of justice. To such modes of redress the owner of property destroyed cannot resort against a foreign government. He has, however, a valid claim against it when, by reason of the disregard of its duties and obligations, its responsibility for the acts of destruction, is at least to the extent of indemnity, the same as if they had been perpetrated by its officers apparently acting pursuant to its authority. Such acts are then, in contemplation of law, its own "lawless acts." In no case can his rights be effectually asserted and enforced except by the intervention of the public authorities of his own country. tervention of the public authorities of his own country

During the civil war and afterward until the negotiation of the treaty of Washington of May 8, 1871, our Government habitually maintained that our citizens were entitled to indemnity from Great Britain for the destruction of their property by certain confederate cruisers, for the acts of which we declared her to be responsible. In the letter of our accomplished representative at London to Lord Russell, bearing date November 20, 1862, he mentioned "the depredations committed on the high seas upon merchant vessels" by the Alabama, and the right of reclamation of the Government of the United States for the grievous damage done to the property of their citizens by reason of the escape of that vessel, and added:

I have the honor to inform your lordship of the directions which I have received from my Government to solicit redress for the national and private injuries sustained.

On the 19th February, April 29, July 7, August 24, September 19, and October 23, all in the year 1863, Mr. Adams presented a series of and October 23, all in the year 1863, Mr. Adams presented a series of claims of our citizens against the British government, touching their ships and property destroyed by the Alabama. In the last of those letters he declared that the United States must continue to insist that Great Britain has made itself responsible for the damages which the peaceful, law-abiding citizens of the United States sustain by the depredation of the vessel called the Alabama. Again, on the 31st of October, 1863, he presented similar claims in respect of the property of our citizens destroyed by the Florida, and calls renewed attention to "the claims growing out of the depredations of the Alabama and other vessels issuing from British ports." He presented January 20, 1864, the claim of the owners of the Sea-Bride, captured by the Alabama. As new losses were sustained by our captured by the Alabama. As new losses were sustained by our citizens from time to time during the war, they were brought to the notice of the British government. Lord Russell, on the 30th of August, 1865, declined "either to make reparation and compensation for the captures made by the Alabama, or to refer the question to any foreign state." On the 21st of October of that year, Mr. Adams presented the claim of the owners of a ship captured by the Shenandoah, and again in his letter of the 25th of the following November, he writes to Lord Clarendon, declaring that "his Government adheres to the opinion that the claims it has presented are just and reason. to the opinion that the claims it has presented, are just and reasonable." On the 26th of August, 1866, Mr. Seward transmitted to Mr. Adams "a summary of claims of citizens of the United States against Great Britain, for damages which were suffered by them during the period of our late civil war and some months thereafter."

These claims relate exclusively to the losses sustained by the owners and insurers of vessels destroyed by confederate cruisers. Mr. Seward observes that-

The table is not supposed to be complete, but it presents such a recapitulation if the claims as the evidence so far received in this Department enables me to furnish. Deficiencies will be supplied hereafter. The claims upon which we insist are of large amount. They affect the interest of many thousand citizens of the United States. The justice of the claims is sustained by the universal sentiment of the people of the United States.

I am afraid, Mr. President, that I should tax too severely the patience of the Senate by further citations from our diplomatic correspondence prior to the negotiation of the Clarendon-Johnson treaty, which was signed January 14, 1869. I therefore desist; but I hazard nothing in asserting that throughout the entire correspondence the United States vigorously asserted the claims of our citizens against the British government for losses which they, either as owners or underwriters of vessels or cargoes, had individually sustained by reason of the destruction of their property by the Alabama and other confiderate expires. confederate cruisers.

The fate of that treaty and its provisions are too familiar to the Senate to require any special allusion to them. Mr. Fish addressed our representative at London (Mr. Motley) a communication, bearing date May 15, 1869, instructing the latter gentleman to say to Lord Clarendon that the United States in rejecting that treaty "abandoned neither its own claims nor those of its citizens;" and on the 15th of November of that year he again whether of November of that year he again wrote:

The President is not yet prepared to pronounce on the question of the indemnities which he thinks due by Great Britain to individual citizens of the United States for the destruction of their property by rebel cruisers fitted out in the ports of Great Britain.

President Grant, in his annual message to Congress of that year, specifically states what he conceives to be just grounds for disapproving the rejected treaty; and in his message of December, 1870, there is not only a distinct affirmation of the existence of these claims, but a pointed recommendation in regard to them. He remarks:

a pointed recommendation in regard to them. He remarks:

I regret to say that no conclusion has been reached for the adjustment of the claims against Great Britain, growing out of the course adopted by that government during the rebellion. The cabinet of London, so far as its views have been expressed, does not appear to be willing to concede that Her Majesty's government was guilty of any negligence, or did or permitted any act during the war, by which the United States has just cause of complaint. Our firm and unalterable convictions are directly the reverse. It therefore recommend to Congress to authorize the appointment of a commission to take proof of the amounts, and the ownership of these several claims, on notice to the representative of Her Majesty at Washington, and that authority be given for the settlement of these claims by the United States, so that the Government shall have the ownership of the private claims, as well as the responsible control of all the demands against Great Britain. It cannot be necessary to add that, whenever Her Majesty's government shall entertain a desire for a full and friendly adjustment of these claims, the United States will enter upon their consideration with an earnest desire for a conclusion consistent with the honor and dignity of both nations.

It thus appears that a change of administration had worked no change in the opinion of the constituted authorities of the nation as to the validity of those claims. President Grant alludes to them as "private claims," and proposes that the United States should settle them, so that it should be vested with the ownership of them as well as the responsible control of all demands.

Before any action was taken by Congress, Sir Edward Thornton addressed the Department of State, in compliance with instructions from the British Government, and proposed the appointment of a joint high commission for the determination of certain questions between the two nations. It bears date January 26, 1871. On the 30th of the same month Mr. Fish informs Sir Edward Thornton that, in the opinion of the President, "the removal of the differences which arose during the rebellion in the United States, and which have existed since then, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the 'Alabama claims,' will be essential to the restoration of cordial and amicable relations between the two governments." Sir Edward replies on the 1st of February, by the instructions of his government, and consented on its behalf that those claims should be so submitted, "provided that all other claims, both of British subjects and citizens of the United States, growing out of acts committed during the recent civil war in this country, are similarly referred to the same commission." To this, on the 3d of that month, Mr. Fish, by direction of the President, assented. The joint high commission was accordingly appointed, and it held its first session in this city on the 21st of the same month.

It will be seen that Mr. Fish uses the term "claims generically known as the Alabama claims." Both governments understood that it embraced those claims of American citizens growing out of the destruction of their property, which had been the subject of long-continued correspondence between the two governments, but the United States contended that it also included a special and distinct claim for

In Mr. Fish's confidential communication to Mr. Justice Nelson and the other American members of the joint high commission, he speaks of the amount of claims, and then subdivides them into two heads:

 Claims belonging to the United States.
 Claims of individuals.
 And under the latter head he states "the amount of injuries committed by the rebel cruisers," giving what he considered to be a proximately complete statement of the claims which had then been presented to the Department of State.

In view of the conclusive proofs which our diplomatic correspondence affords of our repeated and earnest presentation of these claims of individual sufferers against Great Britain, and of her recognition of their existence, although she denied her liability, it was with unaffected surprise and regret that I heard the honorable Senator declare affected surprise and regret that I heard the honorable senator declare at this late day that the owners of property destroyed by the inculpated cruisers "never had a claim against anybody," and that the United States alone had a title to redress. This extraordinary position was, however, essential to maintain his conclusion as to the disposition which he insists should be made of the fund in our hands. We did complain that Great Britain had not faithfully discharged her duties as a neutral power during an eventful and melancholy pethereof she incurred liability to such owners for the acts of those cruisers. She disavowed responsibility upon the ground, not that these claims were those of owners or underwriters, but that she had performed all the obligations which the law of nations imposed upon her. riod in our national history, but we also declared that by rea

The joint high commission met, as I have said, in this city. It appears from the protocol that among the subjects which were brought before that body by us were "the differences which arose during the rebellion in the United States, and which have existed since then, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels, which have given rise to the claims generically known as the Alabama claims."
This is a quotation from Mr. Fish's letter to Sir Edward Thornton, to which I have already alluded. Among the published proceedings is the following:

is the following:

At the conference held on the 8th of March the American commissioners stated that the people and Government of the United States felt that they had sustained a great wrong, and that great injuries and losses were inflicted upon their commerce and their material interests by the course and conduct of Great Britain during the recent rebellion in the United States; that what had occurred in Great Britain and her colonies during that period had given rise to feelings in the United States which the people of the United States did not desire to cherish toward Great Britain; that the history of the Alabama and other cruisers, which had been fitted out, or armed, or equipped, or which had received augmentation of force in Great Britain or in her colonies, and of the operations of those vessels, showed extensive direct losses in the capture and destruction of a large number of vessels, with their cargoes, and in the heavy national expenditures in the pursuit of the cruisers, and in direct injury in the transfer of a large part of the American commercial marine to the British flag, in the enhanced payments of insurance, in the prolongation of the war, and in the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion; and also showed that Great Britain, by reason of failure in the proper observance of her duties as a neutral, had become justly liable for the acts of those cruisers and of their tenders; that the claims for the loss and destruction of private property which had thus far been presented amounted to about fourteen multions of dollars, without interest, which amount was liable to be greatly increased by claims which had not been presented; that the cost to which the Government had been put in the pursuit of cruisers could easily be ascertained by certificates of Government accounting officers; that, in the hope of an amicable settlement, no estimate was made of the indirect losses, without prejudice, however, to the right to indemnification on their account in the

It will be here perceived that our commissioners maintained that Great Britain was liable, not only for our expenditures in pursuing cruisers and for other general damages which the Government as such had sustained, but also for the direct losses sustained by the owners of the vessels and cargoes.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] alludes with particularity to the language of the treaty.

The first article commences with a recital that differences exist between the two governments, and still exist, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the Alabama claims.

I have already stated what our Government declared to be the import and effect of "Alabama claims." It gave to the term a broader scope than did Great Britain. The latter confined it merely to claims for the actual destruction of property belonging to the Government or to individuals by the cruisers in question, and this disagreement gave rise to the difficulties which attended the submission of our case to the tribunal at Geneva. The treaty then proceeds:

Now, in order to remove and adjust all complaints and claims on the part of the United States, and to provide for the speedy settlement of such claims, which are not admitted by Her Britannic Majesty's government, the high contracting parties agree that all the said claims, growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels, and generically known as the "Alabama claims," shall be referred to a tribunal of arbitration, to be composed of five arbitrators, to be appointed in the following manner, that is to say, &c.

The Senator, in commenting upon this phraseology, says that "the grievances, complaints, and claims on the part of the United States were manifold, and that they were all embraced in a single formula, the failure of Great Britain in its duty to the United States as a neutral nation," and he concludes that "had there been no failure there would have been no complaint." Conceding that to be true, it would not sustain the proposition for which, if I understand him, he ultimately contends, that when we received this fund awarded at Geneva we could rightfully do with it what we pleased, or, in the language of his colleague, "use a sound discretion." We insisted that Great Britain was liable for the acts committed by those cruisers. that Great Britain was liable for the acts committed by those cruisers. We might have declared war against her in the event of her continued refusal to make adequate reparation for their depredations, for which she, a nation at peace with us, was, as we alleged, responsible. Wiser counsels prevailed. Hostilities with that great and powerful country, to which we are bound by so many kindred ties and reciprocal interests, were avoided, and in a spirit worthy of the advanced civilization of the age the question of her liability was submitted to the peaceful arbitrament of a disinterested tribunal. What was in fact submitted? "The Alabama claims." I have stated what, as interpreted by our Government, is the import of that term. Without repeating that statement, or any of the views which I had the honor to submit to the Senate on a previous occasion, I may be permitted to say, and I do so without fear of successful contradiction, that every class of claims but one was rejected at Geneva, and this fact is specifically set forth in the published record of the proceedings of the tribunal. Nothing was allowed for the losses incurred by the transfer of our commercial marine to the British flag, nothing for "war premiums," nothing for the cost of pursuing the cruisers nor for the expenses incurred by the prolongation of the war. Damages were alone awarded for the destruction of property by certain specified cruisers and their tenders. In making up the gross amount the claim of the underwriter, who had paid as for a total loss, was as fully recognized as that of the unassured owner. Neither of the Senators from Massachusetts, in his able discussion of the pending measure, has questioned this statement, and its perfect accuracy is conclusively shown by the record in the case.

The evidence we submitted is thus stated by Mr. Davis, the agent of the United States, in his report to the Secretary of State:

The cylinded States, in his report to the Secretary of State:

The evidence already collected, together with important new materials from the archives of the several Departments, and the proof of the losses suffered by individual claimants, were arranged and stated in the manner marked out by the American members of the joint high commission, namely:

1. The evidence offered by individual claimants for the loss and destruction of property and for enhanced rates of insurance was analyzed and tabulated, and a full abstract of each case was prepared by the clerks.

2. The national claims for the pursuit of the cruisers were stated and tabulated at the Navy Department, and were inserted by us exactly as received from that Department.

3. No proof was offered of the national losses by the transfer of the commercial marine, or by the prolongation of the war, but they were left to be estimated by the tribunal of arbitration, should Great Britain be found responsible for them.

The award was made of a sum in gross, our agent declaring that "the original wrongs to the sufferers by the acts of the insurgent cruisers have been increased by the delay in making reparation. It will be unjust to impose further delay and the expense of presenting claims to another tribunal." What sufferers? Obviously such alone as had sustained losses by the acts of those vessels for which Great Britain should be declared to be liable. No award could be made against her for any other acts, and the sufferers included alike the unassured owners and the underwriters. Could he have foreseen what has since transpired it would have been his imperative duty to forbear making such a request. It would have been far, far better had a board of assessors been appointed. Each "separate claim" would then have been determined, and the sufferer by the acts of the inculpated cruisers would have been entitled to a decision in writing on his claim, and the question as to his right would have been relieved from all further controversy.

I have already stated, Mr. President, that the tribunal at Geneva rejected all claims save those for the actual destruction of property by certain designated cruisers and for net freights. It has been inwho suffered by England's fault should alone govern" the distribu-tion of the fund. What fault is meant by the Senator [Mr. DAWES] who uses this language? That tribunal declared wherein Great Britain was in fault and for what acts she was liable, and its decision is final and conclusive. He proposes to distribute the fund not to those for whom we received it, but to bestow it upon the payers of "war premiums" and the sufferers by the acts of the exculpated cruisers, although not a dollar was awarded in behalf of either of those parties, and the court declared that in no event could any indemnity be awarded by reason of the enhancement of the premiums on insurance.

No such claims could have been successfully asserted before the No such claims could have been successfully asserted before the board of assessors. Are not we, as much as that board would have been, bound to distribute the money to the class of sufferers which the tribunal decided was alone entitled to receive it? It has been urged that the Government was the claimant; that it was represented by its agent and counsel, and that the money was awarded and paid to it. If it be meant that it was paid or awarded on account of claims for noticeal leaves exceed that for national losses, except such as were occasioned by the destruction of national property, the assertion has no foundation in fact, and there is no justification for it in anything that transpired at Geneva. Not only is the award indisputably clear on this point, but let me cite the opinion of one of the arbitrators, a detached passage from whose judgment in Rustomjee vs. The Queen, is relied upon by both the Senators from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to justify the assumption that we have an absolute discretion over the fund in question, and that we are under no obligation to give it to those in whose behalf we claimed and received it. The opening sentence of the opinion of that learned arbitrator at Geneva

The indirect claims at first insisted on by the Government of the United States being now out of the question, we have to deal with the claims for damages "growing out of the acts" of certain specified vessels, as to which it is alleged that, by reason of some default on the part of the government of Her Majesty the Queen of England, these vessels were enabled to take and destroy ships and cargoes belonging to citizens of the United States.

Again, (see papers relating to the treaty of Washington, volume 4, page 537,) he says:

I concur entirely with the rest of the tribunal, in holding that the claim for cost of pursuit and capture must be rejected. This item of expense formed part of the general expense of the war. The cruisers employed on this service would, probably, have been kept in commission had the three vessels in question never left the British shores.

We have therefore only to deal with the claim for losses sustained by individual citizens.

Now, there can be no doubt that the only damages which the tribunal is authorized to award under the treaty for the indemnification of American citizens must be confined to loss actually sustained by destruction of ships, cargoes, or personal effects. Where damage to property arises, not directly from willful injury, but indirectly only, from want of due care, an indemnity against actual loss is all that, by the law of England or America, or by any principles of general jurisprudence, can possibly be awarded.

If, therefore, this tribunal, instead of sending the amount to be paid by Great Britain to be ascertained by assessors, should think fit to award a sum in gross, as it is empowered to do by the treaty, it must still, in fixing the latter, proceed on the best estimate it may be enabled to arrive at, on the data before it, of the losses actually sustained by American citizens through the three ships for which Great Britain is to be held liable.

This language of Chief-Justice Cockburn needs no comment, and is too clear for misconstruction. It leaves no loop upon which to hang a doubt as to the class of claims in satisfaction of which the award

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoan] quotes the twelfth article of the treaty, and maintains that there is a striking difference between it and the first article in regard to the character of the claims submitted. The twelfth article is as follows:

The high contracting parties agree that all claims on the part of corporations, companies, or private individuals, citizens of the United States, not being claims growing out of the acts of the vessels referred to in article 1 of this treaty * * * shall be referred, &c.

The Senator says:

The arbitrators who metat Geneva on neutral territory, were "to decide all questions that shall be laid before them on the part of the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, respectively." They deposited the archives of the tribunal among the archives of the council of state of the canton of Geneva. The commissioners, under article 12, on the other hand, were to meet at Washington, were to hear counsel as to every separate claim, and to make a separate award in writing as to each claim—and that the distinction—one class of claims being national and the other individual—" is carefully marked throughout the treaty." I entirely dissent, Mr. President, from this view. The twelfth article is a distinct and unequivocal recognition that corporations, companies, and private individuals, citizens of the United States, had claims growing out of the acts of the vessels referred to in the first article and it makes special provisions for the adjustment of other claims not so growing out of them. Construing both articles together, they clearly establish that the claims submitted at Geneva were not merely those of the nation, but that they included those of corporations, companies, and private individuals. Again, the mere fact that the claims mentioned in the twelfth article were to be adjudicated by a mixed commission has no significance in the solution of this question, becommission has no significance in the solution of this question, because the tribunal at Geneva, after determining for the acts of what vessels Great Britain was liable, could, as I have already stated, have submitted the adjudication of the claims mentioned in the first article to a board whose duties and jurisdiction as declared by the treaty would in that event have precisely similar to those of the mixed commission. Although a separate award on each claim was to be made in smiting it would be been the dutie of the second contract of the seco in writing, it would have been the duty of the assessors, as it was of the mixed commission, to make a general award for a certain sum equal to the aggregate awards upon the several claims, and that Great Britain pay to the United States that sum in full satisfaction of them. This was the course adopted by the mixed commission. (Id. volume 6, page 230.) Will the Senator affirm that if separate awards had been given, and the amount of them paid to the United States, the latter would not have committed a palpable wrong by withholding from any claimant a dollar allowed to him? Unquestionably not. Yet the duty of the Government in that event would not be more sacred and binding than it is in the case before us.

The fact that the United States was represented by an agent and counsel at Geneva has no weight in determining the character of the claims there submitted. We were represented in the same manner before the mixed commission which sat in this city, although confessedly none but individual claims were to be there determined. So far as I am aware, this is the universal practice in international arbitrary and the property of the trations. No claim can be presented except by the agency of the government, whereof the interested party is a subject or citizen. Take as an instance the recent convention between the United States and Spain, (17 Statutes at Large, page 389.) It created an arbitra-tion for the settlement of claims of our citizens for wrongs and injuries committed against their persons and property by the Spanish authorities in Cuba. It provides that each government shall name an advocate, and limits the jurisdiction of the arbitration to such claims as shall be presented by the United States. An award is to be made in each case, but the aggregate amount of them is to be paid by Spain to the United States, with a percentage to be added thereto to cover the cost of the arbitration. When we receive this money, there is no means by which we can be compelled to pay it to the claimants in whose favor it was allowed; but will any Senator contend that we are less bound on that account to a faithful distribution of it?

It is said that if the grounds I assume are tenable then, by a parity of reasoning, if a treaty between two nations which have been at war provides for the payment of an indemnity to the successful belligerent, any of his subjects or citizens who suffered special loss would have a right to a share in that indemnity which he could not justifiably withhold from them. There is not the most remote analogy between the two cases. That before us was for the arbitration of disputed claims, embracing those which the nation put forward in its own right, and those which President Grant denominated private claims," and his Secretary of State "claims of individuals."

If certain claims of a particular description were alone declared to be just and valid, and an award sufficient to cover them made, which we have received, I am unable to discover why we are not as fully and completely bound to pay it over to the parties in interest as if they had been specifically named in the award and the separate claim of each adjudicated.

Differences arose between this country and Great Britain as to the construction of the first article of the treaty of Ghent, and they were by a convention concluded between the two countries on the 24th of October, 1818, submitted to the arbitrament of the Emperor of Russia. That sovereign decided "that the United States of America are entitled to claim from Great Britain a just indemnification for all private property which the British forces may have carried away, and, as the question relates to slaves, more especially for all the slaves that the British forces may have carried away from places and territories, of which the treaty stipulates the restitution in quitting the same places and territories," &c.

The slaves in question had been invited by the British admiral commanding the naval forces in the Chesapeake Bay during the war of 1812 to join those forces, and had been promised emancipation in the event of their so doing. They were never returned to their mas-

It will be perceived that the terms of the Emperor's award are that the United States are entitled to claim a just indemnification, &c. A convention to carry this decision into effect failed to secure any practical results, by reason of the disagreeing opinions of the members of the board organized to execute its provisions. A subsequent con-vention was entered into, by which Great Britain stipulated to pay a specific sum ($1,249,600) to the United States for the use of the owna specific sum ($1,249,600) to the United States for the use of the owners of the property.

It did not occur to the statesmen of that day that the claim of the United States could inure to the benefit of any other parties. It would have been evidently improper to divert the fund to others, who had more grievously suffered by the invasion of the British military or naval forces, or whose property greater in value than that of the escaped slaves had been destroyed. The failure to return the slaves was a neglect of duty, a breach of a treaty stipulation, and, according to the arguments of the other side, the owners had no claim and the United States would have been justified in giving the money to whomeover it pleased.

I listened with pleasure to my honorable friend from Indiana, [Mr. McDonald.] He is a lawyer, and "a ripe and good one." I do not derogate from his high reputation as such when I say that his argument yesterday was entirely misplaced. It would have been appropriate at Geneva, had it been addressed to the international tribunal, in maintaining our right to recover for the transfer of our commercial marine to the British flag, or for the expenses incurred by the prolongation of the war, or for the increased premium on insurance occasioned by the exceptional perils to which American property on the high seas was subjected.

Those questions were foreclosed by the decision of the tribunal that such claims did "not constitute a good foundation for an award," and our representative declared that they should be "excluded from all consideration in the award" that might be made. That decision, all consideration in the award" that might be made. That decision, whether right or wrong, was made by the tribunal to which the determination of the "Alabama claims" was submitted; yet my honorable friend as earnestly contends that those who paid war premiums should be indemnified from this fund as if their claims, so far from having been excluded, were recognized as just and valid, and as if the sums they had so expended had actually entered into the computation of the amount awarded.

My friend insists that damages were awarded only to the nation as such, because the gravamen of our complaint against Great Britain was her omission to perform a public duty enjoined by the law of nations upon a neutral power. He then contends in the same breath that the damages awarded were not merely by way of indemnity, but were such as might be assessed against her as a tort-feasor, and that they were "not intended to embrace the exact value of the property destroyed." It will be impossible for him with all his research to find a solitary case in which any respectable court has held that damages could be justly assessed against a defendant beyond satisfaction for the injuries actually sustained, when they resulted simply from his failure to perform a duty. Exemplary damages having in his view been awarded, his argument is that we may distribute the fund as we please. But, Mr. President, our only claim for damages, recognized by the tribunal to be just and valid, was for direct losses sustained by the acts of those cruisers for which Great Britain was liable. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says that this is "not an accurate statement," and that our claim was for the "omission on the part of the British government to take certain precautions." The acts committed by the several vessels gave rise to the claims generically known as the "Alabama claims." These were the claims that were submitted for adjudication. I have already shown what, in the opinion of both governments, they embraced. We declared that Great Britain was bound to make reparation for the losses which our citizens suffered by reason of the acts of the vessels for which she was zens suffered by reason of the acts of the vessels for which she was liable. The arbitrators specified the vessels, and awarded a sum sufficient to cover those losses. They could not have allowed one penny for property destroyed by any other cruisers. The fund awarded having been paid to us, we are, in my opinion, bound to disburse it in good faith, as the board of assessors, passing on each separate claim of the owner or the underwriter, would have been, had a sum in gross not been allowed. The fund in our hands is affected with this trust, the execution of which a court of equity would enforce if the United States were, in such a case, subject to suit.

Reference has been made by the Senator from Indiana and by both the Senators from Massachusetts to the decisions of the court of Alabama claims organized under the act of Congress of June 3, 1874. These decisions are not entitled to the least weight in deciding the questions before us. The jurisdiction and duties of that learned tribunal were defined by the statute creating it, and it was bound to take cognizance of such claims as Congress declared should upon due proof be allowed and paid.

I venture to submit, Mr. President, that I have clearly shown that the owners and insurers of property destroyed by the inculpated confederate cruisers had claims against Great Britain which we insisted entitled them to indemnity, and we presented all such claims to the arbitration at Geneva. If so, it follows from the express admission of my honorable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that by the of my honorable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] that by the principle of maritime law, where the destroyed property was insured and the owner was paid as for a total loss by the underwriters, the latter are subrogated to all his rights. If in this Chamber there be a lingering doubt on the question, I refer to the views expressed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Garland] and the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan.] They have so fully established this doctrine upon principle and authority, and so clearly shown that it applies to the case before us, as to leave nothing to be added on the subject.

Mr. President, the organization of international tribunals for the adjustment of public and individual claims has been justly considered as denoting an auspicious advance in popular sentiment throughout the world. The arbitrament of reason is better than that of the sword. the world. The arbitrament of reason is better than that of the sword. If the decisions of those tribunals, however, are not carried into full effect with entire good faith, they will soon become a subject of scorn and reproach. Edmund Burke said "Justice itself is the great standing policy of civil society, and any eminent departure from it lies under the suspicion of being no policy at all." That great statesman and sagacious philosopher never uttered a maxim more worthy of all acceptation. It should guide us in the discharge of the duty before us. Let us not be misled by any mistaken sympathy, but decide these conflicting claims by those principles of law and justice which should always govern in the determination of private rights.

connicting claims by those principles of law and justice which should always govern in the determination of private rights.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not learn on inquiry of the honorable chairman of the committee that any member of the committee who have reported this bill proposes to take the floor at this moment; and unless that be the case I desire to occupy a few minutes in replying to the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.]

It seems to me there power has been any more convolute instance of

It seems to me there never has been any more complete instance of that habit of mind which is illustrated by the old and familiar story of the two knights who looked at the different sides of the shield, than the arguments which have been made in behalf of the bill reported by the majority of the Judiciary Committee. The gentlemen who have addressed the Senate on that side, including the distinwho have addressed the Senate on that side, including the distinguished jurist and lawyer who has just taken his seat, seem to think their case is established when they reiterate and reiterate, and adduce proof from the history of the Alabama negotiation that evidence was presented to the tribunal which sat at Geneva of the amount and extent of individual damages suffered by the destruction of vessels belonging to American citizens, and when it appears that certain other proof of other injuries suffered was rejected by that tribunal.

That fact no person disputes. It has never been denied. The question for the consideration of the Senate, and the question which the honorable Senator from Illinois does not even condescend to touch, is this: whether a nation may not be the sufferer; whether a nation may not have a right of action; whether a nation may not be entitled to enforce a claim for damages which grows out of injuries sustained by particular citizens; whether if a French army should march across Canada, or be enlisted in Canada by the negligence or the acquiescence of the government of Great Britain, and should ravage one of the northern counties in New York, although the extent of the injury to the farmers and manufacturers who suffered might be the precise measure of the damage to the nation, yet that would afford no cause of action whatever to the citizen, Great Britain having been negligent merely in such a case, but would afford a cause of action, so measured and ascertained, to the nation.

That is the question; and the Senator from Illinois it seems to me That is the question; and the Senator from Illinois it seems to me has not helped the Senate, either in this or the other laborious argument which he addressed to us, to deal with or decide that question. I affirm, on the contrary, in opposition to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois, that this treaty was made not only to permit but to secure the proceedings by the tribunal on the theory which I have indicated. The British commissioners originally rejected a proposition that the tribunal at Geneva might award gross damages, and thereafter, it being urged upon them informally but efficiently that the feeling of injury on the part of citizens of the United States would not be removed unless a treaty was so made that our Government should be able to give the damages awarded, if they were awarded, to the person whom they might deem the actual sufferer, without regard to the opinion of the arbitrators at Geneva, the British commissioners said they would reconsider their refusal, and thereupon consented.

The Senator from Illinois says that the first time it was ever heard that no claim existed on behalf of an individual against Great Britain for her failure to perform a mere public duty of government was when I announced the proposition the other day in the remarks that I had the honor to address to the Senate. How can the Senator from Illinois say that; and how can he say that any decision of this matter by the Congress of the United States will affect the credit of the principle of international arbitration in the future, in the face of Mr. Gladstone's express declaration? Mr. Gladstone was the prime min-ister of England when this treaty was negotiated. It was an act of his administration, and an act by which his administration must stand or fall. Mr. Gladstone declared on the return of the British commissioners that the claims which would be presented at Geneva were not the claims of individual citizens of the United States, and that Great Britain had not provided for the arbitration of any individual claim; but whether the injuries were inflicted on individuals or not they were national claims alone.

How can the Senator from Illinois affirm that this doctrine is heard of for the first time in this debate, in the face of the declaration of Mr. Adams, the American arbitrator at Geneva? Mr. Adams begins his opinion as one of the arbitrators at Geneva by stating that the foundation of this claim is the failure in due diligence, as expressed noting the face of the instructions of Mr. Fight to the sources of has made in the face of the instructions of Mr. Fish to the counsel of the United States at Geneva? If it be true that when the United States presented and made proof of the claim of a ship-master for the loss of his ship and that was allowed, that was a final and conclusive judgment of the arbitrators that that ship-master was entitled to the judgment of the arbitrators that that ship-master was entitled to the money recovered, every act of the distinguished counsel who represented the United States at Geneva was a violation of their instructions. According to the theory of the Senator from Illinois, such a presentment and allowance conclusively bound the United States to pay the money to the person who was proved to have suffered the injury, and Mr. Fish instructed the counsel and the counsel reported that they had obeyed the instructions, that nothing should be done by them at Geneva which should in the least create an obligation on the part of the United States to pay the money over to any person the part of the United States to pay the money over to any person whatever, but that they should be left free to deal with the distribution according to their sense of all the equities of the case.

That doctrine was repeated and reiterated by the counsel of the United States. I will not advert again to their course in abandoning the claim of one and saying not only that it abandoned it, but that when they presented it they did not want the tribunal to allow it.

But, Mr. President, how can the Senator from Illinois claim that this is a new proposition in the face of the statute of 1874? He says that these moneys awarded were awarded as a judgment by the tri-bunal at Geneva; that the ship-owner whose claim was proved had a claim against the government of Great Britain, which they allowed, and which had been presented by his government at Geneva, whereupon Congress proceeds to enact a statute, with the full approbation of most of the members of the Judiciary Committee that have reported this bill, by which, without regard to the evidence at Geneva, without regard to what that tribunal allowed or did not allow, the court to sit in Washington created by the act of 1874 are to inquire as an original question who have lost ships, what was the extent of their loss, and how much they ought to be entitled to in equity to make them whole.

That is as violent a departure from the doctrine of this bill of the Committee on the Judiciary as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana or the amendment proposed by myself, because it implies the right to ascertain anew not what was allowed at Geneva but what the United States think was the real loss to an actual sufferer, and to pay that without regard to the opinion of the Geneva tribunal.

In other words, Mr. President, suppose this money is not enough to go round. Under the act of 1874, to which every member of this Judiciary Committee then a member of the Senate I think consented, the money is to be paid by the court to persons whose claims were not even presented at Geneva, persons whose claims on the then evidence in the possession of our Government were not even thought worthy of presenting or of considering. So that the bill itself reported by the Judiciary Committee proceeds not on the ground that certain claims have been allowed at Geneva, but on the ground that certain claims are now to be authenticated and established.

Mr. President, the tribunal at Geneva have never decided that any claimant whatever is entitled to this money except the United States. On the contrary, the counsel said to them, "We claim that the United States is entitled to receive this money as its absolute owner, and by reason of an injury, of a failure to perform an obligation to them, of which the sufferings of their household are the measure," and that is the award of the tribunal. But I do not care to detain the Senate with a new discussion of this

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move an amendment to the bill to perfect it before the question is taken on the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order to move an amendment to the text of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the amendment to the amendment

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 8, after the word "class," in the amendment of Mr. Hoar, it is proposed to strike out:

And shall also consider and allow, as a second class, claims for the payment of premiums for war risks, whether paid to corporations, agents, or individuals, after the sailing of any confederate cruiser; in determining which it shall be the duty of the court to deduct any sum in any way received by or paid to the claimant in diminution of the amount paid for any such premium, so that the actual loss only shall be allowed.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the bill with a view of perfecting it before the question is taken on the substitute by striking out in the fourth section, after the word "class," in the middle of the seventeenth line, the remainder of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the text of the bill by striking out as stated. The Secretary will report the words proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What has become of the amendment already offered to the text?

offered to the text?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was an amendment to the substitute. Now the Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the text of the original bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the previous amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was an amendment to the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The previous amendment was an amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, the latter being a motion to strike out and insert a substitute. Both the substitute and the original bill can be amended in the second degree. Each is an original proposition for purposes of amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] is, in section 4 of the bill, to strike out all after the word "class," in line 17, down to line 27, as follows:

And such court shall also consider and allow all claims properly proved, and not included in the first class directly resulting from damage done on the high seas by confederate cruisers during the late rebellion, including vessels and cargoes attacked and taken on the high seas, or pursued by them therefrom, although the loss or damage occurred within three miles of the shore, and whether such claims be made by the original property-owner or by an underwriter who paid for such loss or damage, which claims shall be considered as claims of the second class.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Chair has ruled according to what I believe to be the rule of the Senate, that the question upon this amendment takes precedence of the question upon the substithis amendment takes precedence of the question upon the substi-tute and of any amendment perfecting the substitute. The purpose of this amendment, I wish to have understood by the Senate, is to bring up directly the question of the obligation to pay the insurers. It strikes out from the original bill proposed by the Judiciary Com-mittee the provision for insurers; and if any further amendment of the bill is necessary in case this shall be agreed to, it can be offered hereafter.

Mr. CONKLING. Having lost the run of this matter, I beg to inquire, where does the amendment of the Senator from Ohio striking out war premiums come in ?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONKLING. For my own edification, I beg the Chair to state what the condition of the question is, beginning with the original what the condition of the question is, beginning with the original bill—what are the amendments pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] offered an amendment as a substitute for the whole bill, pending which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] moved an amendment to strike out certain words from the substitute. The Senator from Massachusetts subsequently moves to amend the text of the original bill, which has priority. That is the immediately pending amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Next to that, as we stand, will be the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to strike out certain words in the substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the last amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. That has precedence because it is an amendment of the text of the bill.

amendment of the text of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that I think with great respect to him he would reach the object he has in view, to try the question on the insurance companies first, much better by moving to strike out in section 4 from the first line inclusive to the eleventh line inclusive, which is a direct repeal of the provision of the old act, that is revived, which excludes the insurance companies beyond the extent of their losses.

The clause that he moves to strike out now might embrace—and I think it does—the losses by what are called the exculpated cruisers, and I for one, as at present advised, should not be willing to strike that out until we have further consideration.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was going to move to strike out of section 4 all the lines, beginning with the first, down to line 11, and I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, if he wants to try it on the insurance question first, to modify his motion, so as to apply it to the first part of that section.

Mr. HOAR. The necessity for the motion came up very hurriedly, and I made the motion hurriedly. The Senator from Vermont is right. I will modify my motion accordingly, or withdraw my motion and let him make it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts adopts the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, and moves to strike out of section 4 of the original bill, beginning with line 1, the words which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as

That so much of the twelfth section of the said act as provides that "no claim shall be admissible or allowed by said court by or in behalf of any insurance company or insurer, either in its or his own right or as assignee, or otherwise, in the right of a person or party insured, as aforesaid, unless such claimant shall show to the satisfaction of said court that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses in respect to its or his war risks exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war risks; and in case of any such allowance, the same shall not be greater than such excess of loss," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out from the fourth section of the original bill the words just read.

Mr. HOAR. I shall hereafter, if that is adopted, move to strike out the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth lines, to correspond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts just read.

Mr. BLAINE. I regret that the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] who addressed the Senate at length this morning, is not in his seat, for I desire to ask him a question in order to inform myself of the exact scope of the doctrine he has presented. The question is a very simple one. I presume the honorable Senator from question is a very simple one. I presume the honorable Senator from Ohio will be willing to answer it, because he and the Senator from Onto will be willing to answer it, because he and the Senator from Illinois hold the same views. The question is this: According to the doctrine held by those Senators, what is the duty of the United States in case the $15,500,000 paid should prove to be a larger sum than the aggregate of the individual private losses for which it was awarded? That is a pretty interesting question; and it is not to be answered as a great many such questions are, by saying that we shall cross Big Muddy when we reach it.

How are we to deal with the balance of this fund if we have any? That lies at the root of the whole matter because according to the

How are we to deal with the balance of this fund if we have any in that lies at the root of the whole matter, because according to the theory maintained by the honorable Senator from Illinois this great international arbitration that we had, this great conference between what we are disposed to think the two leading nations of the world, this great example of a new mode of adjusting international disputes on which we have felicitated ourselves on subsequent Fourth of Julys, the whole of it, as I understand now, was nothing in the world except the United States consenting to become the attorney for some insurance companies. That is all there was of it!

If the argument of the honorable Senator from Illinois and of the honorable Senator from Ohio amounts to anything, or if I comprehend it, it is that the United States consented to throw its whole power into the scale to get up a great diplomatic negotiation in which the prestige of this Government should be put in and we should appear before an international tribunal, all in order to get the particular losses that might have occurred on one hundred and thirty-five vessels that were burned and sunk, and to have the amount of the premiums of insurance that were paid thereon restored to the companies! That is all we had ever there; and now, if that be so—
Mr. THURMAN. Why does the Senator say that in view of the

Mr. THURMAN. Why does the Senator say that in view of the fact that the amount already paid, and not paid to insurance companies, but to individuals, is far greater than the insurance companies would get if this bill were to pass?

Mr. BLAINE. Well, I ask the honorable Senator, suppose we pay the insurance companies; according to him we have already paid those who suffered direct losses, those who had the vessels and carross destroyed and new the insurance companies; are the honorable. goes destroyed, and now the insurance companies are to be paid; if taking these two classes in, there are four or five million dollars left, what I asked was, what shall be done with that balance?

Mr. THURMAN. The bill answers, so far as the majority of the Judiciary Committee are concerned.

Judiciary Committee are concerned.

Mr. BLAINE. I have never heard this question answered yet in the argument. The honorable Senator and myself had a little colloquy the other day on the subject, and it was not answered. My only reason for rising this afternoon is to correct him upon a point of very great importance in this discussion, the honorable Senator maintaining as he did that on the subject of war premiums the mercantile marine of the United States could show no loss; that they had "charged it in," as his phrase went. I rise this afternoon to correct him, a Senator in the American Congress, by reading the words of an eminent member of the British Parliament, not now living, an eminent member of the House of Commons of Great Britain, known and respected wherever the English language is spoken. If the honorable Senator from Ohio will give me his attention, I think he will admit that there is ground for claiming a loss which ought to be a matter of international consideration. Here is what Richard Cobden said on the floor of the House of Commons on the 13th day of May, 1864; and I am sure that I could not make half so good a speech nor a hundredth part as applicable to this question as by simply reading the language of Mr. Cobden. Addressing the House of Commons, he said:

You have been carrying on hostilities from these shores against the people of the United States, and have been inflicting an amount of damage on that country greater than would be produced by many ordinary wars.

Mr. Cobden seems to have had something different in his mind from repaying a few insurance companies. He says:

repaying a few insurance companies. He says:

It is estimated that the loss sustained by the capture and burning of American vessels has been about $15,000,000, or nearly £3,000,000 sterling. But that is a small part of the injury which has been inflicted on the American marine. We have rendered the rest of her wast mercantile property for the present valueless. Under the system of free trade, by which the commerce of the world is now so largely carried on, if you raise the rate of insurance on the flag of any maritime power you throw the trade into the hands of its competitors, because it is no longer profitable for merchants or manufacturers to employ ships to carry freights when those vessels become liable to war risks. I have here one or two facts which I should like to lay before the honorable and learned gentleman, in order to show the way in which this has been operating. When he has heard them, he will see what a cruel satire it is to say that our laws have been found sufficient to enforce our neutrality. I hold in my hand an account of the foreign trade of New York for the quarter ending June 30, 1860, and also for the quarter ending June 30, 1860, and also for the quarter ending June 30, 1863, which is the last date up to which a comparison is made. I find that the total amount of the foreign trade of New York for the first-mentioned period was $92,000,000, of which $62,000,000 were carried in American bottoms and $65,000,000, of which $62,000,000 were carried as the war continued, for it appears that for the quarter ending June 30, 1863, the total amount of the foreign trade of New York were carried in American bottoms, in 1863 three-fourths were carried en in foreign bottoms. You see, therefore, what a complete revolution must have taken place in the value of American bipping; and what has been the consequence?

Then he goes on to detail the immeasurable loss that had been inficted upon the American mercantile marine by the raising of the price of insurance upon every vessel that sailed and upon every cargo which it took out; and the whole of that loss came directly upon the American ship-master and ship-owner.

I do not think it is worth while for me to enter at all into an argument touching the doctrine of subrogation, which has been discussed so elaborately between the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Illinois; but it struck me as I was listening to them, throwing out of sight the instructions of Mr. Fish, throwing out of sight the argument of the counsel at Geneva, in which they were specially the argument of the counsel at Geneva, in which they were specially instructed not to admit any solitary point in regard to what this Government might do when it got control of the fund, that Mr. Fish might just as well have said in that paper that if the United States does not guard itself against this point there will rise up a class of technicalists in the profession of the law who will insist that this fund is to be distributed just exactly as if this were a suit at law between two individuals, (and that is precisely what the honorable Senator from Illinois is contending to-day,) and they will insist upon the doctrine of subrogation being applied to an extent which, I think, never has yet been attempted in the world's history.

It occurred to me, as I heard the honorable Senator from Illinois

It occurred to me, as I heard the honorable Senator from Illinois arguing, that it would not be much more absurd in the case of a man owning a ship and insuring her, and the ship being lost, and the insurance company being subrogated, as of course it would be, to the hulk and whatever could be made of it, if afterward a rich uncle should write to the man who owned the ship saying to him, "You met a severe loss in that vessel, and in consideration of it I make you a present of $50,000," for the insurance company to step in and say, "on the doctrine of subrogation that $50,000 shall be subrogated to this company, because it is given in consideration of this loss." There is absolutely as much logical connection between the loss and the money in the one case as in the other.

Mr. President, I am not feeling in a good condition to speak this afternoon, and I do not wish to delay the vote for any more prolonged argument that I might desire to make upon this question. If the Senate is ready to vote upon the amendment, I shall not longer detain it. The constituency which I represent, and which is largely interested in this bill, as the whole commercial community of the United States are, is much more anxious for action on the part of the Congress of the United States than for talk. I am very sure that I shall not delay that which has been delayed already much too long, by any needless argument at this stage of the proceeding.

I am somewhat curtailed in the line of remark which I had laid out for myself when I rose by the fact that the honorable Senator from Illinois is not in the Chamber. There was one remark that he from Illinois is not in the Chamber. There was one remark that he made which struck me, I must even say in his absence, as very strange, that he should quote the opinion of Chief-Justice Cockburn as having weight upon this question when it was a dissenting opinion, one that was made in anger, one that was so offensive in its tone that had it been known that it was to be presented, as I am credibly informed, it would not have been admitted into the records of the proceeding at Geneva. That the angry words of a disappointed arbitrator in a case which had been lost to the power that he represented should be quoted as the law governing the case in the American Congress is a very extraordinary thing for an eminent lawyer and an ex-judge of the Supreme Court of the United States to do; and that is what I desired to say in the presence of the honorable Senator himself. If I am mistaken as to the fact that he quoted the dissenting opinion of Chieftaken as to the fact that he quoted the dissenting opinion of Chief-Justice Cockburn, then of course all I have said on that point is inapplicable; but I repeat that if I am correct in the assumption that what the honorable Senator was quoting as the law of the case for us to observe was itself the language of an angry and, if Caleb Cushing is to be believed, a most discreditable and most dishonorable opinion of Chief-Justice Cockburn, it is a very extraordinary quotation to make in the Senate of the United States in this connection.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I am quite sure that no Senator expects a vote to be taken on the amendment until this subject has been discussed, as those who support the bill think it ought to be discussed, and as the Senate may be willing to hear them. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is to strike out the main feature of the bill. If that motion should prevail, the bill, so far as it is the production of the Judiciary Committee of this body, is dead. Of course the committee will desire to be heard upon that amendment before the question is put. I therefore hope there will be nothing like an attempt to ask a vote on the amendment until the close of the debate.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be kind enough to repeat what he said? I lost the last remark he said, as to what he hoped.

Mr. THURMAN. I say the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is to strike out the main feature of the bill as it is reported by the Judiciary Committee, and if that motion should prevail the bill so far as that committee is concerned is dead. Of course those who are in the majority can continue it and shape it in such form as they see fit; but so far as the committee is concerned its production will have ceased to live. Therefore, I do not suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator will ask for a vote on that amendment until the discussion is substantially at an end. When amendment until the discussion is substantially at an end. When the debate is closed, let the vote be taken on it, and let the fate of the bill be decided. If the amendment should carry, then I shall surrender the bill into the hands of those who may prove to be a majority in the Senate to do with it as they see fit. If, on the contrary, it should be defeated, then as the organ of the Judiciary Committee I shall press the bill to a passage if it is the will of the Senate to

I do not rise to discuss this question now. I have not wished to speak much on this bill, and for the reason that twice I have elaborately discussed this question, when the first report was made by the Judiciary Committee, and again the succeeding year when the act of 1874 was passed. It is a subject that has no novelty to me, and, therefore, very little charm to me. I do not feel like undergoing all the fatigue of an elaborate discussion of a subject that I have already o much discussed. Although there are a number of Senators now in the body who were not here when the act of 1874 was passed, which was the occasion of the last discussion, yet, after the speeches delivered by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Davis,] the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. Garland,] the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan,] and others that will be delivered, I do not feel that it is incumbent on me to take up much of the time of the Senate. However, according to the courtesy of debate, I am entitled, I believe, to conclude the debate, I do not say to cut anybody off after I shall have spoken, but to conclude the debate as we generally understand it, on the bill, and I should like very much to know when I shall be called upon to perform that duty. I do not wish to occupy more than an hour of the time of the Senate; I probably shall not occupy that much time

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that while for one I shall most gladly listen to him in a final reply, yet, as in all other similar instances, if he should present any new point of consideration that Senators differing from him have not had an opportunity to present their views of, I think that Senators opposed to his views ought to feel quite at liberty to make such reply to that as they should deem suitable

I have already said so.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. THURMAN. I did not hear the Senator in all he said. We have no previous question in the Senate; it Mr. THURMAN. We have no previous question in the Senate; it all rests on the courtesy that prevails among Senators. If in the conclusion I say anything that any Senator feels that he ought to reply to, of course he will be at liberty to do so. I only say that exercising that privilege which the courtesy of the Senate has uniformly, and in all parliamentary bodies is uniformly accorded to him who has a bill in charge, I expect in a very brief speech—certainly not over an hour in length, possibly not half that—to sum up what I have to say in reply to what has been said so far as I think it necessary and in support of this committee bill; and I am anxious to know when I shall have to hold myself in readiness for the performance of that duty. I would be extremely glad to know what Senators expect to speak on the bill. I shall not take the time now, as I am told by my friend from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] that he is ready to proceed with some observations upon the bill; and therefore I give way to him.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I should not have voted in favor of the report of this bill excepting for the very feature it contains which is now proposed by this amendment to be stricken from it. I was in the Senate when this treaty was negotiated. I was here when the act of 1874 was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and I voted against it because it failed to distribute to some of the parties who were plainly in my judgment entitled to a share of this money the sums which in their name Government had demanded for them. In my construction of the treaty of Washington there was no such thing as a claim by the American Government or the American peo-ple of a national character.

We all know very well the history of the events that preceded and caused this treaty. In the very first article, in the second recital, is to be found the only solatium or compensation which the British government was willing to accord the Government of the United States. It took the form not of pecuniary recompense or any suggestion of that kind, but it took the form of simple apology, and the language in which that apology was tendered and accepted is as follows:

And whereas Her Britannic Majesty has authorized her high commissioners and plenipotentiaries to express in a friendly spirit the regret felt by Her Majesty's government for the escape, under whatever circumstances, of the Alabama and other vessels from British ports, and for the depredations committed by those ves-

Mr. President, I always believed, from my construction of the treaty and all that I knew of the historical events that preceded, accompanied, and followed it, that the United States accepted this expression from the government of Great Britain in accord and satisfaction and full discharge of their national demands against that government. Such was the interpretation that the British government put upon it. Such was the interpretation that the English people unaniupon it. Such was the interpretation that the English people unanimously put upon it. I as an American did not attempt to conceal my surprise when claims called "indirect," of a national character, were set forth in the case of the American Government at Geneva. A report was made by the very able and accomplished agent for the United States, now filling a responsible office under our Government, Mr. Bancroft Davis, dated at Paris on the 21st of September, 1872, giving an account of what he terms the "successful termination" of the transactions committed to his charge on behalf of his government. In this report he gives a condensed history of the proceedings of this arbitration. He states that "the American case" had been, after its preparation by him submitted to the criticism of a number after its preparation by him, submitted to the criticism of a number of distinguished American citizens, jurists and publicists, and had met their approval; but on page 4 he distinctly states that the chapter claiming losses as national losses or "indirect claims" as they were generically termed, was "not sent out for criticism as the others

In that respect, I think, therefore, to those gentlemen to whom this "case" had been submitted and to those who had supposed that none but the claims for the damage to individual citizens would be submitted to this international arbitration, it was a matter of surprise when the chapter of claims for what are known as the "indirect claims" or national claims, for national losses, was introduced before that tri-bunal. Therefore, he says that "an outburst followed" the presen-tation of these claims, and he cites the expressions of amazement, in-dignation, and almost fury on the part of the British press that such claims should have been presented. The result was, in short, that the proposition of Great Britain was to terminate proceedings under the proposition of creat Britain was to terminate proceedings under this treaty, to close the whole transaction. I can recall the expressions of the British press at the time among those who had been the strongest and firmest friends of the United States Government pending the late civil war. They together with all other British subjects joined in a unanimous resolve that the negotiations should terminate then and there, and they had rather abide the arbitrament of war than to continue a negotiation which would make their position as a central power far more averaging and building in its results then than to continue a negotiation which would make their position as a neutral power far more expensive and humiliating in its results than if they had been actually a conquered belligerent, because it would by its principle have saddled a neutral with all the losses of a war in which they had not taken part; that under the allegation of negligence on their part all the penalties of unsuccessfal belligerency would have been incurred. They never could admit it; they never would admit it. They said they would not, and they said the proposed negotiation should close then and there, and it was proposed to do that or that an adjournment should be had for several months for the purpose of seeing whether some new convention between the United States and the government of Great Britain could be arranged. But in the mean time intimations were given that those "indirect But in the mean time intimations were given that those "indirect claims" were not seriously to be pressed by the United States, that claims" were not seriously to be pressed by the United States, that they were thrown in rather as the shadow of a claim to affect the claims which were to be made on behalf of the individual citizens, and which had been presented to the government of Great Britain, and for which she was sought to be held responsible, and for which certain "new rules" of law in derogation, as was alleged in the new treaty, of the then existing international rules of law for the purpose of bringing the government of Great Britain within their operation, of oringing the government of Great Britain within their operation, in order that a practical compensation might be given to those who had suffered from the alleged negligence of British efficials to assert certain British statutes of neutrality. But it appears by these proceedings that these claims being set forth in the "case" were abandoned upon such intimations by the tribunal that they would not be considered or allowed as made it palpably useless to attempt to press them; and we find at page 19 of this book in the protocol made of the record of the proceedings of the board of arbitration on the 19th June:

Count Sclopis then, on behalf of all the arbitrators, made the following statement:
"The application of the agent of Her Britannic Majesty's government being now before the arbitrators"—

The application for postponement-

The application for postponement—

"the president of the tribunal (Count Sclopis) proposes to make the following communication on the part of the arbitrators to the parties interested:

"The arbitrators wish it to be understood that in the observations which they are about to make they have in view solely the application of the agent of Her Britannic Majesty's government, which is now before them, for an adjournment, which might be prolonged till the month of February in next year; and the motives for that application, viz, the difference of opinion which exists between Her Britannic Majesty's government and the Government of the United States as to the competency of the tribunal, under the treaty of Washington, to deal with the claims advanced in the case of the United States in respect of losses under the several heads of "—

These were the (indicate below).

These were the "indirect claims"-

"First, 'the losses in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag;' second, 'the enhanced payments of insurance'—

War premiums-

"and third, the prolongation of the war, and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion; and the hope which Her Britannic Majesty's government does not abandon, that if sufficient time were given for that purpose, a solution of the difficulty which has thus arisen, by the negotiation of a supplementary convention between the two governments, might be found practicable."

This being so, the arbitrators think it right to state that, after the most careful perusal of all that has been urged on the part of the Government of the United States in respect to these claims, they have arrived, individually and collectively, at the conclusion that these claims do not constitute, upon the principles of international law applicable to such cases, good foundation for an award of compensation or computation of damages between nations, and should, upon such principles, be wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal in making its award, even if there were no disagreement between the two governments as to the competency of the tribunal to decide thereon.

This intimation hains, given to all the parties it seems that on the

This intimation being given to all the parties, it seems that on the 25th of June Mr. Bancroft Davis, on behalf of the United States, stated as follows:

The declaration made by the tribunal, individually and collectively, respecting the claims presented by the United States for the award of the tribunal for: first, "the losses in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag;" second, "the enhanced payments of insurance;" and third, "the prolongation of the war and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion," is accepted by the President of the United States as determinative of their judgment upon the important question of public law involved.

The agent of the United States is authorized to say that, consequently, the abovementioned claims will not be further insisted upon before the tribunal by the United States, and may be excluded from all consideration in any award that may be made.

Such was the manner in which the first attempt, immediately upon its disclosure, the first proposition that there had been a national damage, something that should bring money into the Treasury of the United States, was met. That was the answer. The intimation was so strong on the part of the tribunal of Geneva that, under the instructions of the President, the American agent withdrew the claim, and said it should be excluded from any further consideration by the tribunal, and so it was.

tribunal, and so it was.

Now, sir, throughout the treaty it will be found that every matter submitted to the Geneva arbitration affected "claims generically known as the Alabama claims," which meant claims for the destruction of property of American citizens on the high seas by armed cruisers of the Confederate States, which being built in British ports, or having escaped from British ports, or having been supplied by British officials, or with their privity and consent, became agents therefore of that authority, for which the principals should be held responsible. All through this treaty it will be found there is such reference to the character of the claims as excludes the idea of their being of a national character. I do not confine myself to the interpretation put upon the treaty by the arbitrators at Geneva, nor to that construction which was accepted by the agent of the United States in the language which I have just read; but all through the treaty, all over its face, the treaty is marked by constant repetition of the fact that the claims are separate, are singular, are individual, are to be considered claims are separate, are singular, are individual, are to be considered each by itself, and the award upon each to be signed separately by the parties agreeing thereto. Let me read article 7:

The said tribunal shall first determine as to each vessel separately whether Great Britain has, by any act or omission, failed to fulfill any of the duties set forth in the foregoing three rules, or recognized by the principles of international law.

In article 10 the tribunal shall-

Ascertain and determine what claims are valid-

Speaking in the plural, when as we know a claim for national damage is not so to be described-what claims are valid, and what amount or amounts shall be paid by Great Britain to the United States on account of the liability arising from such failure, as to each vessel.

Further on in the same article:

They shall be bound to hear on each separate claim, if required, one person on behalf of each government, as counsel or agent.

Then further:

Every claim shall be presented to the assessors within six months from the day of their first meeting, but they may, for good cause shown, extend the time for the presentation of any claim to a further period not exceeding three months.

The assessors shall report to each government at or before the expiration of one year from the date of their first meeting the amount of claims decided by them up to the date of such report; if further claims then remain undecided, they shall make a further report at or before the expiration of two years from the date of such first meeting; and in case any claims remain undetermined at that time, they shall make a final report within a further period of six months.

That distinctly shows that there were classes of individual claims. It is not the language that would be applied to a national claim for general reimbursement for the prolongation of the war, or for injuries to national right and national honor. All of that, I have said, was embraced and condoned in the apology contained in the first article. It was so accepted, so treated; and then having passed from the consideration of the great claim of one nation against another, it proceeded to the consideration of individual claims for the determination of which this board of arbitrators was created.

But in article 12 provision is made for another class of claims, showing that the claims now in question were for the destructions and depredations committed by those cruisers, termed generically "Alabama claims." Article 12 provides:

The high contracting parties agree that all claims on the part of corporations, companies, or private individuals, citizens of the United States, upon the government of Her Britannic Majesty, arising out of acts committed against the persons or property of citizens of the United States during the period between the 13th of April, 1861, and the 9th of April, 1865, inclusive, not being claims growing out of the acts of the vessels referred to in article 1 of this treaty * * * shall be referred to three commissioners to be appointed in the following manner.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. "Not being claims referred to in article 1." I think the language shows that the claims therein mentioned were claims of the United States in article 1.

Mr. BAYARD. Not at all. There were claims mentioned in article 1, the claims of individuals who had suffered by the Alabama depredations, and the claim of the Government of the United States for national compensation, which was settled by raising the hat, as it were, by simply a courteous bow and apology which ended the claim, according to their agreement, of the Government of the United States as a government against Great Britain as a government for action of Great Britain during the civil war and the depredation committed by these cruisers; and then it went on to provide that the claims should be presented to the tribunal, not the claim for wounded national honor or for injury to national interests, but the claims of the tional honor or for injury to national interests, but the claims of the classes of injured citizens of the United States, which were well known. They had at that time been presented by the American minister at the court of St. James. They had been forwarded to him under the direction of the Department of State at Washington. And what were those claims? I shall presently discuss them, because I say that distinctly among the claims so presented, so accepted, so indorsed by the American Government, and passing through the channels of American power to be presented at the court of St. James and subsequently to the tribunal at Geneva, were the identical claims of lawful insurers and underwriters, which it is by this amendment.

lawful insurers and underwriters, which it is by this amendment proposed to be stricken out of this bill.

Article 12 shows distinctly that there were other claims for individual losses than the Alabama claims, there had been other depredations than by the Alabama, there had been other wrongs inflicted by British negligence or hostility upon citizens of the United States which were not to be settled by the Geneva arbitration, but which were under the terms of this treaty to be settled by a board of three commissioners to be appointed as was provided in article 12.

What I desire to impress upon the Senate is that we are dealing with a fund, not a charitable fund for general distribution among all the poor and needy or all the American citizens injured by the late war, but a fund which is held in trust, received by the United States for certain purposes, to be appropriated for the benefit of certain classes alone, and who they are is to be determined by the award of the arbitration and by the terms of our submission under the treaty of Washington in advance of that award.

One thing I think the American Congress should not forget. If we One thing I think the American Congress should not forget. If we shall to-day in a spirit of easy and careless generosity undertake to deal with this fund by distributing it as is proposed by the amendment of the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr.McDonald] not now in his seat, or that of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] we shall apply this money to the very objects which the arbitrators said we should not apply it, in satisfaction of claims which the agent of the United States Government at Geneva declared had been forever "withdrawn from the consideration of the tribunal," which the award of the arbitrators themselves said should not be paid, but they provided that it should be paid only to certain classes who are described as sufferers under the depredations of certain named vessels and none others. "The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another." Such is the accepted rule of interpretation. But you are not driven to inferential interpretation. You have the express mandate of the to inferential interpretation. You have the express mandate of the arbitrators by whose decision you pledged yourselves to abide, that this money should be paid to certain classes of American claimants, in whose name and behalf, claims had been expressly called for and filed through the agency of the United States Government.

Now, who were embraced in that class? Here is the decision and award of the Geneva tribunal made on the 14th of September, 1872, and signed by four of the five arbitrators. I will not fatigue the Senate by reading it at length. Who are included and who are excluded? Before the award was made, by the consent and action of the United States, all claims for "indirect" losses; the cost of prolonging the war; the cost of increased insurance, not enforced change of flag and sale had been distinctly excluded by the arbitrators and withdrawn by the United States agent and therefore they were not referred to by the arbitrators in their final award, because by the referred to by the arbitrators in their final award, because by the action of one of the chief contending parties they had been withdrawn and abandoned. They found that the Alabama, or No. 290, as she was first called in the ship-yard, had committed depredations, for which Great Britain was liable, and also in regard to the Florida—the Orieto, as she was originally called—and also in regard to the Shenandoah, but in regard to the Shenandoah only after she had reached Melbourne in Australia, and had been there refitted. Prior to that time they expressly decided there was no liability on the part of the British government; her depredations only after that time were to be charged against the British government. to be charged against the British government.

Then they proceeded to consider the case of the tenders—the Tuscaloosa, the Clarence, the Tacony, and the Archer:

The tribunal is unanimously of opinion—
That such tenders or auxiliary vessels, being properly regarded as accessories, must necessarily follow the lot of their principals, and be submitted to the same decision which applies to them respectively.

Then they proceed to consider the case of other of these cruisers, the Georgia, the Sumter, the Nashville, the Tallahassee, and the Chickamauga.

Chickamanga.

The tribunal is unanimously of opinion—
That Great Britain has not falled, by any act or omission, to fulfill any of the duties prescribed by the three rules of Article VI in the treaty of Washington, or by the principles of international law not inconsistent therewith.

And so far as relates to the vessels called—
The Sallie,
The Jefferson Davis,
The Music,
The Boston, and
The V. H. Joy, respectively,
The tribunal is unanimously of opinion—
That they ought to be excluded from consideration for want of evidence.

Then proceeds the excluded from consideration in regard to general

Then proceeds the exclusion of other claims in regard to general expenses of the war increased by the presence of these vessels on the high seas

Now, Mr. President, what manner of claims and what claims were forwarded by the United States through their administration in Washington to their agents in Europe and placed before the tribunal? At page 583 and from that to 632 of the second part of executive document 1, part 1, of the Forty-second Congress, will be found a list stating the name of the ship, the character of the cargo, the loss, and the particulars attending that loss, and the name of the

What I mean to say is this, that the Government of the United States in receiving and filing these claims recognized that an under-writer who had in good faith paid the loss incurred by these inculpated cruisers was a claimant acknowledged by the laws of this country, and they presented him as such to the tribunal, and the tribunal allowed his claim as much as it did that of the man who was not insured. It is a simple substantial fact; and the effect of striking out this clause of the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary simply amounts to this, that for some reason which I cannot conceive, for some cause heretofore unknown in the history of American juris prudence, the contract of insurance is to be assailed and penalized, that something has been discovered which makes the contract of insurance against public policy and unworthy of legal protection. Why, sir, in the legal experience that I have gained such a suggestion strikes me with amazement. I have always believed that insurance contracts were meritorious, that the law favored the contract of insurance, that it was both an act of discretion and wise providence for a man to insure his property against danger, and thereby by paying a small contribution to obtain safety for his venture. I also know that, with men of great wealth and extensive business, the habit widely prevails of what is known as self-insurance. I have known large lines of packet ships trading between England and the United States, where the owners never insured, having a business so extensive that the calculation of chances warranted them in becoming their own insurers whereby they found that in a long course of years they saved more by not paying the usual premium and suffering their own actual loss should any occur. I could name many citizens so wealthy and so largely interested in real estate that they never think wealthy and so largely interested in real estate that they never think of insuring. I believe there are such in the city of New York who never in their lives paid a farthing of fire insurance; and why? Because the extent of their possessions and the scale of their property and interests permit them prudently to take the risk under the doctrine of chance, and they save money by not paying premium, thus becoming an insurance company practically for themselves.

Take the simple operation of this case. Two men engaged in the same trade send out vessels of equal value freighted with cargoes of equal value. They are to run the risk of capture by belligerent cruisequal value. They are to run the risk of capture by belingerent cruisers upon the high seas. One of these owners is a man able to take the chances and insure himself; the other being less wealthy sees fit to insure. Voyages are made, say nine each, with success. One has paid his premium in every case, the other has saved it by not insuring at all. On the tenth voyage the vessels of both are destroyed, captured by the same cruiser at the same time and under the same circumstances. Their losses are scheduled alike, forwarded to the same department of the Government, passing through the same hands, and the same claim is made by both before the Geneva tribunal under this treaty with Great Britain. They are presented at Geneva. There is no hesitation and doubt even in the bill of 1874 that the man who insured himself and who thereby gained his profit shall be paid in full; but the man who has honestly insured the other and who has paid the loss in full, who has promptly and honorably performed a contract considered meritorious before the law and recognized with favor in our courts of justice, shall not have the benefit of subrogation to the rights of property he insured against the identical risk; but for some reason, for the first time alleged in the history of jurisprudence, he shall be excluded from the results of a contract meritorious on his part, lawful on both sides, wholly without fraud or deceit, and he is to be excluded from reimbursement for some reason relations to make any which has proper set have stated in which here unknown to me and which has never yet been stated in my hearing satisfactorily!

Why, sir, it certainly is a new departure from all known law— I would agree that it is for us to decide; but I do mean to say that we are bound to do one of two things, pay this money to those citizens in whose name we demanded it, or hand it back to those who paid it to us. There is nothing, I agree, to control the American Congress in the disposition of this fund except their sense of what is due to the honor and reputation of the American people and their Government. I agree it is no affair of Great Britain whether we shall exclude these parties insured or not. That is not the question. I do not propose to gauge my conduct or vote, or to ask my associates to gauge theirs at all by apprehension of what the Government of Great Britain can do or may please to think about this business. That is not the question. But I do say there are rules of action, there are limits to administration laid down for us by the treaty, by the award which was made in execution of the treaty, that we cannot escape if we wish to maintain that which our forefathers called "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind."

If we shall, as I said, pay this money over to those who lost money by being compelled to sell their vessels to avoid capture, and for whom I have a sincere and ready sympathy, or to those who were compelled to pay away their substance in extravagant war premiums, ernment. I agree it is no affair of Great Britain whether we shall compelled to pay away their substance in extravagant war premiums, which were expressly excluded by this arbitration from their consideration and withdrawn by the act of the American agent finally from consideration, then it will come to this: that we may pay them now, but it will be a gratuity at our own cost; we shall have to pay that meney a second time when the parties really entitled shall come formoney a second time when the parties really entitled shall come forward to claim it. I now state as my opinion, and it has been my opinion from the beginning of this case, that if the underwriters lawfully insuring, who paid losses recognized by the tribunal and whose claims were presented through the agency of the United States before the tribunal, for whose payment this money was expressly awarded by the arbitrators, shall be excluded by the vote of Congress from participation in this fund to-day, and the money shall be otherwise distributed, their right to recover has not been in the least degree affected, and we shall have to stand in the judgment of future times, if not of the present time, as having obtained this money, I will not say under false pretenses, but having obtained this money under one pretense and in one name, and refused to execute the trust reposed in us by the payment of the money into our hands only for a stated and ascertainable purpose. I am unable to see this case in any other light; and unless the contract of insurance shall be shown to be an unlawful or impolitic contract, unless its meritorious character, which has always been admitted heretofore, shall be shown not to exist, I am unable to see how we can avoid, after the reception of that money into the Treasury of the United States under express terms of the submission and of the award, that followed it—I cannot see how we can expect to escape future liability when the press terms of the submission and of the award that followed it—1 cannot see how we can expect to escape future liability when the question comes to be properly presented, as it certainly will.

I tell you, Senators, that such claims as the insurance companies made under the due forms of law in pursuance of valid contracts, where no fraud existed, and which were presented by the American agent to the consideration of the Geneva tribunal, and which by the tribunal were embraced within the class of cases of depredations for which Great Britain was held liable, and for which these damages were awarded will survive, and they will be pressed, and they will, I trust, if not to-day, at some future day be paid for the exoneration of the American Government from the act of bad faith toward a meritorious class of its own citizens.

The question of the profit or the loss of the insurance companies is not proper or possible for us to consider. We all know what these insurance companies are, but who are their stockholders; and whether they be rich men or whether they be poor widows or orphans, whether they hold single shares or whether their shares are numbered by thousands, that is not the question. It is this aggregation of capital that enables the important business of insurance to be carried on. It is only by associated companies and corporations that the general business of insuring can be securely effected, for such amounts of capital do not exist in single hands. The people who profit by contracts of insurance may be among those who should awaken the most ready sympathy of every man who is acquainted with their personal ready sympathy of every man who is acquainted with their personal circumstances; and therefore such considerations have no place in a debate like this. I was amazed when I heard my worthy friend from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] yesterday referring to the profits that some insurance company had made which were disclosed to him by one of its members. He mentioned some great sum that they had made as profits. What if they did? Was it not lawful? Was not that contract meritorious? Was it not a fair and lawful bargain between them and those who sought to be insured by them? What have we as legislators to do with these questions of profit and loss in a business admitted to be lawful?

They say there was an enhancement of the prices of merchandise.

Why, the enhancement of prices was just as great whether the vessel and her cargo was insured or uninsured, provided she made a safe voyage and landed her cargo in safety. It is in vain, under the idea voyage and landed her cargo in safety. It is in vain, under the idea of equity, to pursue or estimate such remote results, and to attempt to class them on the ground of equitable set-off to claims formally presented and plainly entitled under the Geneva award to recognition and payment. No, sir; the case is perfectly plain. If the contract of insurance was unlawful, was impolitic, was void, of course there can be no claim justly whether they crept into the account stated by the American agents before these arbitrators or not. But unless you are American agents before these arbitrators of not. But timess you are prepared to say that insurance is an unjust and unlawful contract, you cannot object to giving these parties the same rights of subrogation that every court of justice in the civilized world has heretofore allowed them, and which none have more readily sustained than the American courts.

I will not argue here the question of subrogation. It has been in-I will not argue here the question of subrogation. It has been in my judgment completely stated. The statement made in 1874 by you, sir, I thought unanswerable, [Mr. Thurman in the chair,] then on the floor of the Senate, which has been again so ably stated by the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. Davis] in the exhaustive arguments made by him, and also ably and clearly by my friend from New York, [Mr. Kernan.] It would be surperfluous if I should restate them. In my judgment the argument was an irrefutable one that the right of sub-my judgment the argument was an irrefutable one that the right of subrogation did exist in cases like the present, and that there was nothing in the circumstances that attended these losses, or which can be found in the language of the treaty or the manner of the presentation of the claims which in any degree affects the full right of these lawful insurers to receive the legal results of their meritorious contracts.

I have said, Mr. President, all that I intended to say about this matter. I shall vote against this bill if it is amended as proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I shall vote against this bill if the indirect losses, so expressly rejected by the arbitrators, so plainly withdrawn by the American agent, should be attempted to be forced into its provisions. As I said, this is no charity fund for the equal benefit of all American citizens. There is no more reason, in mercy, in justice, in patriotic feeling, why we should pay any Amerequal benefit of all American citizens. There is no more reason, in mercy, in justice, in patriotic feeling, why we should pay any American citizen for losses on the sea than on the land, unless they are embraced within those classes for whose express use we received this money. Many a man during the war, innocent, peaceful and patriotic, had his house burned down or destroyed, perhaps lost his limbs and his health by the act of war, which could not be prevented, and to which his loss was a natural and unhappy incident, and yet for which this Government cannot dream of being held responsible. To do so would simply bankrupt any treasury. War is a universal evil and the last resort only,—the last argument, the consequences of which are never to be repaid in the case of private injuries. Therefore it is that this money had as well be spread pro rata all over the country for losses on land as well as on sea unless it is to be strictly kept and applied to the especial cases of those parties in whose name and beapplied to the especial cases of those parties in whose name and behalf we claimed it, and who alone are the proper beneficiaries of this fund. Among them I hold the contractors for insurance to be. They are there by name; they are there by stated case; they are there by description; they are there eo nomine as insurers, and having gotten the money in their name I cannot see how we can withhold it from them as is proposed by this amendment.

I hope, therefore, that the Senate will refuse to agree to this amend-and that the bill may stand in substance as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the honorable Senator from Delaware takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. I did not want to interrupt his line of argument, and therefore postponed until he was through. I ask it for information; because I never yet have heard how Senators who take the position he does construe, or what weight they give or what engingeration they in any way attach to the senators. they give, or what consideration they in any way attach to the very specific instructions issued from the State Department of this Government against permitting any possible restriction in any way to be placed upon the discretion of Congress.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not apprehend that it was competent for the Department of State to control in any degree the action of the arbitration. I hold that in the administration of this fund we look to two papers; we look to the treaty; and we look to the award. The treaty provides the terms of our submission; the award determines what we are to get and how we are to dispose of it; that is to say, which claims and which claims only we are to pay out of it.

which claims and which claims only we are to pay out of it.

Mr. BLAINE. But if the Senator is going to make himself so literal as that, the award does not mention any insurance company, and the American agent especially states that there was not any ground on which you could get the name of one in—

Mr. BAYARD. The letter of the Secretary of State cannot possibly change the true facts. The letter of the Secretary of State cannot have the fact that a way had a ship destroyed for instance by the change the fact that a man had a ship destroyed for instance by the Alabama, at a certain time and place, and the letter of the Secretary of State cannot provide compensation for a man who lost another ship at another time, not destroyed by the Alabama or any other confederate cruiser. Therefore his directions were in my judgment ultra vires. I do not understand that he had any control over the American case at all. It was as competent for Mr. Fish to insist that we should have the indirect claims, which the tribunal immediately

we should have the indirect claims, which the tribunal immediately threw out, and which he himself was compelled to withdraw. I do not know that the instructions of the Secretary of State formed at all a part of anything that bound the arbitration.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, if I understand the Senator, he is bound to take the ground that the Secretary of State in giving the instruction which he did, and which the counsel in the paper which I hold in my hand here say they followed, for Mr. Caleb Cushing, one of the counsel, says they obeyed them, acted wholly outside his authority, and that Congress has nothing to do with it, and that it has no relation whatever to the question.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think Mr. Fish's instructions are binding at all on Congress. I think what binds us is the terms of the treaty which we agreed to, which he did not, which we confirmed and ratified as a Government, and in regard to the interpretation of which he might as well be mistaken as anybody else, and I think he was mistaken in that. I think Mr. Fish's letter was in the nature of a private instruction that he could give as he pleased, but which can-not in the least degree affect the measure of our duty in disposing of this fund.

Mr. BLAINE. It is a very easy way of arguing. The Senator from Mr. BLAINE. It is a very easy way or arguing. The Senator from Delaware will observe there is no mode of arguing a case so easily to get at a conclusion as to throw out all the facts that make against the case we are presenting. There is nothing so easy as to draw your conclusions if you can eliminate all the testimony that makes against you. But this letter of Mr. Fish cannot be read too often, and I want the honorable Senator from Delaware to observe that it was written six months after the indirect claims had been thrown out. It was written after they had stripped off everything which he says brought it down to the basis which leaves us no discretion.

Mr. BAYARD. The letter might have been of great use if read to the Geneva tribunal.

the Geneva tribunal.

Mr. BLAINE. It was addressed to the counsel, but the Geneva tribunal in their award do not say one solitary thing in conflict with this letter. I want the honorable Senator to remember, and I want the Senate to remember, that full six months after all the claims which the Senator from Delaware says were excluded—

Mr. BAYARD. Were they not?

Mr. BLAINE. Six months after they were thrown out, and when the honorable Senator says the whole case was stripped right down to the individual parties who were entitled to this award, leaving to the Senate of the United States nothing to do but sit as a board of assessors, leaving us here no function in the world but what three assessors could perform—assessors, leaving us here no function in the world but what three assessors could perform—

Mr. BAYARD. Mere distributors.

Mr. BLAINE. Mere distributors. I say that six months after that the Government of the United States speaking through its recognized channel of communication upon foreign affairs, on the 8th day of December, 1871, the tribunal then being in session, said:

December, 1871, the tribunal then being in session, said:

In the discussion of this question, and in the treatment of the entire case, you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded, or what may be recovered in the event of the appointment of the board of assessors, mentioned in the tenth article of the treaty. It is possible that there may be duplicate claims for some of the property alleged to have been captured and destroyed, as in the cases of insurers and insured. The Government wishes to hold itself free te decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case. If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government without committal as to the mode of distribution.

It was not in the name of the insurance companies the honorable Senator will please observe; it was not in behalf of individuals. Mr. BAYARD. Each claim was separately considered.

Mr. BLAINE. By whom?

Mr. BAYARD. By the arbitrators.

Mr. BLAINE. There is nothing in the evidence under heaven to show that; there is not a thing in the whole record at Geneva that will vindicate and justify that statement of the Senator from Dela-

Mr. BAYARD. Why, the case maintains it.
Mr. BLAINE. No, sir; it is just as I stated a few days ago in regard to this elaborate figuring that was made to get at the amount. I stated—and I was not aware at the moment that I was so thoroughly well backed in my statement-that it was a mere case of general average on which they made up by what they call in the country chalking on the barn-door for the average, a mere splitting of the difference, and I want the honorable Senator's attention to that. After this instruction had been received, Mr. Caleb Cushing, who in his day and generation was accounted to be something of a lawyer, Mr. Caleb Cushing, one of the American counsel, says:

The counsel of the United States obeyed the instructions given them, and did not commit the United States to any theory of distribution whatever, either by way of inclusion or of exclusion, but left that question to be determined by the wisdom and discretion of Congress.

The honorable Senator from Delaware says Congress is nothing but a board of distributors in this matter; they are to take up these in-dividual men, one after another and then I should like to ask him the question that I was not able to ask the honorable Senator from Illineis: Suppose there is an overplus; here are one hundred and thirty-five cases, and the honorable Senator finds that out of the fif-teen and a half millions awarded, the amount payable to these men is eleven and a half millions, what will you do with the other four?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think that one honest dollar can remain in the Treasury of the United States under the name of a national claim.

Mr. BLAINE. Then it must be sent back to Great Britain.
Mr. BAYARD. It would be if my vote would take it there instead of attempting to apply it to any other purpose than this for which it was paid to us.

Mr. BLAINE. That is, if these particular individual claims do not cover the whole fifteen and a half millions the balance belongs to Great Britain?

Mr. EATON. We might credit it to the $5,500,000 fishery award.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, as I understand the honorable Senator from Delaware, if these insurance companies—and I have a letter from one of them in which the statement is made that they realized a profit of 100 per cent. on their capital, that they doubled their capital in the and per cent. on their capital, that they doubled their capital in the matter—if these insurance companies in getting "indemnity for their profits" shall not absorb the whole of this fund, it belongs to the treasury of the British Empire. That is the proposition of the honorable Senator. I want to read further from Mr. Cushing to show how accurately this account was made up that the honorable Senator says was itemized at Geneva. I never saw any ground whatever for that statement in the efficied desuperates. that statement in the official documents.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator will pardon me. I said that these claims were all in detail laid before the Geneva arbitrators and that they chose to make their award of damage upon the face of the information given them by the American agents, and among those claims were those which the present amendment would exclude.

Mr. BLAINE. Here is what the counsel of the United States says as to what was laid before it:

The United States at Geneva laid before the tribunal all the claims of citizens of the United States which had been presented to the Government, without vouching for the validity of any of them; but insisted that the United States were not bound by the printed schedules, but only by the description of the treaty—"all the said claims, growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels, and generally known as the Alabama claims."

This is what Mr. Cushing says as to how that account was made up: The tribunal, in making up their award, expressly excluded the idea of definite

The honorable Senator from Delaware says that they expressly took in these items. The Hon. Caleb Cushing, one of the counsel at Geneva, says that:

The tribunal, in making up their award, expressly excluded the idea of definite sment-

I leave the honorable Senator from Delaware to reconcile these two statements. Mr. Cushing goes on to say-and allowed a sum in gross, incompatible with assessment, by taking the American estimate of supposed damages of $14,437,000, and the English estimate of supposed damages of $7,074,000, and splitting the difference—

I was not aware of that phrase being used by Mr. Cushing before employed it.

Mr. BAYARD. Then they did use the American estimate.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Cushing says:

And splitting the difference, so as to arrive at the arbitrary sum of $10,905,000, as the capital which, with interest added, makes the $15,500,000 of the award.

Therefore when the honorable Senator from Delaware presents the idea as has always been presented here, that there were certain defi-nite, well-ascertained, and named claims, on which this great tribunal at Geneva sat as a board of arbitrators, and that they made out in the names of these persons the amount due to each and that we became the trustees of that amount and should be false to that trust if we do not pay it over, he is going directly in the face of the record. The fact is that in the opinion of one of the most eminent of our counsel at Geneva, shown also in the records of that tribunal, they took the claim as presented by the American Government and they took the estimate as presented by the British government, and they sent Mr. Stæmpfli up into a high mountain and he staid there six weeks, and he came back and said "I have gone through a computation of this kind;" when all he did was to split the difference. That was all there was about the award at Geneva. They gave it as a gross sum, and the counsel were careful not to commit themselves by one solitary word or deed as to what the United States should do with that gross amount when it came into possession of it; and it was awarded in a secret conference of that tribunal for the very express purpose of enabling the United States to cover such cases as in its discretion presented instances of severe and peculiar loss.

The position, then, of the henorable Senator from Delaware is precisely in antagonism to the statement of the counsel at Geneva and in antagonism with the facts as they are recorded in the proceedings of the tribunal at Geneva.

Mr. BAYARD. Here is something that is not in antagonism with them, and that is the American case, and here is the detailed statement of these losses, the names of the vessels, the description of their cargoes, the statement whether insured or not. Here was the bill of particulars placed before the tribunal, and I say that upon this bill of particulars they made their award, and without this information they could not have made it. As to this guesswork as to whether they split the difference between the amounts in rough of the British ascertainment and of the American claim, it is a matter purely of guesswork. purely of guesswork.

Mr. BLAINE. But the evidence is, if the honorable Senator will observe, they did not allow that bill.

Mr. BAYARD. It shows that they had these claims before them, and who put these claims there? The agents of the American Government put them there. What claims did they make? They made claims for vessels insured and vessels uninsured, and they gave the specific amounts that were so claimed, and it was upon the basis of these lists that money was awarded to the American Government.

Mr. BLAINE. But the honorable Senator from Delaware will not take the ground that the Geneva tribunal could know exactly what

Mr. BAYARD. No, the Geneva tribunal gave what they chose to give. They had the discretion imposed on them under the treaty to make the award of proper damages. They did so. The amount that they gave us as they believed was sufficient to cover this bill of losses presented to them.

Mr. BLAINE. But that bill of losses was $7,000,000 larger than they allowed.

Mr. BAYARD. Let me go a little further. They need not have made any ascertainment and award at all if they had not chosen; but the American claims were before them, and their award was based on the American claims. I do not mean to say that they gave no weight to counter-evidence, I do not mean to say they took every case presented to them as being strictly true. I know not what were the operations or the methods by which they reached the results they finally gained; but I do mean to say, and the Senator cannot get rid of it, and nobody ought to wish to get rid of it, that this award was made on the basis of the claims presented by the American Government, and among those claims are now contained the very class of American citizens that it is proposed to exclude from any benefit of the award.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. BLAINE. One moment. The honorable Senator from Delaware, then, abandons the idea, I understand, that the Geneva tribunal made their award upon an itemized account?

Mr. BAYARD. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAINE. In the itemized account submitted by the American commissioners or the American counsel they cut $7,000,000 off of it. Whose $7,000,000 were cut off? I want the honorable Senator to tell me, if this is a question of the right of individual claimants, whose were the $7,000,000 that were cut down? Who owned them? Were they excluded at Geneva? If they were, then, according to the honorable Senator from Delaware, we are estopped from granting them here. The bill of particulars as submitted by the American tribunal was not in the list accepted as the measure of damage that we were to have. If the position of the honorable Senator from Delaware is worth anything, it should have taken the American statement and given it, or if it cut it down state who was cut down—who was excluded and who was admitted. There is not from the beginning to the end of all the proceedings of the tribunal, (and I do not want to detain the honorable Senator from Ohio from taking the floor,) not one word that recognizes the individual claim of any solitary man in the United States. There is not anything in the award there that recognizes the claims of an insurance company or of insurance companies or of anything else or anybody else whatever. As I said this afternoon, the idea of utterly degrading that international conference and tribunal into a mere arbitration before which the United States employed counsel to represent the losses of marine insurance companies in the city of New York is the most extraordinary conclusion, it seems to me, that logic or false logic ever can lead a man to maintain.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me a moment?
Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say just a few words, and then I will yield. About thirty years ago an ingenious man living in the State of Vermont published a book in which he undertook to show that Sir Isaac Newton and all the philosophers of his generation were totally mistaken when they supposed there was any such thing as the law of gravitation. He said it was wholly a mistake. He denied the existence of any such law in toto, and wrote a book of about one hundred and fifty pages to prove that he was right and that they were all mistaken. That was considered a pretty bold denial; but it was not one particle more bold, if it was as bold, as the denial of the Senator from Maine that this award of fifteen and a half million dollars to us was based upon the claims, a portion of which he excludes from payment.

If the thing had not been demonstrated ad nauseam, I might in a rery few minutes demonstrate itso clearly that even the Senator from Maine would have to give it up. First, let me take notice of his closing remarks. He says that we claimed $17,000,000 in our bill of particulars and they awarded us but $11,000,000; and asks what became of the other $6,000,000? Whose claims amounting to $6,000,000 were rejected? How can you single them out? I answer the Senator that I do not know that one single one of them was rejected that came I do not know that one single one of them was rejected that came within the rules laid down by the Geneva tribunal. But there is one thing in rejecting a claim and there is another thing in giving the full amount of damages that the plaintiff claims. The Senator's argument amounts just to this: If some man injures my horse—and seeing my friend from Kentucky [Mr. Williams] in my face I naturally thought about a horse—if some man injures my horse and I bring an action of trespass against him and claim $100 damages and the jury award me but $60, then says the Senator from Maine, what part of the horse did they leave out? [Laughter.] You did not recover for injuries to the horse at all. You claimed $100 and they only gave you $50. No, Mr. President, that won't do.

Here is a very easy way of testing this matter to see upon what foundation the award was made. Was it made in respect of the war premiums? The Senator must say no, he finds it right in the record that they were excluded. Was it made in respect of the transference of our commerce, of the American marine, to the British flag? The Senator must answer no, for the record of the tribunal tells him so. Was it made on account of increased expenses of the war? The Senator must answer no, for the record tells him so, and our Government withdrew the claim. Was it made on account of the cost of pursuing the confederate cruisers? Again the Senator must answer no, because the record says that that claim was excluded, and the Government withdrew it. Was it made on account of the losses inflicted by the exculpated cruisers? Again the Senator must answer no, because the record in so many words says that Great Britain was not liable for those losses.

Then when you have thus estimated all these items that were in our bill of particulars, all these items that were stricken out by the judgment of the tribunal from our bill of particulars, what is there left? Nothing in the wide world but the direct injuries sustained by reason of the three inculpated cruisers and their tenders. Not one thing else is left. Therefore, the tribunal gave us fifteen and a half million dollars without anything upon which to award that sum, or that sum was awarded upon these claims which alone remain after the others have been eliminated.
